"GOOD OLD CRITICISM"

"A REVIVAL of good, old fashioned local dramatic criticism is what the motion picture business most needs," says Editor & Publisher, a newspaper trade paper which has been considerably exercised about screen matters lately. "The reading public is getting what the film producers and distributors hand out. Much of this material is unfit for publication in news columns on the ground of credibility alone. . . ."

Editor & Publisher, in that characteristically naive manner of its editors, thinks that the "Hays organization" ought to do something about the attitude of the industry toward the "commercialized press."

It would seem reasonably obvious that the newspapers which supply their readers with "what the film producers and distributors hand out" are in the business of running their own businesses. If Editor & Publisher does not like the way newspapers are operated, the movies are not to be held responsible.

That wistful phrase, "a revival of good old fashioned local dramatic criticism," is especially interesting. In those dear old days of course everything was on a lofty plane. The dramatic criticism in the days of "the road" was, any competent observer will recall, entirely detached, coldly impartial and scholarly. That is why the producers of that day did not send out press releases as the motion picture does now. They used nothing to influence the press except an army of agents ahead and with the show, carrying brief-cases laden with handout matter and ready to create copy on the spot. In those good old days of Klaw & Erlanger, Henry W. Savage, Charles Frohman, Inc., and the Shuberts the newspapers and their dramatic critics and columns were entirely free of all pressure, blandishments and influences, except for those exerted by the local house manager, his resident press agent, usually a favored reporter on one of the local papers, and such visiting gentry among the agents as Mr. Steve O'Grady, Mr. A. Toxen Worm, Mr. Ben Atwell, Mr. George Bowles, Mr. Sylvestre Sullivan and other equally unbiased literary and dramatic advisers of the press of the period. That was in the good old days.

Today there are more competent motion picture critics operating in the daily papers than there ever were dramatic critics in the best days of the stage. There were at the high tide of the stage maybe fifty capable dramatic critics on the dailies of the land. Today there are upwards of three hundred capably conducted newspaper motion picture departments employing from one to three trained writers. The percentage of "canned" handout material appearing in print concerning the motion picture is proportionately considerably lower than in the days when the amusement public was served with the road show and the young man with the brief case and expense account.

There is one important reason why the motion picture is currently getting a deal of attention in the columns of Editor & Publisher—that industrious journal wants attention commanding copy, and, it would seem, finds it more discreet to seek it among external enterprises than among the militant and touchy newspapers in its own field about which it could well purvey many a more exciting story.

NEW AUDIENCES

A MOST significant aspect of the new season of the motion picture is a definite consciousness of responsibility to and opportunity in sounder levels of taste and, in consequence, endeavors to bring to the box office more and more frequent customers from those strata.

Immediately in point is the campaign currently under way under the attentions of Mr. Howard Dietz in behalf of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures exemplified for September with national magazine advertising on "Anna Karenina." The copy is appearing in some thirty-seven media of top rank carrying total circulation reported at 34,000,000 copies. Also as a part of this general effort we are to remember a billboard campaign on "China Seas" in some 1,500 cities, and the coming sequel of posting in 1,900 towns for "Broadway Melody of 1936" and other pictures to follow.

The copy on "Anna Karenina" in the magazines presents interesting aspects. The star names are on top but the heaviest display is on the world famous and classic title, the whole tied slightly to the success of "David Copperfield." Meanwhile there is a smile in the discovery that in the pages before us we find that the author, Count Leo Tolstoi, gets mention in such publications as Colliers, The Saturday Evening Post and McCalls, but not in Liberty, Pictorial Review and Good Housekeeping. That probably represents a sound judgment of audiences.

THE press brings us tidings that the Department of Justice in Washington has on display, in a glass case, a pair of battered spectacles, a hat with a hole in it and other gore-stained relics of the extemporaneous execution of John Dillinger. Which reminds one of remarks about the glorification of criminals and the like. One also recalls that the Sioux used to flaunt the scalps of their foes and that the Fiji chieftains collected skulls. Museum displays by the Government are in the same category. All the public needs of Dillinger now is a record in a card file, no "showmanship."

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Polite Advertising

A widespread attempt of exhibition interests to revitalize the method and manner of merchandising motion pictures to the public by regular newspaper advertising space has been undertaken by some 130 theatres of the Fox Circuit in the midwest, where the new technique will supplant "colossal" ad traditions, make the circuit's ads distinctive, yet uniform and have them conform with the higher standard of product of today, while, at the same time, reducing newspaper advertising costs—an item in which every exhibitor is interested.

The new type of theatre newspaper advertising exploitation supplants the usual type of display space with a lively column of news events about the picture, the theatre and personality items. Tests have proved it successful, dollar-and-cent results showing normal business, or better, from reduced ad expenditures through the new method. The objectives, full results of the tests, construction of the machinery for working the plan, and the type of material to be treated therein, are explained on page 13.

Hollywood Goes Radio

Ignoring the previous resentment expressed by exhibitors against the promiscuous appearance of Hollywood stars on the radio, studios are returning to the air to exploit their pictures and people directly from the scene of picture-making. This is an about-face from the policy of many of the studios of prohibiting their players from frequent broadcasting appearances and is traceable to the success of Metro's nationwide broadcast of the premiere of "Broadway Melody of 1936," which is described on page 15 together with other related angles of the new trend.

Court Season Opens

The summer recess had hardly ended over Labor Day week end before the federal courts in several districts began to be employed with activity in anti-trust and other such cases, involving, for the most part, large distributors and affiliated circuits.

In St. Louis, Warners, RKO and Paramount filed denials to the government's charges of conspiracy against local independents; in Minneapolis distributors likewise took exception to charges of discrimination against small owners, while from Texas came word of four pending contests in federal courts between competitive operators. These new developments in the courts are reported on page 18.

The Fox War

Persistent in defeat, attorneys for the William Fox interests, as represented by Mrs. Eva Fox and the All-Continent Corporation, said this week they were continuing their attack on the Twentieth Century-Fox Film merger in the New York supreme court with an application to be filed for permission to examine officers of the merging interests before trial. Having failed to prevent the merger, they now aim to compel its dissolution.

Meanwhile Fox theatre companies are winding up final stages of reorganization, with Fox Metropolitan transferring assets to Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., in New York, and Fox Coast due to be discharged from bankruptcy in Los Angeles on September 18. See page 33.

Canadian Bonuses

Evidences of a marked increase in grosses and the success of the bonus plan gave occasion for announcement at the Toronto convention of Famous-Players Canadian Corporation that the 200 circuit managers will receive, as their share of improved business, cash bonuses totaling more than $25,000.

N. L. Nathanson, enthusiastic over the practical value of the idea, said it will be continued, supplementing a group insurance arrangement whereby the company pays the premiums on a policy of $5,000 given each manager. The story is on page 41.

New Producers

The motion picture industry this week was enriched by six new financing and producing organizations, four promising for this year a total of 49 feature films.

First International Pictures, Inc., was formed by Pathe as a holding company for its producing and distributing activities here and abroad, principally First Division Exchanges. Others newly formed are Pickford-Lasky Production, Inc., bringing together two pioneers; American International Pictures Corporation and the affiliated American International Distributing Corporation, headed by Ralph G. Fear and Max J. Weisfeldt; Academy Pictures, organized by Victor and Edward Halperin; Regal Productions, which announces eight color films, and the New Film Alliance, which aims to parallel the "new theatre" movement. The programs, executive personnel and other details of the new companies will be found on page 37.

G-B Gets H & G

Now that announcement has been made in London of the formation of Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, Ltd., to acquire the three Hyams (H & G) deluxe first-runs, film people are wondering why Gaumont-British did not go about it in that fashion half a year ago.

At that time, word from G-B that it had acquired interests in H & G Kinemas and Union Cinemas and that A. W. Jarrett would be added to the boards of these companies to book the theatres in conjunction with the G-B circuit brought forth loud protest from the Kinematograph Renters' Society.

The story of this situation and other developments in the British field is told on page 48 by Bruce Allan, the HERALD's London correspondent.

Moss Comes Back

B. S. Moss, onetime power in Broadway showdom, scored twice in his return to exhibition when over the weekend he and his associates took leases on two sites in the theatre district, both for motion picture theatres primarily, but so built so as to be able to accommodate legitimate productions and radio broadcasts as well.

One spot is the theatre in the structure rising on the site of the onetime Criterion theatre at Broadway and 44th and 45th streets. The other is the old Broadway theatre at 53d street.

The theatre interiors are to be constructed like a bell cut in half, in the interest of approximating perfect sound reproduction as closely as possible. The story is on page 34.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

The Labor Front

All was quiet on the theatre-labor front this past Labor Day, except in New York where independent owners filed seven suits, said to be of an unprecedented nature, against the IATSE operators' union for damages allegedly sustained by the loss of patronage from mass picketing during the present controversy over wages.

Picketing of no great consequence was going on in Philadelphia and Hollywood, while unions and exhibitors continued under new and amicable agreements in Cleveland, Detroit, Kansas City and Pittsburgh.

Labor Day climaxes annual negotiations for new wage-and-hour agreements. The situation this year is detailed on page 36.

Code Puzzle

The Voluntary Industry Committee, attempting since last June to determine a legal basis for a voluntary code, has been unable to define a procedure that would circumvent the legal prohibitions interposing a formidable obstacle to any form of self-government. J. Robert Rubin, who heads the committee, said the industry's lawyers have found the assignment "very difficult."

He pointed out that any plan discussed has involved the element of combination.

The Council on Trade Agreements reported, however, that the film industry is one of 49 engaged in drafting voluntary agreements.

The story is on page 38.

Music Tax Fight

The fight of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to hold its position in its defense against attacks of exhibitors, and other license fee payers, proceeded this week along two fronts, as follows:

A test of the constitutionality of state legislation imposing heavy taxes on music licensing will be undertaken in the form of a court action attacking the constitutionality of Georgia's law imposing a tax of $1,000 per county on music licensing agencies. Although similar laws have been enacted in Louisiana, Mississippi and Wisconsin, no efforts to enforce them by attempts to collect the taxes specified have been made except in Georgia. The test in that state is expected to have a bearing on the enforceability of the legislation elsewhere through establishing a precedent in the event of the necessity of appeals to the United States supreme court.

The Georgia action will be a defense of the refusal of the Society branch operating in that state to pay the tax imposed. Suits involving the test already have been filed and may be brought to trial as early as next week. The action is regarded as the organization's first defensive move in the legislative and court campaigns which are being waged against the society on a national front by the exhibitors, radio and hotel interests.

In Seattle there appears to be a definite movement to stamp out the Society's activities in the state with the filing of suits against it by two radio stations for $19,372 paid by the stations for the rights to play certain music. It is claimed the fees were exorbitant.

Looking Up

Pre-depression grosses over the Labor Day weekend in New York and elsewhere, elevated by improved quality of attractions and favorable weather conditions, indicated a bright season ahead for theatre business, circuit officials reported as they scanned box office reports this week. Radio City Music Hall was in the lead in New York, with an intake of $130,000 indicated for the first week of "Top Hat," bettering the record by some $20,000, and most Broadway houses recorded comparative gains. The upturn was reflected in the amusement bond market. See page 16.

New Restrictions

American representatives of the industry in Paris have been informed that the French government is preparing to issue a new decree imposing further and almost prohibitive restrictions on importation into France of American films, although negotiations for a new Franco-American trade treaty were begun only recently.

This reported move, if it is carried out to completion by the French government, would place the entire industry in France, both domestic companies and those from foreign counties, including the United States, directly under government control. It would be the most radical of the several vigorous actions of the French government in recent years.

According to reports in the Paris press, the government plans to establish a central agency for foreign films to collect rentals from exhibitors to pay the distributors, but only after deducting its own expenses and possibly other sums to finance French production. The distributors, if the plan is carried out, would merely have the status of brokers. It is also planned to levy additional taxes to those now in force and also additional import quotas, according to the reports.

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., however, has had no official notification of any new taxes or quota changes from the French government, but pointed out that no change could be made in the present French quota law since that decree will not expire for another year.

Making Progress

That the British and French industries are making definite progress and the gains noted this year over 1934 are pronounced was reported by Dr. A. H. Giannini, chairman of the executive committee of the Bank of America, and well known motion picture financier on his return from a five weeks' trip abroad on the Normandie Monday. After a week visiting and discussing trade problems with motion picture executives in New York, Dr. Giannini will return to his bank in Los Angeles.

Product in England and in France is improving, Dr. Giannini observed. In his opinion producers of both nations have considerable to learn in point of tempo and continuity, but the strides made this year over last are concrete and self-evident.

Dr. Giannini further believes that there is something fundamentally wrong in the British film structure. "The industry there will not be completely sound until the bankers evidence enough direct interest in the business to eliminate the middleman in financing and do it directly. The difficulty insofar as the English banker is concerned continues to be his lack of sufficient confidence in his own country's film industry."

RCA Suspects

RCA apparently has no intention of covering up the existence of an investigation which it is conducting in Hollywood into Erpi's more extensive licensing relations with the large studios, an investigation that has admittedly been launched for the purpose of determining whether the Erpi recording contracts now in force with all of the large studios, except RKO and Republic, contain any restrictive clauses which would not enable RCA to compete with Erpi in obtaining new recording business.

The story of the threatening fight between these two large "electrics," a story having possibilities of much interest to the industry at large, appears on page 17.

Reds in Mail?

Undermining activities among those inciting to boycott against theatres showing newsreels and other films disliked by the Reds are receiving the attention of the U. S. Department of Justice, with special reference to the threats sent through the mails to managers and film companies.

Hearst film interests believe the starch has been taken out of the crusade by the sentencing of numerous pickets, but the American League Against War and Fascism says it is being continued and extended. The Reds were urging this week to demonstrations inside theatres.

The story is found on page 28.

NEW TECHNIQUE SUPPLANTS 'COLOSSAL' AD TRADITIONS

Fox's 130 Theatres in Midwest to Revitalize Newspaper Advertising to Make Circuit Ads Distinctive, Yet Uniform

Circuit Aims to Reduce Costs of Advertising While Making It Conform to New High Standard of Its Productions

Revitalization of motion picture merchandising as it relates to newspaper advertising has been undertaken by the entire Fox Midwest Theatres circuit by the employment of a new technique in copy and layout, with the following chief objectives in view:

1. To escape from the "colossal" description traditions of motion picture promotion.

2. To make circuit advertising distinctive, yet uniform, making it as easily recognizable in the daily newspaper as the weather report.

3. To create a dependable source of information about motion pictures.

4. To reduce newspaper advertising costs.

5. To make advertising conform with the higher standard of pictures.

The new type of paid newspaper exploitation takes the form of "The Screen Reporter," a daily chatter column, instead of display space, incorporating the best features of the "colyum," these being written in an intimate, chatty and informal style to insure constant reader interest. At the top are the names of pictures and theatres, and then, in plain language, sparing of adjectives, comments on motion picture personalities, pictures—coming and showing, and so on. It embodies quotations of what patrons say about pictures, replies to criticisms that turns them to advantage, if possible, injects a news angle by referring on occasion to some local event or personality—in a word making a daily newspaper feature out of advertising space. Change of tempo is obtained with four or five different type faces, cuts and the like.

Tests Bring Results

That the five chief objectives can be reached was proved in tests conducted by Fox Midwest in Wichita and Hutchinson, Kan., and the plan now is being adopted, with a few exceptions, by the entire Midwest circuit's 130 theatres. Elmer C. Rhoden, division manager, is originator of the idea.

The circuit, thereby, adopts a policy of using newspaper promotion that is on the level with improved motion pictures and their treatment. Its officials venture the prediction that it may mean a revolution in theatre advertising. They are proceeding on the premise that pictures have developed a deeper culture and producers a keener intelligence in producing them; that producers have gotten away from the hokum that film audiences have the mentality of 12-year-olds, and, consequently, exhibitors must improve their promotional procedure accordingly.

As D. S. Lawler, divisional advertising manager, pointed out, "Pictures now attract audiences that heretofore have not attended. Producers took it for granted that they would get the usual 40 per cent that always go to theatres, and turned their attention to creating pictures appealing to the 60 per cent. Hence, managers must expend effort in making film advertising intended for public consumption as good as the pictures produced. It is essential that they use an intelligent and somewhat cultural approach to patrons—not horse-and-buggy methods—to sell the product. And the most interesting and significant reaction is that theatre managers appear to be sincere in their belief that this should be done."

Of importance is the objective of Fox Midwest to gross $500,000 in admissions in 17 weeks.

Fox Midwest officials believe that "The Screen Reporter" title for their theatres' advertising columns connotes an individual personality to the public, someone patrons can telephone to, thank for tickets, catch in error.

They call it the first real attempt at uniform circuit advertising without stifling originality. There does not appear to be any reason why other circuits and individual owners cannot adopt the idea, although probably they cannot use "The Screen Reporter" title inasmuch as Fox Midwest has applied for a copyright.

"Out of our dissatisfaction with the 'colossal' traditions of motion picture advertising and a determination to place our selling methods on a par with the class of productions we are now showing on our screens, has come an experiment in newspaper advertising which is decidedly original and revolutionary in its application to the theatre," said Division Manager Rhoden in introducing "The Screen Reporter" to his managers. "We are, to a large extent, still depending on horse-and-buggy advertising methods to sell what, in comparison to that of the past, is a Rolls Royce product.

"Last year, at the beginning of the new season, we instituted an advertising campaign which violated tradition. We did it because we had a new type of motion picture to sell, a better, cleaner, more intelligent type of motion picture than the industry had ever before produced.

"Our campaign was modest, dignified, truthful; and, as it turned out, surprisingly effective at the box office. We had executed a complete about-face from the 'Back-to-Barnum' movement of the year before, because our advertising had to be in keeping with our product.

"Pictures maintained a higher level, but our sales methods eventually slipped back into the old hackneyed style. We kept our advertising clean, but it soon lost distinction.

"In that fault lay the problem which this season we have sought to solve: To devise a style of newspaper advertising that is so distinctive and will remain so distinctive that it will be identified with Fox Midwest Theatres no matter in what newspaper it appears.

"The idea itself is all right, even the form in which it is expressed. We have proved its effectiveness during the last two months in two of our most important situations. The real problem lies in its widespread application, and this depends almost entirely upon the intelligence, even cleverness, of man-power."

Mr. Rhoden believes the new plan offers managers an opportunity for individuality and self-expression they never before have had.

"First argument in favor of the new plan is economy," he said, "having by actual proof reduced advertising expenditures in the two test towns by two per cent, with grosses unaffected; if anything, helped.

"Beyond that very important factor, however, is that the plan follows an earnest desire to 'debunk' methods of selling programs. Recently I have been subjecting advertising to close diagnosis and my observations have led to the conclusions that we, along with every other theatre operator in the country, haven't progressed much from the Dark Ages of Ten-Twenty-Thirty days. We have failed to keep pace with our product, or to progress with the intelligence of our patrons. Dissemination of information about motion pictures is so widespread that the majority of our patrons know all about pictures long before we show them, or in many instances before they are even completed in the studios. We can't bunk the public any more. The 'colossal,' 'amazing,' 'thrilling' lines of sales talk is ineffective and passé.

Demands Plain Facts

"We must stick to plain facts, and in modest, truthful fashion tell our patrons what we have for them to see. After all, our merchandise comprises three factors—stars, stories and production values. Box office appeal lies in one or in a combination of two or more of these elements. Exaggeration will not make these factors any more evident than plain statement. If anything, understatement will be more effective than over-statement, because we can never be accused of over-selling a program, and we, therefore, can maintain and enjoy the public's confidence in our advertising.

"Already, through better pictures, we have brought a lot of people back to our theatres. We promised this at the beginning of the season just ended, and because the producers kept faith with us, we were able to keep faith with our patrons. Announcements of new product for this season indicate that any change will only be toward greater improvement.

"In proposing this new plan of newspaper advertising it is realized that it is going to be a task for a showman to exercise restraint. It goes contrary to his training; but we are convinced it is the one factor which will serve us most effectively in holding old patrons and making new ones.

"It is my firm conviction that if you conform to the plan and do your best to make it a cooperative effort, it will not only be more effective at the box office, but will reduce advertising costs appreciably and serve further to increase public confidence in the screen and in our theatres."

What the Tests Showed

H. E. Jameyson, district manager at Wichita, gave the plan its first test in Wichita and Hutchinson theatres. He made the change from old style display to column gradually in Wichita, using column against display and combinations of both. Daily ads followed the "Reporter" style. Later the column was extended to include opening days, a display effect being achieved by the use of star or character cuts, with the bulk of the space devoted to plain type.

Results included a substantial reduction in newspaper expenditures by Wichita and Hutchinson theatres while business remained normal, and the public began to comment about the column. "Most people regarded it as a newspaper feature rather than a departure in advertising," he said, "and failed to note that Fox theatres were not using display advertising to announce programs."

In a direct test of display-versus-column advertising, the Miller theatre used display on Grace Moore's "Love Me Forever," flanked by usual routine mediums and considerable out-of-ordinary promotion. The Orpheum used straight "Screen Reporter" exploitation on the reissue of "The Virginian," which played to more persons on the opening day in a hot theatre than "Love Me Forever" showed to in a refrigerated house, indicating that many people wanted to see "The Virginian," but also that if they hadn't been reading "The Screen Reporter" they wouldn't have known it was in town. Display contributed nothing to the campaign on the Grace Moore picture.

Campaign in Column

A campaign on "Bride of Frankenstein," was developed entirely through "The Screen Reporter." Two small items offering $5 to the woman who would sit alone through a midnight screening of the picture brought 480 replies by telephone. Obviously, hundreds of others read the items. (The originator of the "gag"—an eastern theatre—used 20 inches or more of display space over a period of four or five days. "The Screen Reporter" got results with one inch of eight-point type.) The picture, no box-office "champion," showed a week with a little under average gross.

On "Becky Sharp" in the same theatre three weeks later, other advertising mediums were supported by two 1,200-line display ads. "Becky" grossed $230 less than "Bride of Frankenstein," and the total advertising cost was practically double.

"Casual" Treatment Succeeds

The test period revealed that programs handled in a casual manner often out-grossed those to which a lot of attention was given. For example, "Alibi Ike" was treated in a flippant style, with a total of about six inches of space in two layouts which devoted the bulk of attention to "Ginger" and "Nit Wits." "Alibi Ike" played to more persons than either of the other two on the opening day. "Stranded" grossed more than "In Caliente" although handled simultaneously, with the big play going to the latter. The program picture "College Scandal" did better than average week-end business, with a total of three inches of space in "The Screen Reporter," whereas from 10 to 16 inches of ordinary display space was customarily used in the test theatre.

"Apparently people sense the quality of pictures before they are issued, have advance information that theatre management fails to consider, or both, because the public almost infallibly chooses the picture which is the best entertainment, whatever is said about it," Fox officials said.

"The Screen Reporter adds to this fund of advance information and at the same time economizes," they believe.

The Hutchinson Test

In Hutchinson, the change from old-style display to new-style column was direct. Roy Burford, manager, found that "in the three weeks we have been using 'The Screen Reporter' we have practically cut our newspaper bill in half, and business has held up just as well as before."

"The most complimentary remark that I have heard was from two people, who, when asked if they had been reading our new style of advertising for the last two weeks, said, 'No, but we have been reading "The Screen Reporter" every day.'

"All three Hutchinson managers and myself carry note books just like newspaper reporters and when we get an idea for a 'Reporter' squib or a paragraph, we jot it down. We have also given the other employees a chance to contribute. For the best article or idea presented each week, we give that employee one day off with pay." Mr. Burford has his managers write the copy and take turns editing "The Reporter," which injects a spirit of competition among the co-workers.

"With the exception of special occasions I do not think it is necessary to run any display ads in the newspapers," said Edd J. Haas, city manager of Fox Wichita Theatres, who frankly questioned the idea when it first was broached.

Objectives and Results

While economy was not a lone objective of the new form of advertising, it was a result. Daily space is increased but opening day advertising is correspondingly reduced.

In towns with one theatre a reduction in space is not expected by Fox, but managers will revise the use of space so that the theatre uses about the same amount daily. Because of the buildup in "The Reporter," change days do not need additional space.

Opportunity for constant reference to coming attractions is one of the "Reporter's" chief advantages. The manager can build up pictures, days, even weeks, in advance, through use of short three- or four-line items that would require many inches of display for the same results.

"Curly Top" was built up in this manner to the largest gross ever done on a Shirley Temple picture in Wichita, beginning with a two-line item two weeks before showing. While success of a Shirley Temple picture is usually assured anyway, results were achieved with an expenditure for newspaper space of just a trifle more than one per cent of the gross and without outside promotion.

With "hard-to-sell" pictures known to have definite entertainment value, but lacking box office appeal—the manager can, through "The Screen Reporter," more effectively than any other way, explain away a bad title, build up interest in a new star, or recall past performances of established personalities, it was pointed out.

Keeping the theatre sold to the public as a service institution can be done regularly through "The Reporter" by touching on the improvement in films, quoting local or national authorities, using general comments that tend to build public confidence in the screen as an entertainment medium. For instance, quotes from prominent educators, club women, and others mean a lot to that portion of the greater audience who, until the past season, have regarded the movies askance.

A newspaper critic who saw an exclusive showing of "The Scoundrel" was so impressed he published an "Open Letter" to H. E. Jameyson, describing him as "Wichita's Public Enemy, No. 1," if he didn't bring "The Scoundrel" back for a regular showing.

Mr. Jameyson capitalized on the comment by replying to the critic in "The Screen Reporter." The picture was brought back and beat the average three-day gross at the Orpheum by $150.

To obtain both uniformity and liveliness in "The Reporter" and to prevent "sagging," standard procedure is outlined for the managers to follow.

Style is confined to four or five different type faces. Display effect is created by indenting a paragraph now and then or having it set in 10-point type. Illustrations, half or full column, are used daily in the column, with larger illustrations in two-column or three-column layouts. Literary style is informal, truthful, simple, and direct, while mood is governed by the picture—serious and thoughtful, flippant and funny, etc.

Institutional copy on the particular theatre and comment helpful to films in general is "plugged" consistently. Buildups on pictures are started well in advance of showing.

"The Reporter" will seek to avoid trick display effects, "big words," too much direct sales talk, hackneyed adjectives, anything at which offense could be taken in comments on local persons, trying to put over a poor picture by untruthful statement rather than by finding its good points and emphasizing those, a cut in the column just because one seems to be needed for decoration rather than one that means something, fooling patrons.

Weekly Bulletin of Paragraphs

The division advertising office provides a weekly bulletin of paragraphs for use in "The Reporter" at the manager's discretion—general items about movies, institutional "plugs," preshowing campaigns, reviews and comments from critics, studio gossip, "inside stuff" from trade papers, and such things as will prevent the column becoming dull.

Each district manager will devote a page of his own weekly bulletin to "Screen Reporter" paragraphs and suggestions. Each manager will send a clipping file of his column each week to the division advertising office, where items will be selected for redistribution to other managers.

Fifty dollars in prizes is being offered for the best columns produced from September through December, divided each month into $25, first; $15, second; $10, third.

In the press book, a 16-page affair, explaining the basic idea and method of procedure, Fox Midwest shows a 10-inch "Screen Reporter" column advertising attractions at five Wichita theatres, taking only three inches (one column), while the remaining seven inches give news items, movie "flashes," chatter and such. "Try to get all of that in a 10-inch one column display ad for five theatres!" they challenged.

Other Advertising Plans

A new season announcement in tabloid form carries new product and introduces the new form of advertising. It is printed in the theatre's own newspaper shop and distributed as an "insert" in a regular edition of the paper. The circuit plans to make it a quarterly, rather than an annual, exploitation item. Additional copies are used as heralds. Portions of the announcement are prepared by local managers with local copy.

A leaflet, one of the most inexpensive and effective mediums used last season by the circuit, is printed without a theatre signature so it can be distributed in schools and to women's clubs, church societies and other interested groups without being considered "advertising." The leaflet contains a selected list of attractions to attract critical patrons and those interested in the "better films" movement. The circuit used 100,000 last season.

Short trailers introduce "The Screen Reporter," and will be run for a week or so until the column becomes established as a newspaper feature.

HOLLYWOOD BACK ON THE AIR TO EXPLOIT PICTURES AND PLAYERS

Broadcast of "Broadway Melody" Preview Reflects Studios' New Policy of Using Radio as Ally Instead of Fighting It

Hollywood is going back to the air as a medium for exploiting its pictures and personalities, regardless of any resentment of exhibitors toward the so-called "unfair" competitive aspects. This is an about-face from the policy of several studios of prohibiting their players from appearing on broadcast hookups.

Exhibitors expressed themselves last season in no uncertain terms on the subject, charging stars and producers who were encouraging radio-film broadcasting hookups with urging the public to sit at home to listen in, to the detriment of box offices. They turned a deaf ear to the defense that these air performances built up personalities for the box office.

And now, since the recent broadcast of the Hollywood preview of "The Broadway Melody of 1936" (MGM), the interest manifested by the large studios indicates a much wider desire in Hollywood to use radio rather than to fight it by forbidding stars from making radio appearances.

However, some producers are expected to encourage the development of the present limited practice of compelling stars to split with them any fees collected for appearing on sponsored broadcasts. Some studios are known to have already demanded a split, thereby acknowledging their resignation to the inevitability of their players taking to the air on occasion for extra remuneration.

Last year, when various studios were enacting bans against commercial appearances, the producers were reflecting the opinions of exhibitors that the stars' radio performances weakened their box office power and, besides, kept patrons at home.

The "Broadway Melody" broadcast is regarded in Hollywood as a formal acknowledgment of the new attitude toward the air. Following this broadcast, Warners and Fox both called National Broadcasting Company officials for conferences on similar broadcasts on product. These, however, do not necessarily work in with progroms sponsored by national advertisers, but are intended, principally, to be broadcast alone as exploitation for a picture that has possibilities for wide box office development.

This is particularly interesting in the case of Fox where the ban on radio appearances of stars has been stringent for years, an attitude which has been completely changed under the new Twentieth Century-Fox regime headed by Darryl Zanuck.

Paramount on September 14 will give a preview broadcast of "Big Broadcast of 1936," which Lucky Strike will sponsor, from Hollywood, over NBC.

For the broadcast of the "Broadway Melody" preview, MGM paid wire charges and the orchestra, supplied stars and met all incidental charges, with NBC contributing the time.

Following the broadcast, Louis B. Mayer, Metro's studio general at Culver City, declared publicly on the hookup that "there is an inseparable and common bond between radio and motion pictures," adding the opinion that they "serve an inseparable and common cause, to be able to bring wholesome and worthwhile entertainment to the world."

John Swallow, NBC program director in Hollywood, feels that the recent great interest in musical films is directly traceable to song "plugs" on the air. And now the producers, too, indicate agreement that the air is the biggest exploitation bet for musicals.

In one week in August, Metro obtained tieups for its "Broadway Melody" music with 20 national radio advertisers and nonsponsored programs: Studebaker, "Theatre Premier," Anchorage, "Rhythm Boys," "Today's Winners," Claire Carroll, Orville Knapp, Ranny Weeks, Maxwell House, Valencia Theatre (Loew's, Jamaica, L. I.), Con Maffie, Ted Meyer, Johnny Hamp, Jan Savitt, Carlton and Shaw, Leo Weber, Arrowhead Inn (New York), and others.

Studio Permission Required

The Hollywood players' standard basic contract provides that a player must gain permission from his studio before signing a broadcasting contract.

While actually, this clause does not give the studio any claim on a player's revenue from radio, in one case, at least, it has been used by a studio for profit other than publicity. M-G-M refused to give Jimmy Durante permission to sign with a sponsor until he had split with the studio.

Warners own their own Hollywood radio station, and while permission to broadcast is necessary, they encourage players to go on the air. Dick Powell does not split his check for his spot as master of ceremonies for the "Hollywood Hotel" hour, although Warners make a habit of requesting that their singers plug songs from current or coming Warner pictures.

Welcomes Radio Appearances

Universal now welcomes radio appearances for its individuals, and about 60 per cent of its contracts carry a clause obligating players to go on the air on demand and without remuneration for exploitation purposes.

Twentieth Century-Fox has exercised the permission clause in Shirley Temple's contract, and refused to allow her to accept offers as high as $3,500 for half an hour a week tendered by a shoe company and a breakfast food manufacturer. This does not indicate a studio-wide policy, however. John Boles, Fred Allen, Rubinoff, Nino Martini and Lawrence Tibbett all insist on controlling their own radio contracts independent of the studio.

RKO-Radio started "Hollywood-on-the-Air" programs for the purpose of interesting picture people in radio. It was a pet idea of M. H. Aylesworth, president both of RKO and NBC. At the time of its start, there was an attempt made to include clauses in contracts by which the player agreed to at least one gratis air appearance on the program. But it was unusual how quickly people who had other plans got sick, so that policy was abandoned. "Hollywood-on-the-Air" was suspended, Mr. Aylesworth feeling that it had served its purpose.

RKO-Radio has an interesting arrangement with Irving Berlin. He sells picture rights to his songs. When they are published by the Berlin Publishing Company, the studio gets a split. Then, when they go to ASCAP, the studio has no further claim, and Mr. Berlin draws the split due him under his ASCAP rating.

In certain Hollywood studios, exploitation and publicity departments are going out after appearances of their players on air interviews, but usually the air reporters are offered minor players or featured names rather than stars.

Most studios give in with apparent good grace to "bludgeoning" their players to show up for such spots as the Louella Parsons "Hollywood Hotel" hour, the Jimmy Fidler national broadcast of chatter, Edwin Schallert's local half hour interviews under auspices of the Los Angeles Times of which he is dramatic critic. In most cases, studios and players feel that they do not dare refuse requests for gratis appearances to these people who control such valuable news outlets, though there is a good deal of undercover resentment over the matter, and it is generally felt that, unless a specific picture is plugged, the whole business does little for the player.

On the other hand, a carefully constructed program is welcomed by both studio and players. Mary Boland used an offer made last year by the Hall of Fame to get a considerable tilt in her Paramount contract.

Lucky Strike Offers Spot

It is understood that Lucky Strike is making offers to pay wire charges and all incidental expenses, provided a studio supplies name talent, for preview broadcasts similar to that of "The Broadway Melody of 1936."

While studios look with longing eyes for an opportunity to get a split on contract players' air revenue, it is not expected that there will be a concerted move in that direction, for immediately such a move would be followed by sponsors of air personalities who would demand a split in film profits. Players have seen this coming, and are now refusing to sign contracts giving studios control over air contracts, beyond that elastic "permission to appear" clause.

LABOR DAY GROSSES UP 5 TO 40 PER CENT

Music Hall Makes Striking Showing; Other New York First-Runs Report Big Increases

Presaging, in the opinion of circuit executives in New York, a real upturn in theatre business for the rest of the year, the 1935-36 theatre season was inaugurated over Labor Day with record-breaking grosses on Broadway which also touched pre-depression levels in many sections of the country.

While national circuits reported holiday grosses up by between five and 40 per cent as compared with the Labor Day income last year, and although new records were set in a number of key cities, notably in New York, box office showings on a national average were not as good as those of the pre-depression era, due to lower admission prices prevailing, according to Dow Jones, financial reporting service. The net, however, will equal prosperity figures for comparable weekends because of lower operating costs, said circuit heads.

Perfect theatre weather, chilly with threatening rain keeping hundreds of thousands from joining the usual holiday exodus from the city, the influx of visitors for the extended weekend and the lure of better-than-average attractions all combined to send grosses upward at Broadway houses. Radio City Music Hall made the most striking showing in New York, where Radio's "Top Hat," in the five days ending Monday night, drew slightly under $100,000, with an intake for the week indicated at more than $130,000, bettering the present record by about $20,000.

Others Show Big Increases

Breaking attendance records, Universal's "Diamond Jim," at the Roxy, is being held a third week and may go a fourth. The Loew circuit reported weekend business in New York up 40 per cent over a year ago and officials predicted a $65,000 to $75,000 gross for Metro's "Anna Karenina" at the Capitol. A $40,000 week for Warners' "Page Miss Glory" at the Strand was predicted by company officials. The Paramount, with "Two for Tonight," Paramount, played to capacity. "Call of the Wild," United Artists-20th Century, at the Rivoli chalked up a 30 per cent increase.

Bonds Make Gains

Circuit officials reported that, nationally, grosses were running well ahead of last year's, and, typically, the Skouras office tabulation for Fox theatres showed that Labor Day business exceeded figures of the last two or three years. Excellent business was the rule at first-runs in Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburgh, Washington, Cincinnati and Los Angeles, according to circuit reports.

Reflection of this improvement was provided especially in the fact that amusement company bonds in most cases registered gains, ranging from a rise of three points in Paramount Publix bonds to a gain of 6½ points made by Radio Keith Orpheum debentures.

In the opinion of film company executives, the improved quality of most of the current releases combined with slightly increased public buying power is expected to swell box office income the remainder of this season.

Sees Front Pages Supplying Material

Producers will be looking more and more to the front pages of the daily newspapers for their subject matter because it is there they find what audiences are sincerely interested in, said Frank Tuttle, while vacationing in New York last week from Hollywood. "In the next few years, and probably long before, pictures will begin to be produced with more of a lesson and be in more vital and closer contact with people as a whole."

To the suggestion of M. A. Lightman that exhibitors would do well to zone their territories according to the customers and show only such pictures as would fit these sections, Mr. Tuttle expressed the opinion that directors and producers could turn out better work if they aimed at only one class of audience.

Mr. Tuttle is under contract to Paramount and just finished Bing Crosby's latest, "Two for Tonight." His contract comes up for renewal in November. He said he had been approached by Crosby and Emanuel Cohen to direct the picture they will make starring the radio singer.

Korda to Do 12 More Under U.A. Arrangement

Before leaving here for the coast, for conferences at the United Artists studios, Alexander Korda revealed that he had 12 more pictures to deliver under his current agreement with United Artists. Five of these will be Korda Productions and presumably will be sold through the UA organization in this country. The other seven, which may or may not be shown in this country, will be sold by the company in England.

Four of his forthcoming pictures are "The King of the Jews," in Technicolor; "100 Years to Come," "The Man Who Could Work Miracles" and "Lion Dies in Naples."

The producer was accompanied west by Al Lichtman, president of United Artists; Sir Connop Guthrie, board member of London Films; Maurice Silverstone, chairman of United Artists, Ltd., and Stephen Pallow, general manager of London Films.

Studio Ban on Flying Is Not Contemplated

While most producers have had a standing rule for some months prohibiting players from flying during production, executives in Hollywood are not contemplating changes in the rule whereby talent would be prohibited at all times from commuting by air, according to a survey of the studios. Most companies require contract players to obtain special permission to fly.

"Sweepstakes" Ruled Legal

The first substantial victory of independent owners in New York against the police department's citywide chance game fight was won Tuesday when the lower Magistrate's Court, David Malbin's division, ruled that "Sweepstakes" conducted by theatres are legal whenever the chances are distributed without charge. The defendant was Albert L. Green's Oceana theatre, Brooklyn, the complainant a police officer.

Magistrate Malbin expressed the opinion that cases on the subject "demand a parting with a valuable consideration as a constituent and essential element because only therein lies the danger of a lottery." "Sweepstakes" require no such "consideration," he continued.

New York's magistrates' courts have on their calendars dozens of chance game cases, on "Lucky Nights," "Bank Nights," "Screeno" and such. Tests in Special Sessions, being conducted by the Independent Theatre Owners Association, are due for trial September 13th or thereabouts.

A Brooklyn magistrate last week ruled "Lucky" legal, on the grounds that "it cannot be a crime gratuitously" to distribute prizes according to a plan of chance.

Decisions on New England test cases are awaited in federal courts at Boston and in New Hampshire. Attorneys-General acted in both instances for the government. Despite this, ten of 19 Bridgeport, Conn. theatres inaugurated the plan.

In Chicago, the practice was still growing, B. and K.'s Southtown, a neighborhood run, even selling standing room for a $1,200 drawing. Some 125 police were required to handle the ticket buyers, who were on line, extending into adjacent auto parking lots, three hours ahead of the drawing. Crowds in that city have ranged as high as 20,000 at a single "Bank Night" drawing, and the plan now is being adopted two nights, instead of one as prescribed in the franchise. There is an additional fee, however.

Charging that fraternal organizations and civic groups use the same game, the managements of Cincinnati's Andalus, St. Bernard, and Woodlawn, Cheviot, both suburban houses, refused to comply with a sheriff's order that they discontinue "Screeno."

Denver's giveaway war was nearing a climax as the Harry Huffman circuit extended its prize list from a free Ford each Tuesday night, to the awarding of a house and lot every Thursday night. The "Lucky Seven" theatres, in competition, are awarding free Plymouths weekly and have also started "Bank Nights."

The U. S. Attorney General in Iowa ordered "Bank Nights" discontinued throughout the state. County attorneys and local sheriffs were instructed to act against future violators.

Roy Headrich, of Lincoln's Lyric theatre, Nebraska, was fined $50 for practicing "Bank Night," in the first test in that state.

Special Group Sessions To Discuss Allied Action

Sidney Samuelson, president of Allied of New Jersey, soon will call a number of special committee meetings to discuss business taken up at the recent Allied convention in Atlantic City. Because of these special meetings, the regular meeting of the organization has been cancelled.

Allied of Michigan will hold its annual convention in Detroit this year, President H. M. Richey announced. It is expected the gathering will take place some time next month.

RCA STUDIES COURSE OF ATTACK ON ERPI'S EXTENSIVE LICENSING SYSTEM

Seeks to Determine Whether There Are Restrictive Clauses in Erpi Contracts Barring Competition on Recording

The management of the Radio Corporation of America, of which David Sarnoff is president, will determine shortly the course of action to be pursued in extending the company's line of attack against Electrical Research Products, a Telephone Company affiliate, over Erpi's virtual control of the motion picture sound recording licensing system in Hollywood. The cause and possible outcome of the attack are the subjects of no little speculation in the industry.

That RCA for a long time has been disturbed over inability to gain any ground of consequence in getting additional licenses since the first permit was issued to its own RKO affiliate, at the beginning of sound, became evident some weeks ago when the corporation undertook a survey of all producers and studios in Hollywood to determine the reason why RCA Photophone is servicing only RKO, Republic Pictures and those independents having no regular contracts, whereas Erpi is servicing all the other large corporations, and others.

It was learned this week that RCA had spoken vaguely in private some weeks ago about filing a suit against Erpi, and that Erpi, in reply, told the Radio Corporation to "go to it." Instead, RCA decided on the present course.

However, observers in the sound field view as a mystery RCA's action in dispatching its investigators all the way to Hollywood in view of the fact that Erpi's recording licenses, all identical, repose in the home offices in New York, where they were originally executed, and not in Hollywood. Furthermore the contracts have frequently been aired in the courts in the east and their contents might easily be ascertained through the court records, which are public property.

In some quarters it is believed that RCA's activities in Hollywood are being concentrated more on private discussions with studio subalterns rather than on an analysis of the actual licenses.

The investigation, now being conducted in Hollywood by James E. Francis, western general manager of RCA, and Frederick Leuschner, Hollywood attorney for the company, will seek to determine whether there are restrictive clauses in Erpi contracts which bar competition in the licensing of sound equipment.

It is not believed that the interest of RCA in this connection is being extended to licenses in exhibition for theatre reproducers.

Although Mr. Francis said over the weekend, in Hollywood, that the investigation in no way can be deemed a "war" between Erpi and RCA, it is significant that the study, sweeping in nature, will take at least another four or five weeks.

Too, Mr. Francis declared that no action of any kind by RCA is contemplated until all the facts have been "smoked out." If, when the investigation is completed, it is found that there are restrictive clauses in Erpi's licensing agreements with producers for recording rights to prevent RCA from securing some of this business, the next move, to be determined in New York, may involve legal action.

Mr. Francis further added that, although no set policy can be determined at this time, litigation will be avoided if possible, as a legal battle of such proportions as any pitting these two large "electrics" might do immeasurable harm to the entire industry.

Not mentioned by Mr. Francis was the possible effect of RCA's activities in this connection on the Senate's contemplated investigation of the holdings of American Telephone and Telegraph Company in other than the communications field.

Every phase of sound recording is being delved into, from the time talking motion pictures were first made. Any instances where RCA was prevented from doing business with any company holding an Erpi license for recording will be noted.

RCA's action appears to be unusual, in that there is no attempt being made to keep information of the existence of the investigation from the public records of the industry, even Mr. Francis, in his official capacity, admitting to the inquiry. The corporation, however, has made no formal announcement of plans. Normal procedure would be to conduct such an investigation quietly, and, if the belief of monopolization was substantiated, then bring the fight into the courts.

Further indication of the open admission by RCA of an attack on Erpi came with the publication in the press as long as two weeks ago of the assignment of Colonel William J. Donovan, of the New York law firm of Donovan, Leisure, Newton and Lumbard, counsel for RCA, to the Coast to speed the progress of the investigation. Mr. Donovan returned later to New York to confer with RCA's officials who had been conducting the survey in the East, and, at that time, indicated that he would return to Hollywood early this month for a continuance of the study. He spoke freely of the "private" study.

Erpi and RCA together have had the sound field pretty much to themselves since the first talker was recorded and reproduced some nine years ago. Erpi at that time beat RCA to the pen in signing all the large corporations, with the exception of RKO, to license contracts, and, so far as is known, there has been no outward sign that any of the Erpi licensees have ever considered supplanting their Erpi recording equipment and service with that of RCA.

Last week, an Erpi official at the home office in New York, commenting on RCA's activities against his corporation, said that "they (apparently referring to RCA) have been studying our agreements three years."

Elsewhere it was said that RCA had communicated by letter with Erpi on Erpi's tying-in agreements with producers, which RCA believes restrains free competition in the reproducing field, and that in answer Electrical Research set forth a complete denial of any illegalities in issuing the licenses.

Civic Unit Protests 'Scarface' Showing

The Cincinnati Better Motion Picture Council wrote Robert H. Morgan, manager of the Strand, independent house in the downtown district, protesting the showing of "Scarface," which Morgan had rebooked for a week starting August 29th.

The letter, in part, read:

"The public is receiving quite enough pictures at the present time dealing with the apprehension of 'bad men' in the so-called 'G-Men' films. Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, federal 'G-Man' director, in a recent wire to our council, expressed regret that he had no jurisdiction to prevent the revival showing of 'Scarface' and concurred in our position."

In answer to the letter he received from the council, Morgan wrote, in part:

"The picture merits revival because it is definitely an artistic achievement and should be accorded treatment as such. We treat great books and plays with the utmost respect, despite their tendency toward good or evil, and we should do likewise toward a great picture like 'Scarface.'"

Bishop Bergan Praises Censorship Results

Speaking at the banquet of Tri-State Theatres Corporation, The Most Reverend Gerald T. Bergan, bishop of Des Moines, praised producers as "having set a censorship on themselves with the result that 80 per cent are producing decent films." He added, "I hope the average American citizen will show appreciation by patronizing those theatres where proper pictures are shown."

During the Legion of Decency campaign the bishop had sent letters throughout the diocese asking non-attendance at "indecent" films. Laughter greeted his remarks that he was going to attend the showing of "The Crusades" after the banquet, but that he was glad it wasn't DeMille's "Cleopatra."

Chaplin Files Piracy Suit Against Mogulls

Charging the unlicensed exhibition of "The Kid" and "Shoulder Arms," Charles Chaplin has filed suit in New York federal court against Mogull Bros., Inc., a Bronx company, through Nathan Burkan. The comedian accuses the brothers, Charles, Leo and Peter, of "duping" and circulating prints of the two films with profits of millions.

Redeeming Loew Bonds

Drawings for redemption on $247,000 of Loew's, Inc., 15 year six per cent debentures due in 1941, have now been made, according to Dillon, Read & Co., sinking fund agent for the company. Payment will be made at 101 on October 1st.

DISTRIBUTORS DENY CONSPIRACIES EXISTED IN ST. LOUIS, MINNEAPOLIS

Show Cause Order Returnable September 10th at St. Louis; Independents' Minneapolis Case Up Next Monday

The virtual ending of the summer recess on Labor Day brought renewed activity in federal courts in the matter of antitrust suits as they involve large distributor and affiliated circuits, as follows:

Warner Brothers, RKO and Paramount jointly denied Government charges of a conspiracy to monopolize and discriminate against St. Louis independents.

Distributors were named defendants in a new action filed by Texas independent interests which charge violation of the antitrust laws.

The Department of Justice sent an investigator to Texas to study all phases of possible anti-trust violations by distributors.

September 9 was set for hearing of the independents' case against distributors in Minneapolis where an attempt is being made, through federal court charges of collusion, to compel the servicing of pictures to 10-cent theatres.

Four actions appear in the offing for early trial in federal courts in Texas.

In the Minneapolis action, attorneys for the Shubert Theatre Players Company (Benz), operating the Palace, Minneapolis, and Lyceum, St. Paul, were studying the distributors' answers denying charges of collusion in connection with the servicing of films to the defendants' Palace because that house charges only 10 cents admission. The theatre company seeks to compel distributors to service the Palace on a 10-cent admission policy, and is conducting a test to determine whether distributors have the right to refuse service because an exhibitor charges such admission price. The case will come up September 9, in the Minneapolis United States district court, and, besides the distributors, involves the Minnesota Amusement Company, a competitive circuit.

Four Suits Due in Texas

The four federal court suits expected to go to trial in Texas early this fall, any one of which might prove of major importance include: (1) a revival of the socalled Glass-Hoblitzelle 25-cent admission case, lost during the summer by the complainants in state actions; (2) an appeal of the Fuller case against Robb and Rowley, a Fuller competitor at Palestine, Tex.; (3) institution by Ruben Frels, exhibitor, of action in his complaint against the competitive Jefferson Amusement Company; and (4) a probable similar action by the Cole and Lilly theatre interests, of Greenville, also against Jefferson Amusement.

All these court contests involve competitive practices, allegedly monopolistic or otherwise. Efforts will be made to bring them into different federal courts in the state so that opinions may be had from different judges.

Most of the week's anti-trust activities were centered in Texas, where, besides the aforementioned possibilities, F. M. Baker, Hillsboro, Texas, exhibitor, filed a $45,000 triple damage suit under the Sherman antitrust law against the competitive Robb and Rowley circuit and the following distributors: United Artists, Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fox, Vitagraph (Warners), Universal, Columbia and RKO. Mr. Baker complained he was unable to obtain product.

Too, the Department of Justice assigned to Texas Dwight Savage, special attorney, of Washington, to investigate possible antitrust activities in the state. It was said he had been conferring with independents.

In their joint answer filed in the United States district court at St. Louis last Saturday in connection with injunction proceedings brought by the Department of Justice charging that they have been parties to a conspiracy to withhold first-run motion pictures from the local Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central, independent theatres, in violation of the Sherman antitrust act, Warner Brothers, Inc., Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., the Vitaphone Corporation, and General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., all controlled by Warner interests, denied there is any basis in fact for the far flung charges brought against them, Paramount and RKO.

A separate answer was filed Saturday on behalf of RKO-Radio which likewise denied the charges. Previously, on Friday, Paramount Distributing Company and Paramount Distributing Corporation, both of which are owned by Paramount Pictures, Inc., had denied the same charges and asked that United States District Judge George H. Moore dismiss the order to show cause on September 10 why the temporary injunction sought in the Government's petition should not be issued.

Charge Restraint of Trade

The Department of Justice is asking that the court restrain the eight defendants from continuing alleged restraint of trade practices in connection with their alleged refusal to provide first run pictures to the three theatres which are under Fanchon & Marco management.

The answers of the Warner companies and RKO-Radio generally and specifically deny that any agreement or arrangement among the defendants was responsible for cancellation of the first-run contracts with the Skouras Super Theatres Corporation, which formerly controlled and operated the complaining three theatres. The Warner answer says, however, that on July 30, 1932, by reason of controlling stock ownership of the Skouras Company by Paramount Publix, the directorate of Skouras Super Theatres was composed of two officers of Warner Brothers Pictures, an attorney employed by Warner Brothers, and three officers of Paramount Publix, but the cancellation of the first-run contracts, it is contended, was due to the inability of the Skouras company to comply with the terms of the contracts.

The answer of the Paramount companies indicates that the Department of Justice, Fanchon & Marco and Harry Koplar and others interested in the struggle for control of the three first-run houses, may look for a real battle both in connection with the injunction proceedings set for hearing on September 10 and also at the trial of the federal indictment against all of the defendants, which is to come up on September 30 before Judge Moore, in St. Louis.

Four Federal Actions Likely to Go to Early Trial in Texas; U. S. Studies Antitrust Angles; Texan Sues All Distributors

Paramount, in its answer, said that it determined for itself that it would not license the exhibition of its 1935-36 motion pictures to corporations affiliated with or controlled by the present lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central because, it contends, the present lessees "have destroyed the good-will previously existing between them and the distributing company by maliciously charging them with the commission of a crime." The answer of Paramount concluded with the statement that "in truth and fact the lessees knew that Paramount Pictures Distributing Company and Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation were innocent of the charge."

The court was asked to dismiss the injunction suit returnable on September 10, to enter a decree in favor of the Paramount defendants and drop the order to show cause.

The answers also deny some of the allegations in the Department of Justice's petition and disaffirm any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to other charges made against them and the other defendants.

It was explained that a franchise for the exhibition of Paramount Pictures to the theatres in question had been cancelled by Paramount because the provisions of the franchise to be performed by the exhibitor, Skouras Super Theatres, which had held the franchise, were breached by it and because that corporation had been unable to carry out the terms of said franchise. It was said that this franchise was canceled without any purpose or intent of effectuating any conspiracy to withhold pictures from the present lessees of the theatres.

Charge Conspiracy for Control

The Department of Justice, in the petition for the injunction, charged that Warner, Paramount, RKO, et al, have refused to renew first-run contracts which expired on July 31, last, for the exhibition of pictures by Fanchon & Marco not only in St. Louis, but at theatres in New York, Los Angeles, Long Beach and Phoenix. It was charged that the failure and refusal to renew these exhibition contracts was but another step in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy to make it impossible for anyone but Warner Brothers or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by them, to operate the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central.

The Ambassador theatre was reopened on August 30, while the New Grand Central has been dark for several months.

Federal Judge Moore last Saturday granted the application of United States District Attorney Blanton and Russell Hardy, special assistants to the United States attorney general, for subpœnas duces tecum requiring various officials and employees of motion picture companies, and others, to appear at the court hearing on September 10 and to bring with them certain books, papers, records and other information sought by the government in connection with its efforts to convict the defendant corporations. The material covered by the subpœnas includes film contracts, records, directors' meeting minutes, leases and reports, articles appearing in trade publications.

(MGM)

"Broadway Melody of 1936" . . when you've said that, you've said the last word, the best word and TOPS in musicals. Headed by the sensational Eleanor Powell, there is a display and array of talent the like of which has never been seen on the screen before. It's a revusical that combines only the best features of that kind of entertainment, which results in high-powered comedy, gorgeous production, a musical score that will be played for months and months, and a picture that will be played and replayed to keep audiences happy and make the box office positively smirk with satisfaction.

In writing the screen play and dialogue for this production, Jack McGowan, Sid Silvers and Harry Conn haven't missed a trick for injecting bright, quick sketches creating legitimate comedy and romantic characters and making use of the specialty acts that dot the picture with exclamation points. It's the best job of musical picture writing that has come out of Hollywood. And it's also the best job of musical picture direction that has come out of the whole picture world, with Roy Del Ruth surpassing himself at that particular job. Del Ruth has an uncanny sense of tempo for this kind of thing. A tempo that never lets down, that spots numbers so correctly it's astonishing, that gets laughs with the greatest of ease and never stops to milk a situation dry

And then, first, last and always, there is Eleanor Powell. To bill her as the world's greatest tap dancer is to tell only part of the story. That girl is literally a screen sensation who makes history with this picture. She has no peer in dancing. She does an imitation of Katharine Hepburn that is chilling in its accuracy and caricature. She can act and she has beauty of face that has freshness and charm and personality. In fact she's a star so bright that others pale in comparison.

But that's not all. Jack Benny and Sid Silvers as colyumist and stooge, respectively, are something pictures cannot afford to be without. Benny with his slow takums, and, Silvers with his silly pan and nonsense delivery, make a team to talk about. Also there are Vilma and Buddy Ebsen, eccentric tap dancers par excellence, with grand comedy personalities that will be in great demand with the fans. There is Robert Wildhack, the "snorer," beautifully placed throughout the picture, and, with a routine and way of giving out with it, that is another huge rave for the picture.

Frances Langford sings elegantly, and, Robert Taylor, is not only the best musical comedy hero, but comes out with a most pleasing voice. June Knight scores as the heavy and also scores with her dancing, which is of the ballroom variety. Una Merkel crashes through with another of her excellent comedy roles and Nick Long Jr. is swell as Taylor's man Friday, and for his dance with June Knight, he deserves a big hand . . . the lad is darned good.

But you haven't heard everything yet. There's the music by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed. A one hundred per cent score with grand lyrics. A hit in every number and a knockout in "Broadway Rhythm," which is the closest thing to Gershwin that Gershwin has done in years. That's meant in an entirely complimentary manner. No comparisons but a tribute to the boys and to Edward B. Powell who did the orchestrations, (take a lesson from him sometime,) and the magnificent musical direction by Alfred Newman.

Wait, that's not all. This picture is so good that every department is fully responsible for its contribution. Dave Gould's dance routines are well nigh perfect. "Sing Before Breakfast," "I've A Feelin' You're Foolin'," (that title doesn't sound right,) "Sunday Afternoon" and "Broadway Rhythm" give you the idea of how such things should really be done in pictures. Miss Rasch's ballet to "You Are My Lucky Star" is beautifully staged. And the magnificence that goes into the art direction of Gibbons and Pye is breathtaking, with the costumes by Adrian carrying out the perfection of background for a musical.

There remains the photography by Charles Rosher, which fills the eye to overflowing with the loveliness in the picture, and, all in all, John Considine has to his credit the finest musical production with the most goodies, that audiences have ever bought. HURRAH!!!

MOTION PICTURE DAILY'S HOLLYWOOD PREVIEW

(M-G-M)

Hollywood, Aug. 26.—Entertainment grand and glorious, comedy joyful and boisterous, songs tuneful and melodious, dancing, world-beating, taps, terpsichore, choreography and rhythms plenty hotcha meld in this musical melody that propels a new personality, Eleanor Powell, to the mazdas and gives Jack Benny, the funny man; Robert Taylor, the lover; Frances Langford, the torch singer, Una Merkel and Sid Silvers, the laughateers, with Vilma and Buddy Ebsen, two eccentrics, and June Knight full and free outlet for their ace-high talents.

Here is a show with heart interest from a yarn based on a story by Moss Hart with the screen play by Jack McGowan and Silvers. It's all about a columnist, Benny, who can't keep his nose out of other people's romances until his beezer is poked a few times. He creates a fictitious personality, and Miss Powell, small town girl, is forced to impersonate his creation, she makes good in the big show and gets her man, Taylor. The story is designed with the heartache and victory of the Main Stem.

The song, "You Are My Lucky Star," sung by Miss Langford and also by Miss Powell, sticks in your whistle. Other tunes, "I've Got a Feeling You're Fooling," "Broadway Rhythm," "Sing Before Breakfast" and "On a Sunday Afternoon," all by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed, the original "Broadway Melody" writers, are tuneful treats. Miss Powell, in her first film reveals star talents and is tops in taps, singing, beauty, imitations and trouping. Robert Wildhack's snoring specialties are belly laughs. Henry Stockwell sings the original "Broadway Melody" number.

Beautiful in movement and setting is Albertina Rasch's ballet. Distinctive is the musical direction of Albert Newman and the dances created by Dave Gould. The art direction, photography, gowns and sound are in M-G-M's best craftsman's manner.

John Considine produced under Sam Katz's aegis.

Benny's national popularity, the discovery of Miss Powell, fresh songs, laughs, dances, girls and romance make this a crackerjack musical show of big money and for big money.

Film Previews!

Metro release of John Considine, Jr., production. Starring Jack Benny and Eleanor Powell. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Original story by Moss Hart. Screen play by Jack McGowan, Sid Silvers and Harry Conn. Music and lyrics by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed. Settings by Cedric Gibbons. Photography by Charles Rosher. Film editor, Blanche Sewell. Dances by Dave Gould and Albertina Rasch. Supporting cast: Robert Taylor, June Knight, Sid Silvers, Una Merkel, Vilma and Buddy Ebsen, Frances Langford, Carl Randall, Harry Stockwell, Nick Long, Jr., Robert Wildhack. Previewed Aug. 9, at Warners theatre, Santa Barbara. Running time, 110 mins.

Nothing can stop 'Broadway Melody of 1936' from being sock box office. It's terrific entertainment. Crammed with laughs and dancing, but what dancing! It had the Santa Barbara preview audience on the edge of their seats. Eleanor Powell is undoubtedly a film name to conjure with. Has personality, looks and ability. In addition to this she trots out a brand of tap-dancing and ballet work the like of which has not been seen on the screen heretofore.

Jack Benny does an excellent job as a Broadway columnist. He's a new Benny, wisely kept apart from the love interest. Up near the front is Sid Silvers, who in addition to his contribution as one of the writers, makes it tough going for Benny. Silvers displayed a dead-pan brand of comedy acting that pictures can use.

John Considine has given the picture class production throughout.

Story is one of those backstage affairs. However, it is so well written by the McGowan, Silvers, Conn trio that the familiarity is not noticed. Their dialog job is a near perfect bit of comedy writing. Eleanor Powell comes to New York to try to get into Bob Taylor's show. Benny, a Broadway columnist, gums up her chances through his hatred for Taylor. In attempt to burn Taylor, Benny concocts a phoney French star, whom he plugs in his column. Benny's plan is kicked over by Una Merkel, Taylor's stenographer, who substitutes Miss Powell for the mythical star. Miss Powell gets the starring spot in Taylor's show which forces out June Knight, who has financed the show. Ending is the usual compromise, with everybody getting together and everything coming out as expected.

There are a dozen dance routines, all class. June Knight does two routines, one with Nick Long, Jr., and one solo. Vilma and Buddy Ebsen contributes two of their standard routines. Eleanor Powell does three, one unaccompanied that is tops. Brown and Freed have contributed five musical numbers: 'On a Sunday Afternoon,' 'Sing Before Breakfast,' 'I've a Feeling You're Fooling,' 'Broadway Rhythm,' and 'You Are My Lucky Star.' All are good tunes with the last one standing best chance of getting into hit class.

There isn't a bad performance in the picture. Bob Taylor gives a nice sustained performance as the young producer. June Knight is a good selection as the heavy. The Ebsens look like nice comedy bets for pictures. Frances Langford's work is confined to singing one number, which she does in good style. Una Merkel is excellent as the stenographer. Harry Stockwell makes a convincing editor, and Robert Wildhack's snoring bit is one of the outstanding spots in the picture.

Roy Del Ruth's direction keeps picture going at a fast pace and is responsible for a great portion of the entertainment values. He deserves particular credit for his excellent handling of Miss Powell on her screen debut.

Dance routines by Dave Gould are all novel and original, with his staging of the numbers always in keeping with the story. Albertina Rasch stages one ballet number, the choreography of which should be a push-over even for those not too friendly towards ballet dancing. Artistic are the settings by Cedric Gibbons and the photography by Charles Rosher.

MGM Musical Comedy 102 mins.

CREAM OF THE MUSICALS; IT'S A SURE-FIRE B.O. FILM; POWELL MADE A NEW STAR

Cast: Jack Benny, Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell, Una Merkel, June Knight, Sid Silvers, Vilma and Buddy Ebsen, Nick Long, Jr., Robert Wildhack, Frances Langford and Harry Stockwell. Screenplay by Jack McGowan and Sid Silvers from an original by Moss Hart. Director, Roy Del Ruth.

Plot: Benny, a columnist, gets a punch in the nose from Taylor when he comments on the financial backing Taylor received from June, a wealthy widow, to produce his revue. Eleanor, Taylor's high school sweetheart, comes to the big city hoping he will help her get a start dancing in a show. He fails to recognize her and she leaves broken hearted. Benny starts a publicity gag about a mythical actress but Taylor cannot locate her to play the lead in his show. His secretary, Una, arranges for Eleanor to pose as the actress and she gets the job. Getting cold feet and afraid of trouble, Benny wants to call off the deal. He takes Eleanor to a party and she dances her dance. Taylor recognizes her and she not only lands the part but wins the lad.

SUMMARY: Once upon a time a certain film concern coined the phrase "Makers of Stars," now MGM can lay claim to that title along with "Producers of the greatest musicals." Not only has Metro, through the superb direction of Roy Del Ruth, given the industry one of its greatest musicals but with "Broadway Melody of 1936," they have uncovered at least three big potential box-office stars. Eleanor Powell, following this picture, will be just as sensational as Fred Astaire. She is an artist of many accomplishments. Her dancing is a revelation; her singing excellent and. there's no limit to her charm. Jack Benny rises to his top-notch fame ladder with an unquestionably fine performance while Robert Taylor is one of the surprises of the picture. How far that boy will go can only be answered by the equal comparison to Clark Gable's early rise. No picture in recent years has contained better acting and direction. Una Merkel, Sid Silvers, Vilma and .Buddy Ebsen and many others contribute their share to this perfect musical. That it will be a box-office draw sensation of the season, is giving it faint praise. It should do colossal business at first showings and clean up on repeat bookings. Benny is best marquee name. Title is big draw. Play up Eleanor Powell as another Fred Astaire type dance sensation. Go strong on music, dance and song plugging tie-ups. Dress marquee and lobby in sensational musical atmosphere, using plenty of girl art. Stage specialty dance act and contests, tieing in with halls and teachers. Radio stations for lobby hook-up and amateur contest. Radio editors for plugs on personalities. Arrange Mickey Mouse sweater giveaway or prize. Stage 10 most beautiful girls contest, pet superstitions, fashion shows, movie star imitations and pie or spinach eating contest for kids. Advertise 1936th person admitted free each day. Use catchline "So New It's a Year Ahead," working out street stunts, co-op ads etc., Commercial tie-ups, florists, fashions, Royal typewriters, dancing shoes, portable phonographs, music stores, and office equipment.

U. S. JUSTICE DEPARTMENT STUDIES REDS' BOYCOTT AND PICKET DRIVE

Hearst Officials Say Backbone of Agitation Has Been Broken, but American League Unit States Campaign Is Growing

The U. S. Department of Justice this week was added to the official agencies directing attention to the boycott-and-picket campaign against various films which has caused disorders at theatres in New York and other cities.

The Department, it is understood, is conducting a quiet investigation independently of one being pushed by the U. S. district attorney's office in New York, to determine violations of federal laws governing the sending of threats through the mails, and has as evidence numerous printed cards and letters received by theatre managers and film companies threatening boycott and loss of patronage at theatres showing newsreels and other films objected to by Communists, pacifists and sundry radical elements. One phase of the inquiry is to ferret out alien agitators subject to deportation for subversive activities.

Hearst officials and attorneys believe the backbone of the campaign against Loew theatres in metropolitan New York, where Hearst Metrotone News is the subject of attack, has been broken, as a result of police vigilance and the convictions meted out in the magistrates courts to about 30 youthful pickets, all members of the various branches of the American League Against War and Fascism, which has assumed responsibility for the crusade.

Picketing Fund Being Raised

The New York City Committee of the League announced, however, that the campaign is continuing unabated and will be extended. A fund in support of the picketing crusade is being raised by neighborhood "workers'" groups.

Attorneys late this week will submit a report to the Hearst film interests and William Randolph Hearst on the basis of which it is expected that legal measures will be taken against those responsible for the disorders. It is planned to move against the American League Against War and Fascism and its leaders.

Paramount News Attacked

With two exceptions, all magistrates in metropolitan New York have taken a stand against boycott and illegal picketing, and these two, Magistrates Anna M. Kross and Jeanette Brill, have been reluctant to send the pickets to jail because of their youth. Eight adjudged guilty of disorderly conduct by Magistrate Bernard Kozicke in connection with picketing Loew's Oriental, Brooklyn, in protest against Hearst Metrotone News, were given suspended sentences by Magistrate Brill in adolescents court and released with a record of conviction.

Paramount News was attacked in the Red press this week for including a sequence titled "Italy's Side of the Question," relating to the Ethiopian dispute, and was grouped with Hearst Metrotone News and "March of Time" as "Fascist newsreels" to be boycotted and picketed. Adolph Zukor was blamed for the film and called "an Italian Fascist."

In addition to demonstrations outside theatres, the Reds also were considering plans to "organize group action inside the theatres," they said, to counteract sentiment created by the films they consider contrary to their political and economic doctrines.

The Film and Photo League, a Red-directed amateur film group, is preparing for a demonstration when United Artists' "Red Salute" opens on Broadway shortly, objecting to the film as "United Artists' Fascist crack at the U. S. student movement."

The League informed its members and Red sympathizers generally that if after reading a synopsis of the picture "you are convinced, as we are, that 'Red Salute' is as brutal an insult to labor as a Hearst editorial, you should act at once to get your organization or club active in the fight to stop the film." It was urged that protests be sent to United Artists.

In New Orleans Communists and members of the American League Against War and Fascism were seeking to prevent the sentencing of two pickets who were arrested for distributing leaflets protesting the showing of "Stranded" at the Orpheum theatre. They also demanded that Isaac Heller, head of the American Civil Liberties Union in New Orleans, take part in their defense. Mr. Heller refused to defend the pickets, reportedly having said he was was opposed to any attempts to ruin the business of the theatre. The Union, which usually acts in defense of radicals, did, however, defend a group of six arrested while picketing the Crescent theatre.

Quebec Exhibitors Honor Bouchard

The Quebec Exhibitors' Association tendered its president, H. L. Bouchard, a testimonial dinner Tuesday night at the Mount Royal Hotel, Montreal, in recognition of his recent appointment as cabinet minister for the provincial government of Quebec. Mr. Bouchard, who operates theatres at Three Rivers, Que., has been an officer of the exhibitor organization for a number of years. Industry representatives from many sections of Canada and from the States were present.

Franklin Opens Two In Honolulu, Building Pair

The recently organized Franklin Theatre Enterprises, Ltd., Honolulu, now has two houses in operation, the Roosevelt and Sheridan, and two others under construction for opening next month. Booking offices for the new company are being maintained in San Francisco under William J. Citron.

Stagehands Demand Double Sunday Pay

The possibility of Sunday shows in New York, in spite of the demand of the Actors' Equity Association for double pay for Sunday performances, was further dampened by the announcement of James J. Brennan, president of Theatrical Protective Union No. 1, that the stagehands also would demand double pay.

Producers heretofore have insisted that double pay for actors would make Sunday shows "impractical" from a financial point of view and, with the stagehands' demand, conceded that Sunday shows might just as well be forgotten for this year.

Mr. Brennan explained that the stagehands would be foolish to accept regular pay while the actors got double their regular wages.

Frank Buck Returns With 100,000 Feet of Film

Frank Buck returned to New York Tuesday with 100,000 feet of film made in the Far Eastern jungles, which will be cut and edited by Mr. Buck and the Van Beuren Corporation, his producers. The picture, untitled as yet, will be released by RKO Radio Pictures, which also distributed two previous films of animal life from Mr. Buck, "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and "Wild Cargo."

Mr. Buck after nearly a year in Malaya and northern India photographing wild game and capturing specimens for his Zoo at Massepequa, Long Island, was met at the Pennsylvania Station in New York by representatives of the Long Island Chamber of Commerce and its brass band. The members presented him with the key to the Island.

The cargo of 2,000 animals and 5,000 birds captured by him and arriving on the SS. Steel Navigator this week includes, said Mr. Buck, "a pair of rare jungle buffalo noted for their ferocity, the largest tiger in captivity, an armored rhinoceros from India and a 175 pound orang-outang from Borneo."

Otterson in New York To Act on Theatre Pacts

John E. Otterson, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, returned to New York from Hollywood last week after two months surveying the company's coast studios. He plans to return to Hollywood around October 1 and before leaving will pass upon agreements extending for one year the Paramount theatre operating and partnership contracts which expire September 28th.

Preliminary drafts of these extension agreements have been prepared for Mr. Otterson's inspection and are awaiting his approval. The Paramount board of directors will also pass upon many of the agreements.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

When our own American newsreel boys now idling along the Ethiopian frontier start work with their sound cameras on the battlefield, they will learn that narcotics rather than fighting men win wars in Africa, for narcotics make Ethiopians "invincible," even invisible, so the natives believe.

While Mussolini's hairy-chested Italians are being rationed strong red wine to enliven their fighting spirits, the African tribesmen will be getting Kat, a native herb, which sends its chewers into a frenzy of action.

Tribesmen in that comparatively primative country are known to have chewed Kat and then charged an oncoming locomotive with a spear and a rhinocerous shield. Four swigs of Kat juice and four Ethiopians will be ready to fight four Italian regiments. Two swigs and the newsreel cameramen will try to shoot slow motion pictures of a 14-inch shell.

When Sally Rand danced recently at Balaban and Katz's Chicago theatre, using swan wings and a swan's neck, Louis R. Lipstone, B. and K. stage production manager, got himself involved in a conference with Renee Villon, who was booked to appear at the circuit's Oriental theatre, in a nude dance based on an "Aphrodite" incident.

Excitedly, Renee launched an explanation of the dance to Mr. Lipstone, suggesting that "it would be nice to come on holding a dove, which I could release when I get to center stage."

"Omigosh," worried Lipstone, "we got a gal now using a duck and now you want a pigeon."

But, Mr. Lipstone, Sally was modest enough to hold on to her duck.

There's a chuckly little yarn being whispered around Times Square by Beau Broadway about John Edward Otterson, Paramount's new president, who returned to the home office the other day from making a thorough investigation—his first—of the company's Hollywood studios. On a tour of the immense picture-making plant, Mr. Otterson was shown everything, the sets, mechanical equipment, cashier's department, shops, the writers' building, in fact the whole works—and to all he evinced a polite, restrained, typically-Otterson interest. But, one day, Buster Crabbe came sauntering across the lunch room. Mr. Otterson leaped up, charged after him, stopped him, felt Crabbe's arm and then, beaming, returned to his table.

He's strong, all right," said the president.

The world's meanest thief is in Tampa, Florida; at least he was in Tampa until the other night, and was in the crowd at the Franklin theatre, for while the late stragglers were exiting at the close of the show he stole a quart mason jar nearly filled with pennies which had been contributed by patrons of the theatre to a Will Rogers memorial fund. The jar stood on a table in the theatre lobby, behind a card asking contributions of pennies.

They tell it on Benny Benjamin and Roly Thompson, two Kansas City Film Rowites, and it has been heard along Broadway about others. Anyway, they were golfing recently and darkness fell before they had completed their round—they are that kind of golfers. So they sent a caddy ahead to shout the directions of the greens.

Out of the darkness came a voice:

"Do you see the moon?"

"Yeah," Benny and Roly rolled back.

"Well," came the instructions, "that's the direction, but not quite so far."

Three contemplated "Hamlets" for Broadway caused London's Era to crack the suggestion that they rename it Bardway.

For one week, Black Starr and Frost-Gorham, Fifth Avenue jewelers, are presenting an exhibition of the original and unique jewelry in the famous Transportation Set which belonged to the late James Buchanan Brady, Prince of Broadway Playboys of the last century, Gartantuan of Gourmands and Gourmets and millionaire super-salesman of railroad equipment. Universal's "Diamond Jim" is the cause of the ballyhoo.

Diamond Jim owned 30 sets of precious stones—one complete change for each day of the month. The Transportation Set was destined to cause as much comment as any jewels of the 19th century. Every animal and every appliance concerned in the business of carrying men and goods became its subject.

There is a ring in the shape of an engine wheel. The center diamond was ten carats, surrounded by 42 smaller diamonds. One shirt stud is a bicycle of 119 diamonds, another is an automobile of rubies and diamonds in which the four little wheels actually revolve. Four tank cars were shaped for cuff links. An airplane as large as a quarter forms a collar button.

Other pieces in the display are a platinum belt-buckle measuring three inches, set with a lion and tiger rampant, consisting of 546 diamonds; a platinum model of a passenger train which was modestly worn on Mr. Brady's undershirt; a pencil in the form of a ship at sea which measures four inches, and which was worn on Diamond Jim's watch chain. The eye-glass case is decorated with a locomotive of 210 diamonds. His pocket-book clasp is a railroad car with diamond mermaids.

After Diamond Jim's death the diamonds were re-set and sold, but the settings themselves remain unchanged. A huge monogramed leather case was designed for each set. These were left with the jeweler and each morning at eight o'clock a messenger arrived in a cab at Brady's house on West 86th street with whichever set had been ordered the night before. Sometimes his plans called for four or five changes during a single day. The owner paid $100 per month for this service and the messenger boy frequently received an equivalent of two or three weeks' salary for a tip.

In the 30 sets there were more than 20,000 diamonds of various sizes and shapes and some 6,000 precious stones. Mr. Brady was fond of remarking, "And them as has 'em wears 'em."

WILLIAM FOX READY TO CONTINUE ATTACK ON 20th CENTURY MERGER

New Action to Dissolve Consolidation Will Be Brought in New York Supreme Court; Brooklyn Ruling Stands

Action Charging Wastage of Assets May Be Tried in October; Theatre Companies Completing Reorganizations

Continuing their attack on the consummated Twentieth Century-Fox merger, after three defeats, attorneys for the William Fox interests said this week that further measures will be taken in the supreme court of New York, probably next week, in an attempt to dissolve the consolidaiton.

The action will consist of a trial on the merits of the contentions which were rejected in the appellate division of the high court last week as the basis for a temporary stay, the court intimating, however, according to attorneys, that airing of the issues would be in order.

Before the new action comes up for hearing, permission will be sought from the court to examine Sidney R. Kent, Joseph M. Schenck and other officers and directors of the companies, as well as officials of Chase National Bank, relative to features of the merger and recapitalization which have been under fire in the actions brought by Mrs. William Fox and the All-Continent Corporation, which she controls, said a representative of Hirsh, Newman, Reass & Becker, counsel for the William Fox interests. The nature of the latest action had not been decided by midweek.

The action against officers and directors of Fox Film charging wastage of assets, among other things, is still pending in the supreme court and may be tried in October, said the attorneys. Should the courts uphold the contentions, the company would be compelled to "unwind" the merger, they pointed out.

Not Appealing Brooklyn Ruling

Mrs. Fox will not appeal the decision of Justice Edward Lazansky in the appellate division of the New York supreme court in Brooklyn, who last week refused to stay the merger after a lower court threw out Mrs. Fox's suit and after the chancery court at Wilmington could see no reason why the merger should be prevented.

Fox theatre companies, unaffected by any merger squabbles, meanwhile were completing reorganizations, with assets of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses formally transferred on Tuesday to the new company, Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., in New York, and final hearing on discharge of the Fox West Coast Theatres from bankruptcy set by Referee Samuel W. McNabb for September 18 in Los Angeles.

94 Theatres in New "Met"

The new Metropolitan Playhouses, to which assets were transferred by the Irving Trust Company, trustee in the reorganization, will begin operation with 94 theatres, all in the metropolitan New York area, and plans the immediate addition of several houses. The expansion will bring the number of holdings up to 100 or more before the end of the year, according to plans of the management.

The operators, Skouras Theatres and the Randforce circuit, which have been given new 10-year contracts, each have 47 theatres at the outset, and four theatres were to be added to the Randforce group in Brooklyn this week. Randforce recently took over the Utica, Brooklyn, on a 10-year lease. Under its revised setup, Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., has condensed its corporate structure into 18 leasing and operating subsidiaries.

Joseph Schenck, President

Joseph M. Schenck was elected president and chairman according to plan, at a first meeting of the board of the reorganized company last Thursday. Milton C. Weisman, who was receiver, was elected vice-president and secretary; William C. Philips, treasurer of United Artists Theatre Corporation, was elected vice-president and treasurer; A. M. Georger, assistant treasurer, and Melvin Albert and Herbert Keller, assistant secretaries.

All officers, with the exception of Mr. Georger, were listed as incorporators with Herbert Bayard Swope, a director, who represents the RKO interests.

Filing fees of $16,664 were paid to the secretary of state of Albany for the incorporation of Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., with 332,288 shares of non par value stock. Also incorporated were the companies' 18 subsidiaries which have been numerically named, beginning with Number One Theatre, Inc., each capitalized at 100 shares of stock, no par value.

$500,000 Fund for Fees

Attorneys and committees who served in the receivership and reorganization will be compensated out of a $500,000 fund set aside for such expenses. Applications for fees will be received by Federal Judge Julian W. Mack shortly after his return, expected this week.

About $2,500,000 in cash is to be paid to holders of old debentures under the reorganization plan, and payments of cash or new securities will be made available about September 18. Headquarters of the new company will be established September 15 in the Paramount building adjacent to the Skouras offices.

In Los Angeles, William H. Moore, Jr., trustee in bankruptcy, submitted his final report to the federal court on Fox West Coast Theatres' affairs, reflecting a marked improvement in the condition of the company in recent months. When the bankruptcy was declared in February, 1932, the report showed an operating loss of $25,000 a week. The circuit of some 300 theatres is now operating at a profit, said Mr. Moore, and all affairs have been liquidated with full payment allowed to every creditor on approved claims.

The trustee's report showed receipts and disbursements of $20,000,000 in operation of the circuit during bankruptcy. Leases of 19 theatres, which were responsible for $230,000 loss in 1932, were disaffirmed.

Circuit Names Changed

While attorneys are preparing for the final discharge from bankruptcy in Kansas City of the Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain units, it became known in papers filed in Dover, Del., that Fox Central States Theatres Corporation has changed its name to Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., New York, and Fox Midwest Theatres Corporation was changed to Fox Intermountain Theatres Corporation. At the Skouras office in New York it was said that Fox Midwest will be the new company embracing the Midwest division operated by Elmer C. Rhoden out of Kansas City and Intermountain embraces the Rocky Mountain division headed by Rick Ricketson at Denver.

Mr. Rhoden returned to Kansas City this week with his attorney, Leland Hazard, after conferences with Spyros Skouras in New York on final details of his five-year operating contract. Others who will receive personal service contracts are Charles Skouras, in charge of west coast operations, and Jack Sullivan, film buyer for that division. All contracts are being made with National Theatres, the company which took over Fox West Coast operations.

Calls Kansas Outlook Bright

Mr. Rhoden revealed that Fox Midwest on October 1 will dissolve its partnership arrangement with Grubel Bros., owners of the Electric, first-run in Kansas City, Kan., which it has been operating jointly with its own first-run, the Granada, for a year or more. The Fox Midwest head said that, despite a small wheat crop in the Kansas area, the outlook is bright for theatre conditions.

Fox Intermountain plans a 1,200-seat $100,000 theatre at Boulder, Col., on the site of the Curran, which was purchased from the Boulder K. & F. Realty Company. Numerous theatre improvements have been completed in the division.

Joseph M. Schenck arrived in Hollywood Tuesday with announcement that Twentieth Century-Fox would spend $1,250,000 on five new stages and other improvements.

Chicago Publicists Launch Publication

Chicago's Amusement Publicists Association, with a membership of local theatre, exchange and other publicists, this week issued the first edition of its own publication, "Capa Observer," a four page affair to be published now and then. Duke Hickey, of Universal Films, is editor. Subscriptions from members will support it. The association's headquarters are at the Congress hotel.

B. S. MOSS LEASES BROADWAY SITES

Plans House in Structure Where Old Criterion Flourished, Also Leases Broadway Theatre

B. S. Moss, who when 21 years old formed a partnership with William Fox and each invested $300 in a nickelodeon, and then went on to become a factor in New York motion picture exhibition, over the weekend took leases with his associates on two New York theatres, one for the old Broadway theatre at 53d street and the other the playhouse to be a part of the new structure rising on the site of the old Criterion between 44th and 45th streets.

The lease of Macon Amusement Corporation, of which Mr. Moss is president, for the theatre at 44th-45th, is to run 42 years and provides for a total rental exceeding $3,000,000. The building project was begun by The 1514 Broadway Corporation, subsidiary of City Bank Farmers Trust Company, owner of the property.

Equipped for Stage and Broadcast

The theatre will seat 1,800, and while planned primarily for motion pictures, it will also be equipped to accommodate legitimate stage productions and as a broadcasting theatre as well. Mr. Moss' aim, he said, is to make simplicity the keynote and to avoid ornate interiors, hard walls and balconies "which distort sound and are distracting to audiences."

Eugene DeRosa is to be the architect, with Thomas W. Lamb the supervising architect.

There will be no side seats, no overhanging balcony. A sound chamber will be installed near the orchestra, it was announced, where an acoustical engineer will hear the picture as the audience hears it and control the sound. The theatre will occupy 14,200 square feet, fronting 141 feet on 45th street, with a depth of 102 feet and a 22 foot entrance on Broadway.

Shaped Like Halved Bell

Word from the architects that the theatre interior will be shaped much like a bell cut in half recalls the first announcements, in April, 1934, of the Moss plans for return to exhibition, then at 207th and Broadway, when he said:

"The theatre we intend to build will be neither too wide nor too long. It will be of the intimate type. It will give spectator and listener all the advantages of the small legitimate theatre, regardless of where his seat is situated. The volume and quality of sound, as in a broadcasting studio, will always be under control of an expert at a sound board, who hears just what the audience hears.

"The interior will be in the form of a bell, cut in half, and placed on the cut edges. The ceiling will be low and the seats arranged as an open fan. Carpeted throughout, with seats fully upholstered, with walls, ceilings and floors sound-dampened with newly patented materials, and with doors, windows and skylights completely sound-proofed, there will be no distraction whatever from either interior repercussion or from outside noises leaking in."

The deal for the old Broadway theatre reached fruition over the weekend when Judge Grover C. Moscowitz, in United States district court, Brooklyn, signed an order authorizing the trustees in reorganization for Prudence Company, Inc., to lease the theatre building and two stores at 1681 Broadway at 53d street, to Chasebee Theatre Corporation, with which Mr. Moss also is associated. The Moss interests once owned the property.

The lease, for six years, calls for rental starting at $23,400 for the first year and increasing until $43,600 will be paid for each of the last two years.

The Prudence trustees had approved an application for a lease to Mainstem Corporation, headed by Leo Brecher, at a slightly lower rental, but at the hearing the Moss offer was made and the court accepted it.

J. F. Jasper Dies; In Films 17 Years

John Frederick Jasper, pioneer film man, died in Los Angeles late last week from a paralytic stroke. He was 58 years old.

Mr. Jasper became ill late in July. His physician, Dr. Cecil Reynolds, requested an investigation of his treatment by his nurse and family. The nurse, Mrs. Lucile Sisney, was arrested on suspicion of violating narcotic laws. Later, when Mrs. Jasper sought appointment as her husband's guardian, her petition was opposed as a result of the narcotic charges. Both women were exonerated, however, and Mrs. Jasper's appointment was ratified by the court.

Mr. Jasper entered the film business in 1916 as studio manager for the late David Horsley. A year later he joined Charles Chaplin in the comedian's independent venture and aided in establishing the present Chaplin Studios. After leaving Chaplin he organized the John Jasper Studios which were later known as the General Service Studios and the Marshall Neilan Studios. Until recently he had been treasurer of the Pathe Studios.

Surviving Jasper are his widow, Mrs. Maybelle Jasper of Beverly Hills, and a brother, Charles Jasper of Bakers Field, Cal.

John Thorn Dead

John Thorn, 55, veteran actor of the silent screen and the stage, died in Mercer, Pa., after an extended illness. He played in several New York productions among them "Her Master's Voice," "Vagabond" and "Experience."

Lederer Wins Suit

Francis Lederer, by a court directed verdict in Los Angeles, won the $150,000 plagiarism suit brought against him by Jack Quartaro, writer, for unauthorized use of Mr. Quartaro's story, "Curbstone Heaven," in Lederer's picture, "Romance in Manhattan."

Warner and RKO Sign Product Deal

Bringing to a close two weeks of negotiations, resumed after a lapse during which first run pictures were sold to A. H. Schwartz's Century Circuit for three Long Island theatres and one Brooklyn house and to four Springer & Cocalis theatres, Warner and RKO late last week signed a national product deal. Major Leslie E. Thompson represented RKO, while A. W. Smith and Gradwell Sears acted for the distributor.

In addition to Greater New York, RKO theatres in New Orleans, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Omaha, Des Moines, Sioux City, Davenport, Cedar Rapids and other cities are included in the deal.

Only four local houses operated by the circuit will be affected by two independent circuit deals with Warner. They are the Kenmore, Brooklyn; Tilyou, Coney Island; Alden, Jamaica, and the 81st on Broadway. The Kenmore is in opposition to Century's Patio and Kingsway, the Alden to the Merrick, Jamaica, and the Fantasy, Rockville Center, and the 81st to the Riverside, Beason, Nemo and Stoddard, Springer & Cocalis and Skouras first runs.

"Page Miss Glory" will be the first Warner picture to be available to the circuit.

Rogers Insurance Total $530,000, Asserts Jones

Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corp. and long an intimate friend of the late Will Rogers, revealed this week that he had been authorized by Mrs. Rogers to announce her husband carried only $530,000 insurance. Mr. Jones quoted Mrs. Rogers as saying early reports immediately after the humorist's death that she had been paid $2,500,000 by Lloyds, Ltd., of London, on an accident policy, were erroneous.

Carl Erickson Dies

Carl Erickson, writer, is dead. He was 27 years old and had started at Warner Bros. as a reader seven years ago. He had been an assistant story editor and recently wrote the scripts of "Black Fury" and "Doctor Socrates."

Alfred F. Wolson Dies

Alfred F. Wolfson, 63, father of Fred J. Wolfson, former impartial code board member, died in Chicago August 26th.

Frank Biere Passes

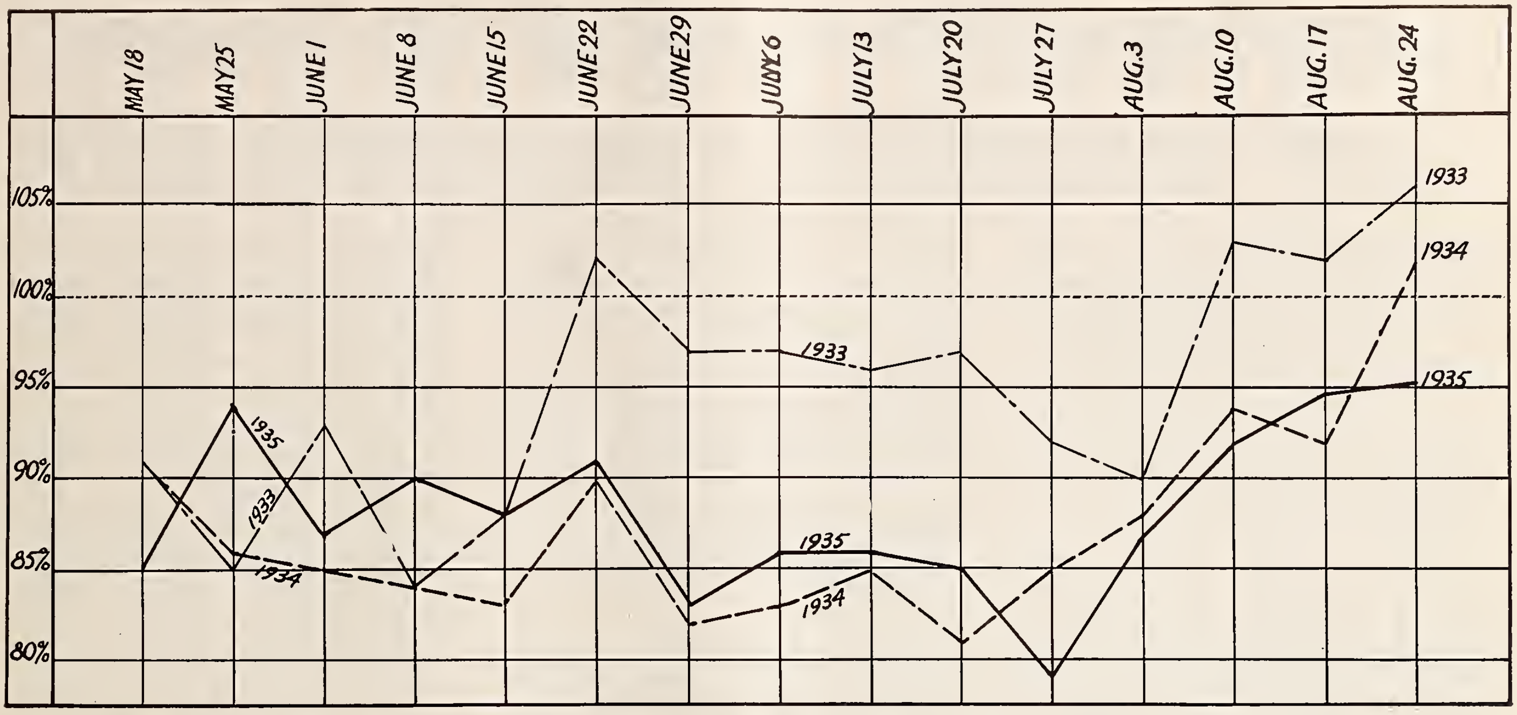
Frank Biere, 68, projectionist, died at his home in St. Louis. He had been under a physician's care for about two weeks.

Long's Ashes Scattered

Ray Long's ashes this week were scattered on the Pacific by Peter B. Kyne, Roy Howard, newspaper publisher, and Ray Long, Jr.

MGM Signs Five

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has announced new contracts signed with William Wellman, director, Freddie Bartholomew, Jackie Cooper, Nat Pendleton and Robert Benchley.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in twelve key cities during the fifteen week period in 1935, from May 18 to August 24, with the receipts from the same cities during the corresponding weeks of 1934 and 1933. The 100% line represents the average weekly business done in the given cities during the entire year of 1933. The cities used are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland and San Francisco.

Circuits Plan Move To Halt Double Bills

A number of unaffiliated circuits in New York are considering a plan to call a mass meeting of all exhibition interests in a move to eliminate multiple feature programs. The plan was formulated following the adoption by Loew's and RKO of double features in practically all theatres in Greater New York. This announcement leaves about 15 houses on a single feature policy, the lowest in New York in a decade.

Major circuits contend that they have been forced to double in first run houses because second and third runs not only show double features for 15 cents, which is from 40 to 60 cents below the prices charged by de luxe neighborhood theatres, but also resort to booking revivals on Friday and Saturday nights, making three features on a single program, without increasing admission prices.

Columbia Votes Dividend

Columbia Pictures' board of directors, at its meeting held August 29th, declared a quarterly dividend of 25 cents per share on the common stock, payable October 1st, to the stockholders and voting trust certificate holders of record as of September 18th.

Glett Promoted by Audio

Charles L. Glett has been made production manager of Audio Productions, Inc., by W. A. Bach, president. He will have charge of the trick photography and optical departments, headed by Alex Gansell, and the cartoon animation department, headed by H. L. Roberts.

Council Holds City To Two Theatres

By the terms of an ordinance adopted by the city commissioners at their regular meeting last week, Panama City, Fla., is limited to two motion picture theatres until the population of the city attains a greater figure than it is at present.

The ordinance provides that the mayor shall have the power and authority to bar and ban all shows which in his judgment shall be unsuitable for exhibition or display. That he shall have the right to demand a preview of all films to be shown in Panama City and to call in a dozen others to view these pictures with himself.

While the number of theatres shall be limited to one to each 5,000 of population, it is provided that any such theatre already in operation at the time of the passage of the ordinance shall not be closed. Any violation of the ordinance is punishable by a fine of not more than $300 or imprisonment at hard labor on the streets of the town for a term not to exceed 60 days, or both.

Maryland Increases Censor Board Members

Two additional inspectors have been added to the Maryland State Board of Motion Picture Censors, increasing the membership to seven. The additions were believed necessary by Dr. Ben Paul Sandy, chairman, because of extra work now being done by the board. Funds for the retention of the new members were obtained by reducing the salaries of the original five.

RCA Salesmen Meet In Camden

Sales representatives of RCA Photophone met in Camden, N. J., Wednesday and Thursday. Some 45 members attended, with E. M. Harley, RCA sales manager, in charge. E. T. Cunningham, president of RCA Manufacturing Company, of which Photophone is a division, delivered the opening address.

Ted Wallerstein spoke on recording, John K. West on 16mm. sales, F. B. Ostman on servicing and Thomas F. Joyce on publicity. Other speakers discussed engineering, commercial sound sales and a Sonotone representative spoke on the aid-for-hearing device.

Schine Opens New Theatre

Schine's New Strand theatre at Hudson Falls, N. Y. opened over the weekend with ceremonies that were marred by the occurrence of trouble in the middle of the program on an electric power circuit just outside of the building. The theatre manager, Warren J. Frair, his supervisor, William Heiss, and Fred S. Rogers, a local master of ceremonies, rigged up an emergency lighting apparatus and proceeded with a program which was featured by community singing and an amateur hour.

Addresses were delivered by Mayor John A. Fitzgerald and Joseph R. MacLaren, secretary of the Hudson Falls Chamber of Commerce.

Myrna Loy Returns to MGM

Myrna Loy has returned to Hollywood to resume work at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer under the same terms as applied to her old contract, according to J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of MGM.

UNION PEACE ON LABOR DAY MARRED BY $550,000 N. Y. PICKETING SUITS

Independent Exhibitors File Seven Court Actions, Blaming Operators for Lost Patronage; Danbury Hat Ruling Precedent

Labor Day this year was marked by comparative quiet in motion picture labor circles, bringing, as it usually does, the climax to negotiations for new wage-and-hour agreements between exhibitors and projectionists, stagehands and musicians.

New York continued, as it has for weeks, to be the lone storm center, blowing up discord and strife that struck both sides as the fight over new wage scales continued between circuits and Operators' Local 306. Here, too, organized labor's picketing rights hung in the balance when independent exhibitor interests filed seven suits for $550,000 damages alleged to have been suffered by the loss of patronage blamed on picketing of seven theatres by members of Local 306.

Members of 306, prohibited by IATSE from ordering a walkout, named a committee headed by Joseph B. Basson, president of 306, to confer in Washington with George E. Browne, head of the International, to get the order rescinded.

There was not another conflict of consequence in the entire country, an unusual situation to exist on Labor Day, when new labor agreements usually expire. There was some picketing by unionists on strike duty after they had failed to get together with owners in Hollywood and Philadelphia, but in Cleveland, Detroit, Kansas City and Pittsburgh new agreements were effected peacefully and the relations of labor and exhibitor continued uninterrupted. Milwaukee interests were still dickering.

Arbiters Resume Discussions

The picketing situation in New York, where arrests have been made by the hundreds, was still tense as circuit and union officials continued to try to arrive at a solution to a conflict which started three weeks ago, when RKO, Loew's and Skouras circuits ordered a 40 per cent wage reduction. A citywide strike was averted when arbitration began. The conferees were deadlocked twice during the week, but discussions were resumed after Labor Day. Local 306 operators remained at their posts.

Local 306 asked 38 unaffiliated circuits to consider negotiations for replacement of Empire Union operators with members of 306.

The magistrates' courts in New York were crowded with picketing cases. Judge Capshaw withdrew from one, involving 25 pickets, suggesting the substitution of another jurist, which caused postponement until September 14th. Local 306 had asked the supreme court for an injunction to prevent him from hearing further cases.

The union on several occasions indicated that it would take appropriate action if the owners fail to come to terms. Some 300 theatres in the Metropolitan area are involved. A peace offer of a 98-cent minimum hourly rate and a maximum of $1.60 an hour was rejected by the union over the weekend.

Six of the seven suits filed in New York against Local 306 for picketing were instituted by Harry Brandt, in whose Audubon theatre, Washington Heights, a smoke bomb was exploded Monday. He estimated patronage losses, due to picketing, at $75,000 each at his Globe, Times Square, Park, Liberty, Central and Colony (Queens) theatres.

The seventh suit, filed by Rudolph Sander, asked $100,000 damages for his Sander theatre in Brooklyn.

Terming the actions "merely nuisance suits," Joseph D. Basson, president of Local 306, nevertheless called them "proof of the success of our picketing and the public support given the union against long-standing foes of union labor."

Milton Weisman, counsel for the Independent Theatre Owners of New York, acted for the complaining exhibitors. The complainants cited the actions as unprecedented in their nature, and indicated, through Mr. Weisman, that they were intended to force Local 306, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, out of business.

The suits were filed in the New York County supreme court, and Mr. Weisman said he would ask for an early trial.

"We hope to establish new law on the subject," Mr. Weisman said. "We will argue that common sense and the ordinary course of human events indicate the responsibility of Local 306 for the bombing and stench bombs." Thus was Mr. Weisman quoted in the New York Post.

He said that the Danbury hat case would be used as an authority in the present action. In the Danbury case, famous in labor history, 186 hatters were assessed $250,000 damages for a boycott in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The boycott consisted of appeals to fellow unionists and to consumers not to patronize non-union hat manufacturers.

Mr. Basson came back with the observation that "long after these suits are forgotten, Local 306 will still be protecting the interest of the motion picture operators."

Philadelphia Musicians' Strike

Philadelphia witnessed the only other Labor Day union trouble of any consequence, and there only two theatres, both deluxe runs, however, were involved in a strike by musicians who seek increased musicians' personnel on Stanley-Warner neighborhood staffs, a demand which was refused, causing the musicians of the company's Earle and Fox theatres to strike. Straight picture policies appeared to be in store for both the Earle and the Fox until the dispute is adjusted.

Philadelphia Musicians Strike; New Agreements with Unions Effected at Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit and Kansas City

Stanley and union musicians effected a new arrangement in Pittsburgh, and in Cleveland a new one-year agreement was made between musicians and first-run theatres, although in that city operators and stagehands still were negotiating. Detroit signed new wage agreement with operators, to run two years. Kansas City's first-runs likewise were successful in continuing amicable relations with stagehands. No word was forthcoming on the results of discussions with operators in that city.

The Million Dollar theatre in Hollywood was being picketed, operators and musicians refusing terms of the management. In Milwaukee the projectionists continued conferences with officials of the Motion Picture Theatres Protective Association, representing independents, and with first-runs, who were proceeding by themselves.

Canadian Theatres Cut Capital Stock

Capital stock of five Allen Theatres, under lease to Famous Players Canadian Corporation for years, has been reduced under Ontario government sanction and, simultaneously, goodwill entries in the respective balance sheets have been proportionally sliced. The theatres concerned are at Kingston, St. Catharine and Kitchener and the Parkdale and St. Clair in Toronto.

Reductions were effected by cutting the par value of common stock, that of the Kingston theatre from $100 to $1; Parkdale common from $100 to $13; St. Catharine from $100 to $7; St. Clair from $100 to $50, and the Kitchener from $25 to $1.

Delay "China Seas" Pending Court Move

At a hearing before supreme court Justice Steuer last week on an application of the Gotham for a stay restraining MGM from delivering "China Seas" to the Dorset, a competitive house, the distributor promised not to book the film into the Dorset until Sept. 28, pending argument on the injunction move. Milton C. Weisman, attorney for the Gotham Amusement Corp., operators of the Gotham, claimed his client had first right to the picture and that MGM refused to deliver it to the house. The motion for the stay will come up before the court late this week.

New Portable Sound Unit for Locations

MGM will use new portable sound equipment designed by Douglas Shearer and constructed at the studio for filming location shots of "Rose Marie," according to reports from the Coast. The new equipment is said to be light enough to be transported by two pack mules and powerful enough to record a full symphony orchestra.

Skouras Adds Another

With the addition of the Englewood theatre, Englewood, N. J., Skouras Theatres has increased its circuit holding to 47 houses.

SIX NEW PRODUCING-DISTRIBUTING COMPANIES ARE FORMED IN A WEEK

First International, Pathe Holding Unit, Will Own All First Division Stock; Pickford - Lasky Company Formed

Ralph Fear Heads American International Pictures; Max Weisfeldt Over American International Distributing Corp.

Six new producing and distributing organizations, involving the accretion of considerable financing and creative power, augmented the motion picture industry this week. Chief among these were First International Pictures, Inc., organized by Pathe as a holding company for its producing and distributing activities, and the American International Distributing Corporation and its affiliate, American International Pictures Corporation.

Pickford-Lasky Company

The others are Pickford-Lasky Productions, formed by Mary Pickford and Jesse L. Lasky, to release through United Artists; Academy Pictures, headed by Victor and Edward Halperin; George Hirliman's Regal Productions, Inc., and the New Film Alliance, organized in New York to deal with films of an educational and artistic nature.

First International Pictures, Inc., announcing as its purpose to engage in American and European motion picture financing and production, will own all stock of First Division, which is the principal operating subsidiary. Robert W. Atkins, vice-president and a director of Pathe, which has completed its reorganization, is slated as the new company's president. Executive personnel of First Division will not be affected, Harry H. Thomas remaining president.

First International Pictures has a capitalization of 3,000 shares of first preferred stock of $100 par value, 3,000 shares of second preferred of $100 par value and 10,000 shares of common stock of no par value.

To Provide F. D. Finances

One of the principal purposes of the new company, said the announcement, is to provide finances which will assure First Division Exchanges, Inc., a permanently enlarged international production program, and for internationalizing exchange activities. Financing will receive Pathe support, and it is understood it will extend to Chesterfield and Invincible, which will release through First Division.

Thirty features and 16 westerns, the largest program ever released by First Division, are listed for the current season. Chesterfield and Invincible will contribute 12 features and six will come from British International Pictures.

Coincidentally, Pathe Film Corporation, successor in reorganization of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announced that certificates for stock and scrip of Pathe Film Corporation are available for delivery to Pathe Exchange stockholders, in accordance with the plan of reorganization, at Bankers Trust Company, New York. The common stock of Pathe Film Corporation has been admitted to trading on the Stock Exchange. Trading in Class A preference stock and common stock of Pathe Exchange, Inc., will be discontinued. These developments followed the vacating last Thursday of a stay obtained by Ben Hilbert, Pathe stockholder, against the reorganization, pending appeal from the state supreme court's decision against delaying the plan.

American International Pictures, Inc., was recently formed in California as a producing organization with a roster of 10 independent producers and with Ralph Gordon Fear at its head, to finance producers for release through American International Distributing Corporation. The distributing affiliate will release 24 pictures beginning November 15 and 48 features a year beginning July 1, 1936, according to Max J. Weisfeldt, its head.

Three-year franchises for territorial rights are being negotiated by Mr. Weisfeldt in New York. Cecil Maberry has acquired the Greater New York franchise and plans to have his exchange established by November 1. Mr. Weisfeldt said films will be furnished to franchise holders on a certified cost basis, permitting earlier split figures or overages from the exchanges. The distributing company will be paid a percentage out of the producer's share of the overages, and there will be no profits to anyone until cost of the negative is paid back, according to the plan.

Mr. Fear is president of both companies, while Mr. Weisfeldt is vice-president in charge of distribution of the distributing organization and will be in charge of general offices soon to be established in New York.

All facilities and equipment, as well as the studio and laboratory to be used by the producers, are controlled or owned by members of the producing company.

This is Mr. Fear's first venture in production, his prior affiliations having been with Universal in engineering capacities, and with Paramount, later entering camera manufacture. Mr. Weisfeldt is a veteran in distribution, having been western sales manager of FBO, later helping to organize Talking Picture Epics, Inc.

Pickford-Lasky Cooperative

Mr. Lasky is president of Pickford-Lasky Productions and Miss Pickford vice-president. The company will make five pictures annually for release through United Artists, but will be independently financed and will function as an independent unit. Organized on a cooperative basis, writers, directors and composers will share the net earnings, said Mr. Lasky.

Nino Martini and Francis Lederer have been signed to make two films a year, while Ernestine Schumann-Heink is under contract for one yearly. Lederer is scheduled for one musical. In outlining the program, Mr. Lasky suggested the possibility of developing Mme. Schumann-Heink into a Marie Dressler.

Mr. Lasky left Hollywood on Tuesday for Europe, by way of Chicago and Quebec, to complete arrangements for the production in England of one of the scheduled five films and to find feminine stars. Miss Pickford probably will join Mr. Lasky in Europe, and both plan to return October 15, when production activities will be officially launched.

Phil Friedman, former casting executive at Fox, is Mr. Lasky's executive assistant, and Maurice Hanline is the unit's story editor.

Halperins Head Academy

The newly formed Academy Pictures has leased space at Mascot Studios in Hollywood and is closing deals for release of a maximum of 12 pictures in the current season. The executive personnel is announced as follows: Victor Halperin, president; Edward Halperin, vice-president and general manager; George Bertholon, formerly manager of Pathe studios, production manager; Richard Carroll, story editor; John Hicks, comptroller and assistant production manager. Benjamin Solomon has been named secretary and New York representative.

Eight films have been announced, the first, "Storm in Their Hearts," starting September 9, and the list may be expanded by four pictures.

Eight Films in Color

George Hirliman has consummated a deal to produce eight features for major company distribution. All films are to be in color. While in New York recently, Mr. Hirliman organized a new corporation, Regal Productions, Inc., which is financing the series. The first story, which has a Foreign Legion background, is being put in script form.

A departure in production was made known in New York with the organizing of the New Film Alliance, Inc., by a group of New Yorkers who, they say, "feel that the commercial film has not developed the entertainment, educational and artistic values of the motion picture to their fullest extent." The group proposes to parallel the "new theatre" movement.

Merritt Crawford, former trade paper executive and writer, who is president and executive secretary of the Alliance, said it intends to establish a film school, a popular magazine presenting its views, and to give closed subscription showings of film classics, censored films and new foreign and domestic pictures not commercially released. Its program, said Mr. Crawford, also includes the formation of production, distribution and exhibition groups throughout the country on a non-profit-making basis.

James Shelly Hamilton, secretary of the National Board of Review, is vice-president of the Alliance. Edward Kern is secretary and Frank Ward treasurer. The directors also include Herbert Kline, editor of "New Theatre" magazine; Irving Browning, photographer, and Wallace West, formerly of Paramount publicity.

BURTON SPREADS WORD ON SHAKESPEARE FILM

Educator Addresses Clubs and Colleges on Warner's "A Midsummer Night's Dream"

In pursuit of a campaign to carry the appeal of its "A Midsummer Night's Dream" into strata which are not habitually represented importantly in motion picture audiences, Dr. Richard Burton, educator, lecturer and journalist of distinction, has been employed by Warner Brothers.

In spreading the word of the coming of Shakespeare to the screen Dr. Burton is engaged variously in speech making before club and college audiences, and the radio, also in correspondence with educational groups and organizations. The cognoscenti, the literati and the illuminati are to be told.

Long Career as Educator

The career of Dr. Burton has taken him into a long array of diverse but related activities dealing with the public now sought to Shakespeare on the screen.

He has been an instructor in literature, and Shakespeare, in the University of Minnesota, the University of Chicago, Columbia University, Sarah Lawrence College and Rollins College in Florida, with which he at present is connected. He has been a journalist, for eight years literary editor, and editorial writer, for the Hartford Courant, managing editor of the Churchman and a free lance correspondent from Europe for various American papers. He was for three years literary critic for the Lothrop Publishing Company of Boston, and has been literary advisor for Longmans, Green & Company of New York. For thirty years he lectured throughout the country. He was editorial advisor to The Book League of America and his special relation to the theatre is shown in the fact that he was earlier president of the Drama League of America and more recently, president of the New York branch of the Drama League. As a writer, his book titles run to over twenty volumes, three of them illustrating his flair for the theatre. "How to See a Play," "Bernard Shaw; the Man and the Mask" and "The New American Drama."

Meanwhile the Warner promotion of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" goes on apace in all sectors, and with Dr. Richard Burton taking the highroad and the high-brow, they point with pride to expressions from the fan magazine press, attuned to the movie millions with the box office habit, quoting thus:

"Robut, Earthy Riot"

Delight Evans, editor of Screenland: "The most important preview in screen history has just been held. . . . This occasion was a secret and exclusive preview of Max Reinhardt's screen production of 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' produced by Warner Brothers—the same producers who gambled on talkies, and won. This time they are taking a greater gamble—on Art. I hope they win again; and I think they will, because, thanks to their acumen in lavish casting, to Reinhardt's supervision, and to one Will Shakespeare, they have not only attained Art, but They Got Entertainment!

DR. RICHARD BURTON

"To say I was thrilled with 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' is the height of understatement. It is an incredible, eery adventure in pure fantasy: a dream of dazzling beauty, a rowdy circus, an enchanting spectacle, a robust, earthy riot."

Lawrence Reid, editor of Motion Picture Magazine: ". . . and we're warning you; it's something new in screen thrills Never before has there been a picture like it. Because never before has anyone dared to present Shakespeare on the screen and do him justice in the presentation.

". . . Fantasy has never succeeded very well on the screen before this. . . . But if any picture ever deserved success, 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' is it. Here is a picture that transports you into a world you have never seen before. . . . Here is great beauty, born in the mind of a man who died centuries ago, developed into something that all men might see and hear and feel."

The Broadway opening of the picture is a month away, and its general release after a career at roadshow prices is at least a year away. The picture is being exploited from the top downward toward the masses.

Doubt of Voluntary Film Code Grows

While the Voluntary Industry Committee formed last June by former Code Authority members has been unable to determine a legal basis for a voluntary code to govern trade relations in the motion picture industry and vacations have prolonged the inactivity, the Council on Trade Agreements announced in New York this week that the industry is one of 49 "engaged in drafting voluntary agreements."

"Very Difficult," Says Rubin

J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of MGM, who heads the committee, said this week it would be "very difficult" to draft a code to circumvent legal inhibitions including court decisions relating to arbitration and clearance and zoning.

"The Sherman anti-trust act presents a very difficult obstacle to the drafting of any voluntary program," he said. "Any plan that has been discussed has come up against the element of combination."

Mr. Rubin pointed out that while any code agreement would be subject to sanction of the Federal Trade Commission and enforcement by it, the Commission could not under any circumstances approve a code not in conformance with the laws.

Exhibitor opinion is sharply divided, while distributors see many legal liabilities and few, if any, benefits.

Sentiment in industries generally favors trade agreements, but there is a disposition on the part of inner-industry factors to shirk responsibility for initiating the necessary moves, said J. Noble Braden, secretary of the Council on Trade Agreements, which was established following the demise of the NRA by the Trade Association Executives in New York City and the American Arbitration Association. Where plans have been started, support of voluntary codes has been slow because of a tendency among group interests to defer action pending adoption of the proposed code by competitive groups, explained Mr. Braden

Following the voidance of the NRA, the Council on Trade Agreements drafted a tentative model agreement for self-government of industry and outlined the procedure under which it could be applied to individual industries. This proposal was considered by the Voluntary Industry Committee.

The Voluntary Industry Committee also has before it "an outline of a plan for voluntary arbitration in the motion picture industry," proposed by Tyree Dillard, Jr., general counsel of the old Code Authority and counsel to the present committee, providing for the creation of an "American Motion Picture Institute" as the central agency for a system of national and local boards to adjudicate trade practice and labor disputes.

Resume Discussion On 2,000-Foot Reel

Meetings were to have been resumed Thursday in New York by the committee of major company managers of exchange operations appointed to survey problems and advantages involved in the proposed adoption by the industry of a standard 2,000-foot reel. The committee has been gathering information on exchange equipment required to make the change to 2,000-foot reels, its costs and advantages to distribution.

Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the research division of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, sponsor of the change, will arrive in New York on Saturday to address a meeting of the committee and to supply additional information.

The operators' union of Boston is standing firm on its opposition to 2,000-foot reels, as proposed by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. James Burke, business manager of the union, said a notice had been posted on the bulletin board that states that any member caught using more than a 1,000-foot reel will be fined $50.

A number of Boston's larger theatres, however, are splicing and using 2,000-foot reels. There is also talk of orders for equipment to fit the longer reels.

Sunday Shows Condemned In Sermon by Dr. Warren

Dr. Paul C. Warren, associate pastor of the West End Presbyterian Church, Amsterdam avenue and 105th street, New York, in a sermon last week condemned the legalizing of Sunday theatrical performances. "The latest step in the commercialization of Sunday," he said, "namely, the legalizing of Sunday performances in the legitimate theatre, demonstrates again that once the process of making Sunday like any other day of the week begins it is very difficult to stop it."

"The fact is," he said, "the healing hand of Sunday was never more needed than in this day of mechanical invention, which, while releasing man from a certain amount of physical fatigue, increases the stress at the center of his mental and spiritual life. The burden of our life today is on nerves, not muscles. And so it is more evident than ever that the law of rest cannot in the long run be disobeyed with impunity."

Paramount Acquires Shorts

Paramount has acquired the short subject "Spring Night," produced by Tatiana Tuttle and has taken an option on six other subjects in a series. Lou Diamond closed the deal and announced at the same time that he had bought another, "Game Trails," both to be released in the Paramount Varieties series. "Game Trails" was produced by Jerry Fairbanks and Robert Carlisle.

PROFIT SHARING PLAN NETS MANAGERS $25,000

Famous Players-Canadian Will Continue System, Nathanson Tells Convention at Toronto

Announcement of bonus checks totaling more than $25,000, constituting tangible evidence of the success of the organization's unique sharing plan for managers, proved the high spot of the three-day convention staged in Toronto for eastern division managers of Famous Players-Canadian Corporation.

President N. L. Nathanson, who rushed back from Europe to arrive for the closing day's sessions, announced continuation of the profit-sharing arrangement for another year and declared his personal satisfaction with the results.

The Canadian system, as explained at the convention, differs radically from most similar plans. Tested for more than a full season, the first year ending July 31, last, the method has two outstanding features. Based neither on the net earnings of the individual houses nor on profits but on proportionate grosses, the manager of a small house has just as good a chance to participate heavily in the managerial melon as the executive in the circuit's ace theatre. In fact, the results announced at the meeting revealed managers of several of the smaller theatres in the top ranking group.

The managers' bonuses are figured on a percentage basis. At the season's start a figure is set for each house on the basis of the preceding twelve months' operation. That figure is determined by calculating what proportion the managerial salary bears to the gross total or admissions for the production, as his dividend for showmanship. The manager receives a bonus representing the same percentage of the increase in total admissions during the subsequent twelve month period.

Personnel Turnover Reduced

Both Mr. Nathanson and J. J. Fitzgibbons, director of theatre operations, spoke enthusiastically of the practical value of the plan, one effect of which has been to reduce the turnover in executive personnel. Several managerial changes had been made, it was revealed, on the basis of the results shown by the bonus system during its first year of trial, these proving advantageous both to the managers concerned and to the company.

The profit sharing plan supplements a group insurance arrangement for the circuit's 200 managers, inaugurated by Mr. Nathanson some years ago and still in force, under which each manager receives a policy for $5,000 on which the company pays the premiums.

With the introduction of the profit sharing plan, and as a further aid to the managers, Famous Players abandoned the budget control system, particularly with respect to advertising expenditures, this being left to the discretion of the individual manager. As a check on unreasonable increases, however, at the end of each month the managers receive a statement showing how they stand in the matter of controllable expenditures, as well as the fluctuation in the gross.

Basic Salaries Not Changed

An important consideration in the bonus plan is that this extra remuneration is over and above normal salaries in each case and that it does not alter the basic salaries.

An interesting feature of the convention was that the fifth anniversary of Mr. Fitzgibbons' connection with the Canadian company coincided with the convention festivities and was made the occasion of special congratulations. Among the speakers were Clarence Robson, eastern division supervisor; T. J. Bragg, secretary-treasurer; R. W. Bolstad, comptroller, and James Nairn, publicity director.

Among the invited guests were Jules Levy of RKO Radio Pictures and Eddie Grainger, Fox Films. Film and theatremen from Toronto and other Dominion cities included Jack Hunter, Morris Milligan, Jim O'Loghlin, W. J. Bailey, Claire Hayne, Sam Brent, Haskell Masters, Mike Wilkes, Sam Glaser, Louis Rosenfield, Dave Coplan, Oscar Hanson, A. Perry, Henry Nathanson, Walter Hayner, Dewey Bloom, Archie Lourie, Leo Devanney, Frank Myers, B. E. Norrish and Frank O. Byrne. A list of Famous Players-Canadian theatre associates, district managers and theatre managers at the convention, appears in the managers' Round Table department of this issue.

Famous-Players Canadian managers east of Calgary will meet in Winnipeg for a regional session September 16, and on September 19 managers in the Alberta sector will met in Calgary, this to be followed by a session in Vancouver for the coast managers. Mr. Nathanson, Mr. Fitzgibbons and Mr. Bolstad will be the principal speakers.

(MGM)

Musical Comedy

Everything is new but the title and that has a convincing timely topical date. Lest there be any doubt there isn't the slightest vestige of this production being in any way a sequel to its illustrious predecessor. Everything is brand new, different and uniquely novel. There are a different story, new and different people, different, and more glamorous and beautiful production backgrounds, different but just as catchy music and something ultra modern in the line of spectacular ensemble dance routines.

"Broadway Melody of 1936" is a musical comedy romance; brimful of smart and clever comedy, alive with tuneful and sparkling fresh music; carrying a motivating romantic angle that, paradoxically in a musical comedy, is vibrant with human heart interest. It deals with Broadway folk—a stage producer and his amorously inclined "angel" who has ambitions to something more than a shimmering headliner; a wise cracking keyhole columnist and his dumb stooge and a "morning glory" girl, Eleanor Powell, sensational in her own right as a marvelous dancer, accomplished vocalist and straight romantic artiste.

The film's locale is the heart of Broadway: the producer's office, a hotel, a newspaper office and a theatre. The atmosphere is that which the public loves to associate with the settings. It's a comedy of stage and newspaper folk and all the fun, excitement and color, plus just a little gag dramatic contrast that goes into the popular conception of this kind of entertainment.

For story purposes, the yarn brings Irene from Albany to meet her old schoolday sweetheart, Bert Keeler, now a successful producer, with the hope that he will give her a spot in his new show. Bob Gordon is having a feud with gossip columnist Keeler, the main action of which is a series of blackouts after Gordon hits Keeler. So played that any one can see that Gordon loves Irene to the extent that he doesn't want her disillusioned by Broadway, he gets her to agree to go home. But in the meantime, Keeler's stooge, Snoop, has heard Irene mimicing with remarkable expertness Katherine Hepburn's lines in "Morning Glory."

Meanwhile Gordon is having trouble with his angel, Lillian, and more with his search to find a "name" leading lady for his show. To add to his discomfort, Keeler and his stooge create a nonexistent exotic French actress and by quips in his column gets Keeler in a welter of anxiety to meet the great lady. Through connivance with secretary Kitty, they have Irene under cover with Snoop acting as her French accented feminine secretary. Finally there is a beautifully presented dress rehearsal of Gordon's show in which, during the last hectic moment, the French sensation is revealed as Irene.

There is plenty of entertainment and showmanship in the story itself. But there is more in its people and the production values. Jack Benny and his entertainment is showmanship that is topped only by the featured debut of Eleanor Powell. Seen previously in a bit in the last George White "Scandals," her dancing and singing here is a value justifying no end of enthusiastic selling. The comedy that centers about this trio is grandly accentuated by the contributions of Una Merkel, Sid Silvers and June Knight with additional features credited to the expert snorer, Robert Wildhack. The entire personnel is an array of accomplished talent.

As this is different from the first "Broadway Melody," it is also different from any other song, dance, specialty, musical comedy spectacle. It is not the formula concoction of songs and line numbers. A fast, snappy, zippy comedy of love, life and laughter; of fun and frolic, it may well be happy news for any kind of showman of any kind of audience.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Produced by John W. Considine, Jr. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Screen play by Jack McGowan and Sid Silvers. Based on an original story by Moss Hart. Additional dialogue by Harry Conn. Music by Nacio Herb Brown. Lyrics by Arthur Freed. Musical direction by Alfred Newman. Orchestrations by Edward B. Powell. Dance numbers created and staged by Dave Gould. "Lucky Star" ballet staged by Albertina Rasch. Musical arrangements by Roger Edens. Recording director, Douglas Shearer. Art director, Cedric Gibbons. Associates, Merrill Pye and Edwin B. Willis. Gowns by Adrian. Photographed by Charles Rosher. Film editor, Blanche Sewell. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 90 minutes. Going Highbrow

(Warner)

Comedy

Replete with unusual situations, gravitated by the amusing sequence of events and cast with the full appreciation of comedy this picture should appeal to those audiences who like their comedy straight. In essence the picture relates the age old theme of the small town couple finding themselves at middle age with more money than they know what to do with, trying to break into New York society and willing to pay and pay to achieve their goal.

In the cast are Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts, Edward Everett Horton, Ross Alexander and June Martel. These names plus the comedy they represent, individually and collectively are good merchandizing assets that should present the exhibitor with sound exploitation material.

Returning from a vacation to Europe, Matt Upshaw (Guy Kibbee), Kansas farmer and his wife (Zasu Pitts) are approached by Augie Witherspoon (Edward Everett Horton), member of a socially prominent but financially decadent family. While trying to interest Mrs. Upshaw in some of the family paintings Augie hits upon the plan to introduce the Upshaws into society for a consideration. Mrs. Upshaw is more than willing and Matt, who grants her every wish, acquiesces. It's Augie's idea that the quickest way to facilitate the Upshaws' entry into society is to present their daughter as one of the season's debutantes. Not having a daughter, Matt finds one, Millicent (June Martel), a waitress in a lunch counter, buys a house on Long Island and prepares Millicent for her coming out party.

The scion of the socially prominent Marsh family, Harley (Ross Alexander) falls in love with Millicent and Augie, who has visions of wealth thereby, is highly elated at his success. But Millicent, unknown to them, is already married to Sam Long (Gordon Wescott), a former partner of her vaudeville days. Realizing that she loves Harley, Millicent avoids him. Believing Millicent avoids him because she thinks he wants to marry her for the Upshaw money, Alexander plans to go away and forget her.

This is contrary to Augie's scheme and he, to stimulate interest in the lagging romance, hires a professional actor to make love to Millicent, with the hope that resultant jealousy on Harley's part will quicken his desire to marry her immediately. The actor turns out to be Sam Long, Millicent's husband, which complicates matters, and Millicent, to avoid Long, runs away. Long tries blackmail and the Upshaws, Augie and Harley, who have taken a great liking for the girl, plan to buy Long off as the only means of obtaining his promise to divorce Millicent.

Augie, in an amusing restaurant scene, steals a letter from Long, proving that he previously was married to another and that Millicent is consequently free of any marriage tie to Long. Harley finds Millicent at her old job at the lunch counter, and with the aid of Augie and Matt, affairs are straightened out.

There is no reason why the whole family wouldn't enjoy the picture.—Mooney, New York.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Director, Robert Florey. Screen play by Edward Kaufman and Sy Bartlett. Based on the story "Social Pirates" by Ralph Spence. Additional dialogue by Ben Markson. Photography by William Rees. Film editor, Harold McLernon. Art director, Esdras Hartley. Music and lyrics by Louis Alter and John Scholl. P. C. A. Certificate No. 856. Running time, 67 minutes. Release date, July 6, 1935.

Public Opinion

(Invincible)

Drama

Narrating the theme of the woman in public life, married to a non-professional, her unwitting involved relationship with another man, the jealousy of her husband, the breaking up of the home, the gradual degeneration of the woman and her regeneration when, returning home to her son's sick bed, she succeeds in saving his life, the reconciliation of husband and wife, this picture moves slowly and ponderously, restricting its appeal almost entirely to women patrons and their resultant sympathetic attitude for the oppressed wife.

The selling values of the picture are limited and in this respect a clear indication of what the title implies plus the natural love of a mother for her child would appear to be its principal selling factors. The cast contains no names of outstanding marquee value but includes some well known players in Lois Wilson, Crane Wilbur, Shirley Grey and Luis Alberni.

Mona Trevor, operatic star, completing her season's engagement, plans a long vacation with her husband, Paul Arnold, famous bacteriologist. Arnold, calling for Mona in her dressing room after the closing performance, finds Carlos Duran, tenor of the opera company, making love to Mona. Mona quiets Arnold's fears, explaining that Duran had been forcing his attentions on her. Mona later invites a group of friends to her house to discuss plans for next season and Arnold, bored, goes out for a walk. When he returns he finds Duran embracing Mona. Arnold orders his wife to leave.

In a court battle over the custody of their son, Tommy, the judge rules Mona unfit and awards the custody of the child to Arnold. Mona goes to Milan to fill an engagement and Duran follows her there. The news leaks through to Arnold. Mona, undesirous of Duran's company, tries to drown her sorrow, causing the loss of her singing voice and dismissal from the opera. Her money gone, Mona does menial work and pays for her passage back to America, where she goes to the home of her father and twin sister.

While there Mona learns that Tommy, accidentally invading his father's laboratory, has contracted infantile paralysis germs. Posing as her twin sister Anne, Mona visits Arnold's home and succeeds in entering Tommy's sick room, unknown to Arnold and contrary to the doctor's orders. Tommy, on the verge of death, recognizes his mother and falls into a natural sleep, breaking the fever. The doctor, who has entered the room accompanied by Arnold, pronounces Tommy out of danger. Later Arnold, penetrating Mona's disguise, asks her forgiveness.

While the theme is largely adult in nature, the sickroom sequence may have general appeal. —Mooney, New York.

Comedy Drama

The human interest for adults which attaches to the problems and complexities in the life of a small boy should make for general audience interest and entertainment in this picture. At the same time, the fact that the production largely concerns itself with those child problems and with children, opens the way for the exhibitor to make a real effort to sell the juvenile element of his patronage. The picture is actually material for the entire family, with something to interest adults but with greater concentration on the children.

Against a combined—and contrasted—background of swank boys' military academy and orphanage for both boys and girls, the story recounts the life of a boy, at home at the Academy, yet with a feeling of friendship for the youngsters across the fence who have no parents; his loyalty to his mother when she is sent to jail for something she had not done; his effort to keep from her his knowledge of the truth of her "stay in Chicago," and his return to the Academy and vindication of his mother's innocence in his own way. A lively boys' football game features the conclusion.

Romance has been relegated to an insignificant place, there being only the merest suggestion of it in the attachment that develops between the boy's mother and her attorney, who makes drastic efforts to have her released. There is also the entertaining childhood attachment between the boy and a pretty girl at the orphanage. In the lead is Jackie Cooper, popular youngster, supported chiefly by Mary Astor as his mother, Roger Pryor as the attorney, Henry Armetta for comedy, and Betty Jean Haney as the little girl at the orphanage. They are all capable.

The selling is likely to prove most productive of results with a concentration on the story aspects and the appearance of Jackie Cooper. Attracting the children should present no difficulties when the title, which is the boy's nickname, is tied in with the story's background and the football game. For adults the mother-son problem should open the way for selling to parents in particular. It has its tear-provoking moments.

Cooper, a cadet at the military school, is friendly with the next-door orphans, although he is criticized for it by another cadet, a young snob. When Miss Astor, who works for a brokerage house, is arrested and jailed for two years for the swindling of her employer, who has escaped the country, Jackie is not told, and believes his mother has gone to Chicago on business.

Eventually, through the activity of the snobbish classmate the truth is known and after being shunned by a few, led by the one boy, Jackie runs away. Then, at his pleading, he goes to the orphanage to live, using Academy stationery, with the cooperation of the commandant, so that his mother will not know that he understands the truth, and that he has left the Academy. Named captain of the orphanage football team, and with suits supplied by the kindly junkman, Armetta, the orphanage team plays the big game with the Academy. Jackie, after Pryor's promise, had expected his mother, and plays badly when she does not appear. But at the last moment she arrives, and the boy, awakening, wins the game in the expected manner. Re-entering the Academy, he is promoted to sergeant, while the suggested Pryor-Miss Astor romance is understood completed.—Aaronson, New York.

Two For Tonight

(Paramount)

Comedy Romance

Decidedly a Bing Crosby picture, with all the attributes of his previous productions and supported by a sellable array of comedy talent this picture suffers for lack of a good screen play, continuity and consistency of action. Ably directed and photographed with distinction, the picture allows Crosby ample opportunity to display his singing talents. The songs, while not outstanding, are pleasing, and one, "I Wish I Were Aladdin," seems to be headed for mild public approval.

The things to sell are Bing Crosby and his singing, Joan Bennett, who plays the feminine lead, and the comedy element as characterized by the comedy names in the cast. Besides Mr. Crosby and Miss Bennett the cast includes Mary Boland, as the much married mother of Crosby, Lynn Overman as a producer of plays, Thelma Todd as an actress, and Ernest Cossart as butler extraordinary.

The story concerns the efforts of Miss Boland and her three sons, the three being of separate fathers, in an endeavor to replenish their now totally nil funds. To this end Crosby has written a song which he hopes to have published, but he is unsuccessful in his efforts to see the song publisher. The brothers hit on the plan of bearding the publisher in his country home and there overcome his prejudices with the rendition of the song by Crosby. Planting himself in a tree, Crosby sings the song, unware that the publisher, sitting directly under the tree, is totally deaf.

When a plane crashes into the tree and all but falls in the publisher's lap, while he blissfully reads the paper, the brothers realize the futility of their plan and Crosby, injured, is sent to the hospital to recover. While recuperating Crosby is visited by Miss Boland, who tells him of her efforts to obtain a promise of a large sum of money from the pilot. In a devious manner Crosby meets Joan Bennett and learns that she was piloting the plane.

Crosby is pushed into writing a play. Ernest Cossart advises him to live the play, and Crosby, to gain personal experience, takes Thelma Todd, who has missed a boat, to a night club.

Thinking that Crosby cares more for Thelma than he does for her, Joan runs away and Crosby realizing he loves Joan, follows. Eventually they meet and are reconciled.

Pitcairn Island

M-G-M

Exciting Exploration Short

When MGM's "Mutiny on the Bounty" expedition set off into the remote Pacific its purpose was to film sequences for that romantic production. But casting the production net into those far seas the picture makers incidentally have landed a short picture extraordinary in "Pitcairn Island," which was the refuge of the mutineers and has been the home of their descendants ever since. It comes to the screen now as a dividend of production enterprise, bringing fascinating fact report on a spot which tradition and history have these many years conspired to weave into a seeming of fictional fancy.

This short gets its placement in time and geography with a dash of the reconstruction of the days when the Bounty sailed the seas, and then the camera goes ashore among the Pitcairn islanders of today, exploring their land, revealing their customs and manner of living.

The history of the few white mutineers, and the natives who joined them, is traced in the picture, and particularly interesting are the scenes showing the care taken in developing the children, all affected by the intermarriage of families. Interest is accented at the end by the drama surrounding the saving of a baby's life by the timely arrival of a ship. Running time, 10 minutes.

THE YEAR'S OUTSTANDING ROMANTIC COMEDY!

A perfect blending romance, action, suspense and uproarious fun!

It tops all romantic comedies ever produced with its daring theme, its timeliness, its unique story! It is bound to start a cycle of similar productions... so novel, so different is its idea!

Give yourself and family a treat! You'll laugh, you'll cry, you'll thrill as this picture unreels its gay, adventurous tale of two young lovers who ran away from trouble in a motor trailer but picked up more trouble along the way.

Its ever-increasing excitement, its fast moving tempo, make RED SALUTE a memorable screen achievement. You can't afford to miss

Reproduced on these pages are two advertisements on "RED SALUTE." One, (on the left) was written because we really feel that way about the picture and because a preview audience registered a like enthusiasm. In it, we honestly attempt to transmit to the public some of the pleasure we experienced while screening it.

The advertisement on the right makes no claims for the picture. It merely states that it is a romantic comedy and relies on the essential quality of the production itself to stimulate word-of-mouth selling.

We feel, however, that you know your public best and are, therefore, putting the problem up to you. The question is: Does a great production need the support of superlatives in advertising or can it sustain itself at the box-office on the basis of merit alone with the aid of simple announcement advertising?

G-B SUPER CINEMAS TO GET HYAMS HOUSES

And British Trade Wonders Why That Procedure Was Not Followed Half Year Ago

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Announcement of the formation of Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, Ltd., to acquire the three H & G (Hyams) London supers, the Trocadero, Troxy and Trocette, registers a new, though possibly not a final development in a conflict between the Kinematograph Renters' Society and the biggest British circuit, a conflict which, six months ago, was a major trade sensation.

G-B at that time said it had acquired interests in H & G Kinemas, Ltd., and in Union Cinemas, Ltd., that A. W. Jarrett would be added to the boards of these companies and that he would book the theatres in conjunction with the G-B circuit.

Comment on Deal Is Cautious

The KRS advised its members to refuse bookings except through the original owners, and ultimately G-B announced it could not proceed with the plan.

Comment on the new deal in distributing circles is cautious. There seems no reason to anticipate objection from the KRS to a transaction which meets its demands for a "substantial financial interest" by an assertion of ownership. To many the surprising thing will be that G-B did not present the original deal in a form of such unexceptionable legality. There is little doubt that it over-estimated its strength on that occasion.

Under the new arrangement definite ownership of the three H & G theatres is established in the G-B subsidiary, Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, Ltd.; of this the directors are Mark Ostrer, A. W. Jarrett, Maurice Ostrer, Phil Hyams, Sid Hyams and A. J. Gale—a 50-50 representation of G-B and H & G interests. The capital is £400,000 ($2,000,000), but £700,000 is said to be involved in the deal, and there is a general expectation that the Edmonton and West Norwood houses of H & G later will be transferred. The seating capacities are: Trocadero, 3,500; Troxy, 3,500; Troc-ette, 2,500; Edmonton, 3,600, and West Norwood, 2,100.

Union Cinemas, Ltd., which played an important part in the original controversy, is also in the news this week, having absorbed 30 new theatres, including the nine controlled by W. Southan Morris, who now becomes general manager of Union, three halls of Dan Benjamin and a number of independent properties, some of them big seaters, both active and in erection. There is an expectation of further additions and Union, already 80 strong, looks like reaching the hundred during the year. Its expansion program involves something like £1,000,000.

Producers Discuss Films Act

A meeting of British producers, to discuss the situation created by the approaching expiration (1938) of the Cinematograph Films Act, was held at the instance of the Federation of British Industries. The meeting is known to have considered the possibility of amendments.

General expectation is that the FBI Film Group, expressing the view of all classes of British producers, will press for continuation of the Act with the Quota stipulation stabilized at 20 per cent but strengthened by a minimum cost clause. Simon Rowson probably foreshadowed official policy in a recent paper, in which he put the minimum at £10,000.

The uncertain factor is the attitude of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association. At the moment, CEA policy is definitely hostile to extension or even maintenance of the quota. A demand for a reduction of the 20 per cent to half that figure has been put forward, and exhibitors' meetings are loud with complaints of the inadequate quality of many registered British films.

C. M. Woolf Plan Grows

Following on the announcement of C. M. Woolf's appointment as managing director of British & Dominions, Herbert Wilcox Productions, Ltd., the independent unit formed by the director of productions of B & D., broke the news that Mr. Woolf would be its chairman and that distribution of the H. W. product would be through General Film Distributors.

Mr. Woolf already had announced distribution contracts for Capitol Productions and for City Films, among others, and there is a general belief, which appears to be well founded, that he ultimately may handle the British National release. In some circles he is also expected to make an announcement soon about American product for release in the United Kingdom. Even without this, GFD would have a strong hand. The first year's schedule of Herbert Wilcox Productions is based on an expenditure of £750,000; its highspot appears to be the Technicolor version of "Blue Lagoon." The possibility of a Bing Crosby feature, the engagement of Jack Buchanan and the re-establishment of the Wilcox-Woolf association with Tom Wall and Ralph Lynn were other features.

Capitol Film Productions, Inc., with a capitalization of £150,000 as successor to the old Capitol company, has Major H. A. Proctor, M.P., as chairman; Max Schach, managing director. Directors of production are Louis A. Neel, John Hopkins and G. H. Bultimore. The first year's budget is £600,000. The first picture is to be "The Nuptials of Corbal," with Nils Asther and Aubrey Smith starred and a feminine lead from Hollywood. Second will be "When Knights Were Bold," with Jack Buchanan and Fay Wray, followed by "I Pagliacci" with Richard Tauber, "His Majesty's Pajamas" with Gene Markey, two starring Ann Harding, the first being "The Lady with the Camelias," modernized; Dita Parlo in "Madamoiselle Docteur," Elissa Landi in "Koenigsmark," and a Jack Buchanan-Anna Neagle production.

This week Mrs. Leila Stewart, publicity manager of Gaumont-British Distributors, took up a similar position in the G. M. Woolf organization; Alec Braid succeeding her at G-B.

ABP's 10 Per Cent Dividend

A 10 per cent dividend for the year has been declared by Associated British Pictures, Ltd., the John Maxwell company controlling British International Pictures, Ltd., Associated British Cinemas, Ltd., Wardour Films, Ltd., and Pathe Pictures, Ltd. The 6 per cent final dividend declared last week follows a 4 per cent interim.

ABP showed a trading profit of £656,725 in the year ended March 31, with a net, after deduction of debentures, loan and mortgage interest and income tax of £373,753. With the addition of £149,699 undistributed profits of subsidiaries brought in under the recent consolidation plan, the amount available for distribution was £560,238.

ABP's total capital is now £3,550,000 in 1,550,000 £1 ordinaries and 2,000,000 six per cent £1 preference; of the latter 600,000 have been issued since the close of that financial year.

The theatres under ABP control now number 225, the second largest British circuit. Its investment in land, buildings, plant, and so on, including the Elstree studios, is valued at £5,870,652 in the balance sheet; productions in hand or completed are listed at £551,128.

Trans Lux In U K

Formal registration of Trans-Lux, Ltd., reveals that the directorate is composed of Will Evans, the old G-B theatre chief, as chairman, with Peter Aitken (a son of Lord Beaverbrook) and Norman Holden (a son of Sir Edward Holden, of the Midland Bank, Ltd.).

Opinion in British trade circles is generally favorable to standardization of a larger reel, on the lines indicated in the recommendations of the SMPE, but there is a tendency to think a 2,000-foot reel too large. A number of those practically engaged in dispatch and laboratory departments would have preferred standardization on the basis of 1,500 to 1,700 feet.

Expert opinion gathered by the Kinematograph Weekly and published in that paper, while indicating the foregoing as a majority opinion, makes it plain that the British trade will generally welcome the change in principle as one leading to economy both in labor and in money.

The British Guild of Projectionists, which officially recommended a 1,700-foot standard to the SMPE, goes on record in favor of the double reel on the grounds that it will "materially reduce mutilation, facilitate handling on change days and make for better presentation."

H. Deeley of Gaumont British suggests that there is a greater risk of fire with 2,000-foot reel in standard spool box and also that the beginning strain may cause more breakage. He would prefer a 1,500- to 1,700-foot reel.

A. Bolton of Radio Pictures, also preferring this footage, sees a considerable outlay necessary due to the proposal that films should be delivered by the laboratories in 1,000-foot reels, which would entail scrapping of the tins.

Wardour Films' technical department, which has been working with a 1,500 to 1,600 reel for over a year, thinks the 2,000-foot reel will involve an unnecessary expense in the scrapping of tins and transit cases, and also cause complications with regard to winders and storage.

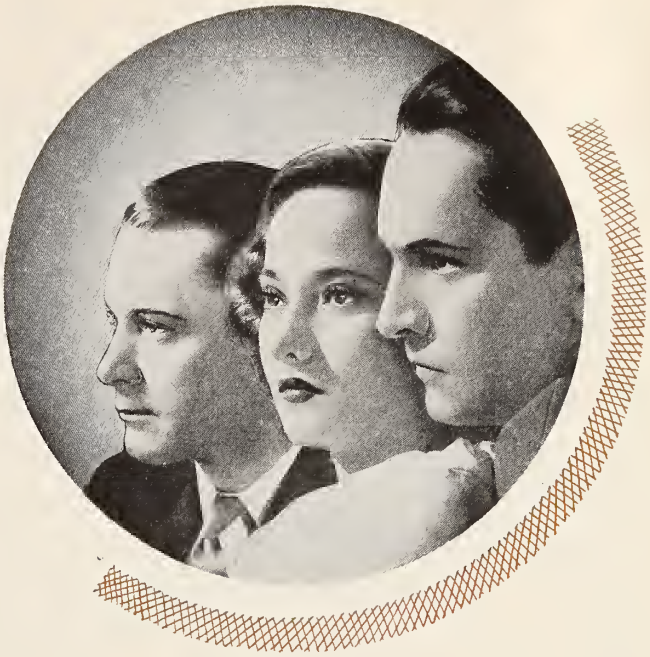
The possibility of having to reconstruct vaults is also seen as a serious difficulty by T. Young, dispatch manager of Pathe's.

G. Touze, of the Pathe laboratory department, sees a printing difficulty due to the necessity of cutting the ends of 1,000-foot reels of stock to prevent scratches in the middle of a 2,000-foot reel. He thinks stock makers should supply in 2,000-foot reels to make the new reform fully satisfactory.

M-G-M Opens Ad Drive In 37 Publications

MGM has started the new season with a rush of advertising on "Anna Karenina" that includes full pages in 37 national publications having a combined circulation of 34,000,000 and an estimated reader coverage of 100,000,000. Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity said the company expects to spend $2,500,000 on advertising during the year.

"Anna Karenina" is Greta Garbo's twentieth picture for MGM and marks the completion of her 10th year with the company.



Today

the world premiere of the most eagerly awaited film success of the new season will take place at the Rivoli Theatre, N.Y. It is a love story so heart-stirring in its emotional power, so enchanting in its elusive beauty that it seems destined to win screen immortality as one of the ten best pictures of the year! Samuel Goldwyn's finest achievement . . .

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

Broadway Hostess

(Warner)

Comedy romance drama, featuring music and dancing, the whole climaxed by melodrama, is the substance of this production. In line with the title, the locale is New York, its night clubs and theatres. Its characters are that colorful sort whose lifeblood is the glamorous color and excitement associated with such spots and the swanky dallying socialites who frequent them.

In content, with Winifred Shaw, seen in several Warner pictures, in the title role, it's the exciting story of a torch singer; her amazing rise in her profession under the stimulus of a devil-may-care gambler promoter; her intimate life as it concerns her relations with her sponsor and her piano playing accompanist and the amazing situation into which the combination of both led her.

Story is an original by Ben Kaye; screen play is by George Bricker. Frank McDonald, who handled "From This Dark Stairway," soon to be released, is directing. Songs in which Miss Shaw is featured are by Mort Dixon and Allie Wrubel.

Lyle Talbot will be seen as the gambling promoter, who, sensing the girl's great possibilities appoints himself her manager and starts her on her career. The role of the piano player is played by Phil Regan. Comedy is in the hands of Allen Jenkins, a specialist in that line. The people who bring melodrama into the story are Genevieve Tobin, now in "Here's to Romance," who spurns Talbot's marriage bid and Donald Ross, whom Talbot had befriended only to meet death at his hands.

Modern in content, spirited in tempo, being produced against lavish and swanky backgrounds, the story makes available that type of showmanship applicable to a swift moving and tuneful musical and also the more compelling brand commonly adapted in selling an attention-holding dramatic romance.

HANGOVER MURDERS

Tentative Title

Melodramatic mystery and murder are the principal ingredients of this production. It is adapted from a popular selling novel by Adam Hobhouse. Screen play is by Harry Clork and Doris Malloy, who have teamed on many similarly premised pictures for both Warners and Universal, and Dan Totheroh. It is being directed by James Whale, who numbers among his recent credits "The Bride of Frankenstein" and "One More River."

The cast is brimful of well known names. Edward Arnold, currently in "Diamond Jim;" Constance Cummings, Sally Eilers and Robert Young are features. The support, each one of whom is important in the story's detailing, includes Robert Armstrong, Reginald Denny, Monroe Owsley, George Meeker, Ed Brophy, Jack LaRue, Louise Henry, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Gregory Ratoff, Arthur Treacher, Rafaela Ottiano, E. E. Clive and Frank Reicher.

Localed on Long Island, presently timed, the story is ultra modern in theme. Following a series of progressive parties indulged in by the excitement-craving idle rich, one murder which leads to a series of similar crimes, all of which are shrouded in the deepest mystery, the situation is such that every one, even the most remotely implicated, are under suspicion. A detective, brought in, runs into a stone wall of amazing and baffling complications, to solve the case in unique and novel style.

Potentially full of the stuff that makes for chills and thrills, but not lacking in tension-easing comedy contrast, the story is being given elaborate production.

TO BEAT THE BAND

(Radio)

Though the title might so indicate and while there is quite a bit of music in it, this is not a musical. Essentially it's a comedy of a woman who dies and leaves her nephew $59,000,000. When the role of the nephew is played by Hugh Herbert, currently in "We're in the Money," and among the conditions of his inheritance is that he marry a widow within three days the possibilities for roof raising amusement and showmanship exploitation may be understood.

That quality is further intensified when the wealth starts a lot of chiseling in which the hero isn't averse to having a finger even to the extent of suggesting that a prospective suicide marry his best girl only to have the erstwhile sweetheart and new-found lover really fall in love; the estate to shrink to liliputian proportions and leaving Herbert holding the bag for a lot of bouncing checks and minus his sweetheart.

With Herbert the focal point of entertainment and showmanship interest the cast also presents a number of wellknown screen names. Included are Fred Keating, who in addition to appearing as the band leader also contributes a number of his card trick specialties; Roger Pryor, Herbert's would-be friend in need, who steals his girl, Phyllis Brooks; Helen Broderick and Eric Blore, who were recently seen in "Top Hat;" Ronald Graham, Johnny Mercer, Betty Grable and Torben Meyer.

Story is an original by George Marian, Jr., with screen play by Rian James. Direction is by Ben Stoloff, recently credited with Reliance's "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round."

Comedy in dialogue, action and situations being the keynote, it is the commercial element on which to concentrate in substantiating Hugh Herbert's name to assure audiences a fun fest.

ALONE TOGETHER

(Universal)

Comedy romance, highlighted by numerous hilarious incidents, is the tone of this production. It's the yarn of two lonely hearts; one who dreamed that one day her fabulously wealthy Prince Charming would come along, the other believing that one day he would marry a wad of dough. Neither dream eventuates, but the result of their stories promises to be a picture of exceptional entertainment value and showmanship worth.

It co-features Zasu Pitts and Hugh McConnell, who in their first and most recent vehicle, "She Gets Her Man," gives more than casual indications of proving a popular comedy team. Story is an original by Mann Page, in which Clarence Marks, H. M. Walker and Andrew Bennison collaborated on the screen play. Treatment is by Arthur Caesar, well known humorist. It is being directed by Kurt Neumann, maker of the recent "Alias Mary Dow."

In the yarn, Pitts and O'Connell, who live next door in the same lodging house, embark on an adventure in their day dreams and as much that is hilariously embarrassing to both happens in advance, they eventually meet at Coney Island. There they play all the games, ride the rides, slides, see the shows and colorful offerings of the famous commoners' playground. They fall in love. Parted, during a farcical episode, the spineless O'Connell becomes a he-man of destructive action to return to the solitude of his barren room only to discover that the light of his love is his next door neighbor.

With Pitts and O'Connell the focal points of all the production's fun, the supporting cast includes Walter Catlett, Thomas Dugan, Inez Courtney, James Burke, Mae Busch, Buster Phelps, William Pawley and Irene Franklin.

The motivating comedy is supplemented by several spectacular music and dancing interludes.

THE SPANISH CAPE MYSTERY

(Republic-M. H. Hoffman)

As the title graphically indicates, dramatic mystery, murder and suspense are the ingredients of which this yarn is being spun. Modern in theme and idea, being given elaborate and authentic production, and as a human interest love angle is included, it capitalizes entirely upon elements of demonstrated entertainment and commercial showmanship value.

The premise of the story is the natural desire of a group of inheritors of a vast estate to become preferred beneficiaries. The setting being that which induces the maximum amount of mystery and thrilling, chilling terror, a series of mysterious kidnapings and killings occur. The locale police called in, the atmosphere of everybody being under suspicion is generated. Up against a stone wall, more killings which automatically exonerate the watched suspects, result in the entry of a novel-writing crime solution specialist. Requesting a period of 24 hours in which he may test the practical worth of his fictionary theories, he nails the unsuspected culprit and of course wins happiness for himself and the heroine.

Production is adapted from a novel by Ellery Queen with screen play by Albert DeMond, and it is being directed by Lewis D. Collins, recently credited with "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" and "Make a Million."

The quality of story and production being engaging to showmanship minds, the unusual cast strength is also of interest. It presents such performers as Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Cook, Berton Churchill and Frank Sheridan in the principal roles. The support includes Jack LaRue, Huntley Gordon, Betty Blythe, Olaf Hytten, Ruth Gilette, Barbara Bedford, Harry Stubbs, Guy Usher and Frank Leigh.

Gentlemen:

We just played the first subject in the STARS OF TOMORROW series and we consider it the best amateur subject released up to the present writing. Very favorable comments were received in both Bloomington and Muncie.

We recommend that this subject be given preferred playing time in every Class "A" house in the country, especially right now, when everyone is "amateur-minded".

We felt you would be glad to get the reaction to this subject as it is one of your new series, therefore, we are passing it on to you.

Gentlemen:-

I am sorry that I have not been able to advise you sooner regarding the first STARS OF TOMORROW. I was away from the theatre over the week-end and this is the first opportunity I have had to write.

This subject was enjoyed thoroughly by our audiences and provoked more laughter than any subject that we have had on our screen in a long, long time. Exhibitors should welcome this short as it is entirely different, top notch entertainment and a great laugh-getter.

I'll never run a STARS OF TOMORROW with a two reel comedy again. We had a very good two reeler booked with the same show but the comparison was so great that the two reeler could not raise a laugh.

Yours very truly,

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

PRODUCERS FEAR SCARCITY OF OPERA ARIAS
THEATRES RETURNING TO SINGLE FEATURING
FOX WEST COAST BANKRUPTCY NEARS END
MUSICIANS AND OPERATORS ON PICKET LINE

THE problem of what to do with grand opera talent, once it is signed, is beginning to be a real concern to producers. Suddenly opera conscious, Hollywood executives are listening entranced as liquid trills pour from star dressing rooms, but, when the song is finished they wonder where on earth they are to get enough popular arias for such voices.

Another problem is plots. So far, stories for opera singers have been cut to much the same pattern: The star sings a few arias while having a terrible time trying to break into opera: a quarrel with sweetheart: an unexpected break and then the triumph at the Metropolitan where are sung a few more wellknown arias from wellknown operas. The formula has been eminently successful, but the thought keeping producers awake at night is that at the present rate of consumption, soon there will not be enough arias left to fill a picture.

Lily Pons at RKO-Radio, Gladys Swarthout at Paramount, Lawrence Tibbett at Twentieth Century-Fox, Nino Martini with the newly formed Pickford-Lasky Productions, Helen Jepson with Paramount, and Grace Moore probably are just the beginning of the singing contingent in Hollywood. Other opera stars are being approached by other studios.

In some quarters, it is felt that there will be a sudden impetus shortly toward the writing of "original" opera directly for the screen.

Back to Single Featuring

Four Hollywood first-run houses and six in the Los Angeles area are showing single bills this week. This is a new high for single billing in this territory for some time. Of the ten houses, only three have stuck steadfastly to single bills the last two years. These are Warner's Hollywood, the Four Star in the Wilshire section, and the Paramount Downtown. The others, which include Loew's State, Grauman's Chinese, RKO Hillstreet and Pantages, have had double bills most of the time.

News Flashes

Fox West Coast bankruptcy proceedings will wind up September 18th. Federal referee Samuel W. McNabb set that date for the bankruptcy discharge hearing following the filing of final reports by FWC trustee, William H. Moore, which outlined developments over the two years since the petition was filed. . . . Protesting wage scales reportedly 60 per cent under regulation, musicians and operators locals started a picket line in front of Harry Popkin's Million Dollar theatre. Robbins to Develop MGM Musical Talent

Jack Robbins has been named by MGM on the Coast to form a musical stock company with new singing and dancing talent. Roger Edens, a vocal coach, will be associated with Mr. Robbins in building the company, which operate similarly to the Oliver Hinsdell stock company. The plan is to give new talent six months of training, followed by roles in short product, then features.

Harman-Ising Finish Program; Start Four for New Season

Harman - Ising Studios, producers of MGM's "Happy Harmonies," single reel animated cartoons in color, have completed the final picture on the current season's schedule and have four for the new season in preparation. "Barnyard Babies" is the last picture on the 1934-35 program.

The first four of the new season, which are to be produced in the new triple-tone technicolor are "Busy Little Bees," "Santa Claus Kitten," a burlesque melodrama of the old South tentatively titled "My Old Kentucky Home," and another as yet untitled.

FRANKLIN OWN STAFF FOR CANADIAN PICTURE

Sidney Franklin, who has made "The Dark Angel," to be followed by "Marie Antoinette," will then go to the Canadian Rockies to make a picture of a community of natives. Mr. Franklin will write, produce, photograph and direct the picture. There will be no professional players.

Nickolaus Heads Nominating Committee for Technicians

J. M. Nickolaus, laboratory superintendent at MGM, has been named by the executive committee of the Technicians' Branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, to head a group to pick nominees for various offices of the branch next month. Others on the committee are: John Aalberg, Lawrence Aicholtz, W. Duncan Cramer, Arthur Edeson, John Hughes, Charles B. Lang, Jr., Gene Milford, Thomas Moulton and Robert Odell.

Ten Travel Films For Carnegie Hall

A series of 10 travel and adventure films, each accompanied with a lecture or comment by the person involved, will be presented at Carnegie Hall, New York, on 10 Saturday mornings, beginning October 12.

Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd will open the series by showing 9,000 feet of film made in the course of his last two years in the Antarctic. The subscription series has been arranged by Harold R. Peat, Inc., of New York.

United Theatres Adopt "Family Nights" Series

Four New Orleans theatres have decided to present family night programs following success of the experiment during July. These programs, designed for all the family, will be given at the Fine Arts, National, Tivoli and Rivoli theatres each Saturday night during the fall and winter. After school opens the programs will be switched to Friday nights. These are houses under control of United Theatres.

Cukor to Do One a Year

Beginning with "Romeo and Juliet," George Cukor is to direct one picture a year for Irving Thalberg at MGM. The contract was signed by special arrangement with David O. Selznick, to whom Mr. Cukor is also under contract.

Eleanor Powell to Desert Stage

Eleanor Powell, dancing star and the feminine lead in MGM's forthcoming "Broadway Melody of 1936," will fulfill a stage contract before returning to Hollywood and a newly signed MGM contract.

Amos 'n' Andy's Anniversary

Amos 'n' Andy celebrated their sixth anniversary on National Broadcasting networks last week.

More SMILEAGE

Gidgets and gadgets and flowery advertising words may attract attention at the automobile show. But it's the old road test that proves the real worth of a car.

And it's the old audience laugh test that proves the value of the short comedies you play. When theatres playing Educational Comedies show a 20 per cent increase in a year, there must be a reason. It's more power in the box-office star names—more smileage per reel.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 281—(A) What, in your opinion, is the most frequent cause of trouble in the projection room? That is to say, is it most frequently due to mechanical or electrical failure, or to some detail overlooked by the personnel? (This is a most interesting question; hence, since I would like to publish as many views as possible, I will confine this week's session to the one question, asking our Bluebook School students to think things over and answer fully and carefully out of their own experience and knowledge).

Answer to Question No. 275

Bluebook School Question No. 275 was: (A) What effect will low line voltage have on the amplifier? (B) What will be the effect of high line voltage? (C) What three general methods of coupling the photo cell to the main amplifier are in general use?

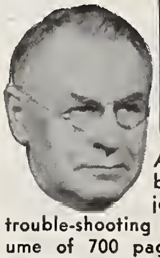
The engineers who prepared these questions answer them thus:

(A) If the line voltage applied to the amplifier be considerably lower than the voltage rating for which the amplifier was designed, there will be considerable loss in gain. This will necessitate carrying the volume control at a rather high setting. (B) On the other hand, if the line voltage be excessively high—say more than five or ten volts above rated pressure—the tube life will be greatly decreased; also there will be danger of burning out a power transformer, especially in hot weather. It is good policy to operate the equipment at as nearly as possible the voltage specified by the manufacturer. (C) First, a transformer coupling in which a transformer is used in the sound head and connected by means of a relatively low impedance line to the main amplifier. Second, a head amplifier placed on the sound head and used in much the same manner as a pre-amplifier employed in conjunction with a microphone. Third, a low capacity cable in which the photo cell is directly coupled to an external amplifier located near the sound heads and usually mounted on the front wall of the projection room.

The following made good (but first A. F. Sprafke, T. L. Dutton and N. Tatum should have had credit on question 274—apologies, gentlemen): C. Rau and S. Evans; A. F. Sprafke; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; H. Edwards; R. J. Arntson; B. DeVietti; J. Wentworth; J. E. Wyman; T. Turk; T. VanVaulkenburg; D. U. Granger; J. T. Ballinger and D. L. Mason; D. L. Sinklow; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; H. Pitchkey and M. C. Mellinger; J. and C. Hawkens; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; L. F. Evans; B. L. Stephens; D. Stellegos and G. Wayne; O. Thum and I. D. Ackerly; J. L. Davis; O. Davis and T. Turk; A. Hoskins; W. L. Stanley, H. May and D. N. Anderson; G. Bagby; P. L. Luther and R. Samuels; P. Lathrope; S. F. and W. Love; M. and J. DeVoy; G. and S. L. Thompson; J. B. Langdon; G. N. Bagby; F. H. Stanley; D. L. Morgan and T. N. Michael; H. Quinlen; B. L. Sarno and H. B. Roth; R. S. Conrad and L. Biello; T. L. Kenney and A. L. Hickey; D. R. Peters and D. Holler; B. Diglah; L. L. Jones and E. Williams; D. R. Bainbridge; E. Rymer, S. G. Dickerson, G. H. Biggers and L. D. Mason; T. Kelley and C. Cummings; D. H. Samuels and P. N. Farrell; L. Jones; L. D. Templeton; F. N. O'Brien and H. D. Bagby.

(A) G. E. Doe answers thus: "It can hardly be expected that an amplifier designed to operate at a fixed voltage pressure will produce the best possible results at any other voltage. If the impressed voltage be low, then the volume control must be boosted up to make up the difference as far as possible. If this cannot be entirely done, well it is just too bad. The sound may or may not be distorted or otherwise injured, according to the kind of equipment and amount of the fault."

J. E. Wyman says: "Low line voltage has varying effect on audio amplifiers, depending in general upon the type of amplifier in use. Generally speaking it will cause the 'B' voltage to drop below normal, causing a 'drummy' output. It will be necessary to operate the gain at full or nearly full output value, which would cause further poor results, as most amplifiers will not give best result when operated thus. If the tubes are a.c. filament or heater type, the filament or heater voltage will drop if the line voltage is below normal on the filament transformer primary. This will of course cause the tubes to operate below normal level, with corresponding damage to results and possible damage to tubes carrying high plate voltage, as for example those in the final push-pull audio stage."



F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

A. F. Sprafke says: "Amplifiers are designed to operate at a fixed, specific voltage. Any change either way cannot be expected either to improve the quality of the output or prolong the life of its component parts.

(B) R. J. Arntson says: "The effect of excess line voltage on an amplifier is to cause it to extend itself, so that noises and oscillations become audible. If operated over a considerable period this condition will cause tubes to burn out."

Messrs. Rau and Evans say: "High line voltage applied to an amplifier will cause distortion of the reproduced sound because of the tubes and other parts being overloaded. It also will cause excessive heating of the transformer windings, coils and so on, with a probably final burn-out."

(C) I find 437 answers reading essentially as follows, almost word for word: "The three general methods of coupling the photo cell and main amplifier are (1) by means of transformers, (2) resistance, (3) special head amplifiers." By comparison with the engineers' answer you will find this to be correct, transposing "low capacity cable" and "resistance," the latter being by impedance.

A. Sprafke makes the reply I regard as perhaps best. What do you think? He says:

(C) "1.—Transformer coupling: The P. E. Cell connected to the primary winding of an impedance matching transformer. It must match very closely if the maximum of energy is to be transferred from the cell to the P. E. C. amplifier. 2.—Resistance coupling: Transfer of energy from the cell to the PEC amplifier through a circuit of high impedance. A very sensitive system having a tendency to over accentuate the lower frequencies and short circuit the high ones. 3.—Impedance-resistance coupling: A combination of the two by substituting a variable resistor instead of a fixed resistor and adding a choke coil. Overcomes the weaknesses of the other two."

NOTICE: The engineers have been asking you questions. That is good, but I believe "turn about is fair play." I therefore invite projectionists to ask questions, either of projectionists or engineers. There doubtless are many questions you would like to ask engineers, or each other. All right. Go to it! If questions are received from projectionists, neither name nor location will be disclosed unless permission accompanies the question.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended August 31, 1935 from 99 theatres in 18 major cities of the country, reached $986,167, an increase of $8,502 over the total of the preceding week, ended August 24, 1935, when 99 theatres in 18 major cities aggregated $977,665.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We are fully aware that this won't be news. We are aware that it will sound to you are as being stale, but listen, Will Rogers has gone, and in his passing the world has lost a most valuable councillor; the rich and the poor alike of the nation have lost a valued friend; the screen has sustained an irreparable loss, and the family a loving husband and father.

We remember that it was written that "all that is born must die" but as we remember that, his passing comes to us as a painful shock, and as we bow our head in reverence to the will of the Almighty there comes to us a desire to place a wreath of American Beauty roses upon the grave of Will Rogers. His wit and philosophy have been the arrow that has pointed the world to higher and better things, and we, with millions of others, mourn his passing.

Corn on Skyscrapers

We are just in receipt of a letter from Terry Ramsaye, editor of the HERALD in New York City, and also a copy of the New York Times carrying a half-page account of the Girl Scouts of the city and outlying districts, having a roasting ear festival on the top of one of the city's skyscrapers. From this account it would seem that one of the latest New York fads is to go into competition with the farmers of the state by growing corn on the top of their tall buildings, and should this fad become universal we may expect that New York will soon look like a vast cornfield.

Our guess is, however, that the picking of sweet corn on the top of that building, and roasting it, was more in the light of front page publicity than in the light of education and charity.

We don't know anything about it personally, in fact we never heard of girls gathering corn on the floor of a 16-story building before. Usually they gather corn from the ground; in fact the girls seldom gather corn out here in the corn belt unless the old man has rheumatiz 'er sumthin', and we wrote Mr. Ramsaye our opinion of the matter in rather an off-hand fashion, and, among other unwise things, we said that we would venture that there wasn't a girl in the bunch but what had her fingernails painted red and could smoke cigarettes like a section hand. We also ventured the guess that not a girl in the bunch could bake a pan of biscuits nor pin a didy on so it wouldn't come off.

Jaysee Begs Pardon

Maybe we are wrong, about these girls. Maybe they are different from the girls out here in the corn belt, maybe so, and if we are we wish the girls would send us their pictures so we could show our girls what good, motherly intelligence looked like. We beg your pardon, girls, we certainly do, but hereafter when you roast sweet corn get down on the ground and do the roasting and leave the front page for more important things. God bless you, even if you live in Manhattan. Come on out west and the boys will help you do the roasting.

5,000,000 Dogs

We have just received a copy of The Issue, a new publication just started in Lincoln, Nebraska, by ex-Governor Sam R. McKelvie, and we note that one writer, speaking of planting that "shelterbelt" to "bring rain" to the arid west says that the government has "commandeered 5,000,000 dogs."

Gosh all fishhooks, Elmer, but that's a lotta dogs, but then you know that young trees need a lot of attention. If you've got a pup to sell write to the "Brain Trust."

Isn't it funny how unexpectedly things happen? We have just picked up an old issue of the HERALD dated January 24, 1931, and in the editorial section we note the following:

"Clara Bow is headed for vaudeville or the legitimate (so described) stage. Speculators rate her as a $10,000 a week headliner attraction in vaudeville." Well, well, well. Isn't it funny how events change? Later on we learned from press reports that she married a cowpuncher, but the report didn't say whether she was going to live in a brown stone mansion or "an old sod shanty on the claim." Maybe changing the name of our car from "Clara Bow" to "April Shower" had something to do with it, who knows? Anyhow, we have always felt that her cowpuncher husband ought to send us a new set of tires for April Shower.

Inferiority Complex

We also note in this same issue an editorial which, among a lot of other good things, says, "the greatest trouble with the motion picture is that some of the people in it are sufferers from an inferiority complex." By gosh, we are glad to learn that. We have been figuring for a long spell to try and find out just what ailed some of 'em, and now we know. The best remedy for this ailment that we know of is to put a bread and milk poultice on top of their domes and to have them drink plenty of sassafras tea. This remedy is also recommended for Einstein's "Relativity," and we might also add, the seven-year itch.

It may be of interest to most of you to know that, in our wanderings throughout most of Iowa, we noted one of the best prospects for corn that we have observed in many a year.

This may not be true of the entire state, but the portion we traveled (and that includes most of the state) it is true. We can't say this of all of Nebraska. Part of it will have better than an average crop but some of it, especially in our own immediate neighborhood, will be fortunate to husk more than one-third of an average crop, if reports of some of our experts are true.

Theatre Business Increasing

The peculiar thing about this condition is that business at the theatres is on the increase. Reports are that attendance at the theatres is greater than last year, for which no one seems to be able to give a satisfying reason. Maybe it is as one fellow stated to us last night that "The less we raise and have to sell the better off we are." That's funny reasoning, but he may be correct. However, the theatre business seems to be the only business that shows a marked improvement.

We have just found out where jazz music came from. The little German bands used to play it for the Kaiser's soldiers when they were on the "goose step" march.

Crooner-Quarantine

Last night one of our neighbors came in to call on us and we coaxed him to sing something for us and he started crooning a love-song, and the city physician came up and quarantined the place, and now we can't get out to go and play golf.

Gee-my-nently-kraut. Doggone the luck anyhow. We wish we could learn to keep out mouth shut.

We hope the boys in South Dakota and Minnesota won't be disappointed because we are coming up there pretty soon to call on 'em. We hope also that they will treat us as nice as the boys down in the Rio Grande valley did last winter. We don't expect to get any grapefruit up there nor any red fish, but maybe they will have some huckleberries. We expect to be there before this gets in print, but Ernie will probably throw it in the waste paper basket, he's so doggone particular that way.

Sonotone Offers New Stock Issues

An issue of 40,000 shares of cumulative convertible preferred stock of the Sonotone Corporation, entitled to an annual dividend of 60 cents a share, was offered to the public Tuesday by Van Alstyne, Noel & Company, Inc., of New York, at $10 a share. The stock is convertible at the option of the holder, before its redemption into common stock at the ratio of four share of $1 par value common stock for each preferred share.

A sinking fund will be provided, equal to 25 per cent of net earnings for each quarter, to be used for the purchase of preferred stock in the open market at or below the redemption price.

Mix Plans Four

Tom Mix, handling his own circus this year, said in Canton, O., last week that he will make four pictures at the conclusion of the present circus season, probably for RKO. He and Mrs. Mix plan a motor vacation abroad this winter.

Paramount Backing Play

Paramount is financially interested in the stage production of "Most of the Game," by John Van Druten, which will be presented this season by Dwight Deere Wiman and Auriol Lee.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien—A splendid, entertaining picture. Story good. Acting good. Singing good. Dancing great. I call it a fine picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—The best all around picture we have ever shown. Everyone was pleased. I would class this picture as a top-notcher.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland, "Pat" Paterson—A very good program picture. I believe this is the best one of the Chan series. Plenty of comedy supplied by Stepin Fetchit. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 25.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Played this picture the day after Rogers' death and had a fair attendance. Everyone liked it and some came to see it the second time. The best of Rogers' pictures. Played August 16-17.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Rochelle Hudson—Hats off to Fox. Here is a picture that every exhibitor in the U. S. A. should be proud of the opportunity to play. You just simply forget about all Shirley Temple pictures when you see this one. You can sell this one as her greatest picture to date and you won't go wrong. Give us more like this one. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Aug. 11-12.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—This one was his weakness. Only express my way of thinking. Others may see it different.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Good as usual. Had a big crowd. Larger than we have had on any of Rogers' pictures. However, this was due to the fact that we played this two days after the tragic death of Rogers. Couldn't enjoy it myself for thinking about the accident. The screen as well as the entire world has lost one of its greatest men. Rogers will go down in history among the other great men of the times. Adios, Will. Played August 18-19.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Played this while Will's body was lying in state at Los Angeles. Threw a little damper on our crowd, but we all witnessed the show reverently and appreciatively in tribute to America's Most Loved Friend. Had more good comments on same than on any Rogers' picture we ever showed. Believe he will be different from the ordinary actor, no one can take his place, and there should be no reason why his pictures should not be to the screen what Shakespeare's works are to the stage; be reissued and played forever.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Don't know how this one is. New Orleans sent me "365 Nights in Hollywood" instead without any notice. The "Scandals" had been advertised all over the country for two weeks, had a whoppin' house. At least it drew well, but my face is still red.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

GREAT HOTEL MURDER, THE: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe—No good and don't expect anything. Running time, 70 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—Slipped up on me. Played brand new and forgot to study up on it beforehand. Wonderfully clever all way through and pleased 100 per cent. Did not draw well, but had I known that the story was laid right here in lovely Louisiana, believe could have done some profitable advertising and ballyboo.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple, Joel McCrea—It is a blaze of glory for the kiddies. But like others here I say—I do wish we could see her again in "Baby Take a Bow" wth James Dunn. Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor, Zasu Pitts—"Spring Tonic" is just what you might expect, nothing. Running time, seven reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton, Karen Morley—A very entertaining little program picture that pleased my patrons. Running time, eight reels. Played Aug. 6-7.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—A fair picture but not near as good as his "Cisco Kid" role. Here is hoping they give Warner Baxter something better. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 28-29.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—Well done and amusing all way through. Lots of good comments, drew far above average. I still don't care much for Ketti Gallian. Seems very ordinary to me.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp—A good western with plenty of music and fun. Not the usual shoot 'em up and drag out type, but just a good comical modern western. Give us more of this type. Pleased one hundred per cent. Running time, six reels. Played July 26-27.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Gave general satisfaction. Well produced, but more of a man's picture, although it did the business.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker, Nat Pendleton, Ted Healy—This is a mess and a hodge podge, if you ask the audience. Healy and Pendleton do a Quirt and Flagg sequence that McLaglen and Lowe worked out long ago and if you can stomach Nat Pendleton doing baby talk to Una Merkel, then this is your meat, but I don't want helping, thank you. Some action helped but it did not make the grade.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery—Another pippin from Metro. Step on it big and promise first rate entertainment. It will deliver. Played August 16.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur, Lionel Barrymore—As far as our patrons are concerned, the cycle of G men pictures has run its course. We have previously shown two other pictures of this type which supplied the wants of our patrons along these lines. This is well done, but does not show the inside workings of the Department of Justice to the extent that it might have. Business poor and audience reaction mildly interesting. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 11-13.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—Here is a dandy. Book it and be glad to show it. Splendid.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell—It seemed to please and it is not so hard to please the good people who come to see good stars such as Harlow, Powell and Tone. But there is something lacking yet. Cut out the killing. Substitute trueness. Running time, 100 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

VANESSA: HER LOVE STORY: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—Just a tiresome, no good picture.—Running time, 77 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

VANESSA: HER LOVE STORY: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—A very fine picture. Great story and fine acting. Gave splendid satisfaction to all we got in to see it, but it did not draw hardly film rental. No fault of the picture. Played July 30-31.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda—Played this picture only one night and wish we had played it two, as it is a fine action picture and all liked it. Good entertainment for any bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Maureen O'Sullivan, Joel McCrea—Here is another you can be proud of. See it and ask some of the critics why they did not credit it with what it really is.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

Monogram

DAWN RIDER, THE: John Wayne, Marion Burns—A good box office draw from John Wayne, and he gives his usual fine performance in it. It begins to look like you cannot go wrong with John Wayne.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

GREAT GOD GOLD: Sidney Blackmer, Martha Sleeper, Gloria Shea—This is a fair picture. It has a good story and is interesting. The acting is also fair. Didn't do much on this though. Failed to draw. Also it was just a bit long. Played August 9-10.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Olka. Small town patronage.

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley—This is one of the finest pictures we ever played and we did the poorest business we ever did on a Sunday date. The story is very interesting, and the acting extra good. Will please any crowd, if you can get them in. Played August 11-12.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness, Emma Dunn—Either your patrons like Gene Stratton-Porter's novels or they do not. There is no half way in the matter. Ours do and turned out to prove it. This gave them just what they hoped for, a faithful production that followed the original story is every detail. Well cast, well performed, well photographed, but poor sound. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 18-20.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LOST IN THE STRATOSPHERE: June Colyer, William Cagney—Nothing to brag about to write mamma concerning, but it does draw well. It is mildly entertaining.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Arline Judge, Ray Walker, Jimmy Fay—Played to fine house and pleased, in spite of Jimmy's inability to act and Judge's forced acting. The plot was unique.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town patronage.

Paramount

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Arline Judge, Kent Taylor—Proved a pleasant surprise both from the box office angle and in entertainment value. Well done mystery in a new setting with the laughs coming along regularly enough to relieve the tenseness. Nice musical numbers help make this above average program ratting. Running time, 79 minutes. Played August 9-10. —M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—Well, it is a drawing picture. They come to see her in droves. But I cannot give this one a big hand as there is too much rough western shoot 'em up in it (in parts), but it gets the cash. 'Nuf said. Running time, eight reels. —Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Betty Furness, Richard Cromwell—This picture as near nothing as we have ever played in the last 20 years. Brogue English talking. Why didn t they name it "Sleepy Bill." It is a killer for your cash box. Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields—Not up to previous Fields', but will please enough.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett, Joel McCrea—Well, this Claudette Colbert is a big star at my theatre. She is refined, intelligent and I could say more good things about her, but I do not know her personally. But I do not like to see her in "Private Worlds." For it is a bad hospital picture with lots of doctors making eyes at her and I want to take a shot at them. Running time, 88 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Charles "Chic" Sale—Just one more picture. Running time, 65 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SHANGHAI: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Warner Oland—Pulled well but the patrons reactions were widely varied. The old "never the twain shall meet" theme is the basis of the story, logically carried out, but very unconvincing and decidedly unsatisfactorily so to the average film patron. Boyer and Young deserve better roles than this, for they were sadly miscast here. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 16-17.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—I cannot give this one a boost, for it don't stand for it. It is only a big bus carrying the show from one town to another, then it ends up with a gun battle. Just too bad to say anything more.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame —A very fine picture. Big story of the west. The stars fine. An all round big western drama, lots of action. A good one, I say.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

CHEYENNE KID: Tom Keene—This is a good, fast moving western. The photography is good and so is the story. Tom Keene is well liked here among the western stars. Roscoe Ates furnishes the comedy and is good. If your patrons like westerns, give this to them and they will be satisfied. Played August 16-17. —Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

DOG OF FLANDERS: Frankie Thomas, Helen Parrish—This is a fine entertaining picture for those who like a dog picture. The acting of the whole cast, including the dog, was fine.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

GIGOLETTE: Adrienna Ames, Ralph Bellamy—A very good picture, but we did no business with it as it had been played all around us and not strong enough for people to see it twice. I call it a good picture, though.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson, Hale Hamilton—They did not seem to get very much excited about the story of the old school teacher and her efforts to keep temptation away from her pupils. It is all well done and the ending is unusually impressive. Business below the usual warm weather average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Ann Sothern, Gene Raymond, Bill Robinson—Slow and draggy. Too much fixing putting on the play. Audience waiting for something better to show up but had to take a disappointment and watch it end with nothing to howl about. So we were closed up for second night showing. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—It will get the laughs. Same style as these two stars always put over. Nothing to rave over and nothing in it to build future prosperity for us exhibitors. Running time, 75 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—It is good of its kind, back in the 90's. But it will please. Running time, seven reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—This is the kind of a picture that will warm the cockles of your heart. It is a story book kind of a story, if you get my meaning, with a real story book kind of a happy ending. I want to comment on the outstanding work of Donald Crisp. Of course no picture could be as enjoyable as this unless every member of the cast fitted their parts. I double billed this with a Ken Maynard picture and also showed the last chapter of the "Phantom Empire," so as a whole did better than average, but I credit "Laddie" with part of the increased business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PEOPLE'S ENEMY: Preston Foster, Melvyn Douglas—Played this on a doube bill. A good picture but no drawing power. Barely film rental. I still say it is good entertainment.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne—Boy, there's only one word in the showmen's vocabulary that fits this one. You guessed it, Colossal! This happens to be one of the best all around musicals we have shown for sometime. Of course Astaire and Rogers were grand as usual. The patrons raved about 'em. However, they didn't seem to care so much about Irene Dunne's "silver voice." Anyway, you can't go wrong on this one. They'll come back the second and third night. Played August 11-12.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—A picture made up with big sets and a lot of hokum thrown in, that does not make good entertainment, and for me a very poor box office. Now then for your information we used four 24-sheet posters, over 100 inches of space in newspapers during the run of four days starting on Sunday, and was only able to get average business, and many walkouts on the picture, which is unusual in this theatre. The producer missed fire after showing tremendous application of grey matter in the making of this picture throughout. The brain that conceived it failed at the last to bring it to a satisfactory conclusion.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Two good stars but in a detective plot and it seems this kind of picture has had time to go all over this big world and the producers should know the public has grown tired of them and don't care to see anymore of them, so long as they live. Running time, 90 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

United Artists

CARDINAL RICHELIEU: George Arliss—Arliss as box office I think is all washed up. His forte is historical pictures and the public does not seem to care what happened to France so many years ago. It also was a wash-out at the box office and that tells the tale for any star, especially one that is as old as Arliss is.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce —This is one of the cycle that is predominating this business today. Good picture of its type but this and "Public Hero No. I," which, too, is a good picture, were played too close together to do us any good. They both have plenty of action, but the cycle hurts the box office for they deal with the G Men, and when you have three producers' pictures bought with dates scarce and all three producing pictures of like ilk it is not so good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce —A great Saturday night action picture—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Karen Morley, Tom Keene—Good picture but does not take well in rural communities as the farm scenes are absurd. Did fairly well with it, however. Can't understand why Senator Copeland wants every citizen to see it. Played August 9-10.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Amhrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Karen Morley, Tom Keene—This was better than expected. It is really a high class drama in every way. Stories dealing with questions of the day are usually not box office. This takes up the depression and offers something of a solution. One would assume that it would be hard to make picture entertainment out of a subject of this sort, but that is just what they did. It has everything, romance, thrills, suspense and as exciting a finish as one could ask for. As for drawing power, just a fair average. If you can get them in to see a picture with such a title, the great majority will be pleased.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WEDDING NIGHT, THE: Anna Sten, Gary Cooper—I have been telling this publication what the pictures have done for me for a long, long time. On some of them I say good things and on most of them it is hard to know what to say. So all I can say for this one is it did not draw, especially the second night, and when they fail to draw the second night you may know they are weak. Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant Theatre, Miss. General patronage.

ALIAS MARY DOW: Sally Eilers, Ray Milland—This is a very good program picture. The story is interesting and the acting of the stars fine. I call it a very satisfactory program picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff—It is a mixup of thrills and everything else that excitement calls for. Went over big the first night. Running time, 10 reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff—Great of the kind, but oh, what kind of entertainment. It drew very well and they liked it and I haven't got a thing to say about that. It's big and if you like to be horrified it has it.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff—A worthy followup of "Frankenstein." Of the two, this is better than the first. Karloff does better in this than in the first "Frankenstein." The technicians did a masterful job, and those who prepared the script did well. It is needless to say that the entire cast did well under the leadership of a capable director. Drawing power good. This drew an unusual amount of children during the midweek. Adult attendance was also better than usual.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Louise Beavers, Warren William, Ned Sparks—A splendid feature. Miss Beavers stole the show, but Miss Colbert, Mr. William and Mr. Sparks were fine. It's a tear jerker for fair. Rather long, so watch your shorts. Action fans may not go for it, but most of intelligencia will appreciate it and tell you so. Running time, 120 minutes. Played August 3.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MISTER DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe, Esther Ralston—Very good program. Plenty of wise cracks and three juicy murders and a corking suicide (or was it a suicide?) to round out the evening. Play it and please 'em. Played July 27.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MISTER DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe, Esther Ralston—A mighty good, entertaining picture. Interesting story. Well directed and well acted. Gave good satisfaction. Played August 2-3.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull—A picture that means nothing at my theatre. A shooting scrape, a man killed, tried, convicted, mob breaks jail and it is all over and I turn my audience out and they go home disgusted. Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—This is certainly a wow of a picture for a small town and ought to satisfy the big ones. Clean and very funny. Baseball fans ate it up here. One hundred per cent satisfaction. Played July 28-29.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Everyone satisfied with this musical comedy drama.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

DINKY: Jackie Cooper, Mary Astor—Just a "dinky" picture. Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts, Edward Everet Horton—I can't give this one much. Pitts is no draw any more and Kibbee, as I have stated before, is okay in support, but to head a cast he does not pull at the box office.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—A splendid picture. We shall bring back and play again. One of the best entertainments we have had for a long time.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Short Features

Educational

DAME SHY: Tom Patricola, Buster West—Another good laugh getter from Patricola and West. They are at the top of the heap for good comedy entertainment.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

DUMB LUCK: Easy Aces—Clever and well done comedy typical of these radio favorites. Running time, 17 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

FIREMAN'S DAY OFF: Song Hit Stories—Good singing and some comedy. Mildly entertaining.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

FOXY FOX, THE: Paul Terry-Toons—Clever cartoon that will bring the laughs.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GAY OLD DAYS: Song Hit Stories—A clever musical. Running time, one reel.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Japser, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

OLD CAMP GROUND: Song Hit Stories—By far the best we've played in this series. Civil War songs and background which pleased.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

SOUTH POLE OR BUST: Paul Terry-Toons—A very good cartoon with clever music.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

TARS AND STRIPES: Star Personality Comedies—All I can say for this one is fair. Running time, two reels.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

TERRY-TOONS: Well liked by our audiences. I believe the best so far have been "The First Snow" and "Flying Oil."—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

ADVENTURES OF THE NEWSREEL CAMERAMAN: Always good. "Man's Mania for Speed" seemed to please a little more than some of the others.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

BOSCO'S PARLOR PRANKS: Happy Harmonies—Above average color cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes. —M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MEMORIES AND MELODIES: Musical Revues—The finest color two reel of the year. Play it on your best dates. Stephen Foster's beautiful music with songs, dances, etc. We shall play this back a second time. Do not miss it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

ROAMIN' VANDALS: Musical Comedies—Good ribald comedy. Patsy Kelly the whole show. Support not so good.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mon. Small town patronage.

TEACHER'S BEAU: Our Gang—Here's an Our Gang that is a knockout. Don't miss it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THICKER THAN WATER: Laurel and Hardy—Average Laurel and Hardy.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

YOU SAID A HATFUL: Charley Chase—A very good Charlie Chase comedy. Pleased all.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Paramount

HYP-NUT-TIST, THE: Popeye the Sailor—The best Popeye to date. Give it preferred time. Olive Oyl, as the chicken, a riot.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

IS MY FACE BLACK: Molasses 'n' January—Will add to the entertainment value of any bill. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE SOAP AND WATER, A: Betty Boop—Just a passable Betty Boop.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MONKEY SHINES: Paramount Varieties—A day in the life of a young chimp. Entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 10—An excellent filler with some color.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALIBI BYE BYE: Clark and McCullough Series—A good comedy with plenty of laughs. Running time, 21 minutes.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

MERRY KITTENS, THE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—A fine color cartoon about the three little kittens and the dog.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SPINNING MICE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—A good color cartoon from RKO Radio.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

WATER BABIES: Silly Symphonies—A fine Silly Symphony. One of the best and that is saying something.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

DOIN' THE TOWN: Mentone No. 9-A—Another slick two-reel novelty musical from Uncle Carl. We thoroughly enjoyed it.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

GOING PLACES NO. 8: Lowell Thomas—Travel. Nothing outstanding. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HILL BILLY: Oswald Cartoons—This was a honey. Fine singing and plenty of action and fun.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

TELEPHONE BLUES: Mentone No. 11-A—Splendid offering of the variety type. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

ALONG FLIRTATION WALK: Merrie Melodies—A good color cartoon with an egg-laying contest in place of football.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LOVE DEPARTMENT, THE: Bernice Claire—Poor comedy.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

RIMAC'S RHUMBA ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A good hot band number with South American dance numbers. Pleased very much.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WILL OSBORNE AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A very fine band act with excellent singing and dancing.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

BETTER HOMES NEWS FLASHES: Put out by Federal Housing Administration. Folks seemed to appreciate it.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

Serials

Mascot

MIRACLE RIDER: Tom Mix—I have played seven chapters of this serial and it is holding up fairly well. The recording is not the best. Tom Mix is getting almost too old to act. Tony, Jr., does some good acting. Running time, 15 chapters.—Charles T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

PHANTOM EMPIRE: Gene Autry, Frankie Darro—Just finished with the last chapter and found this a very satisfactory serial. Held its own nicely during 12 weeks of summer weather. The last chapter finished in a blaze of glory. I advertised, " come and see the surprise ending of this unusual serial," and had the best children attendance of the summer, also a fair adult attendance. "Laddie" and Ken Maynard in "Smoking Guns" was also shown on same program, but I credit the last chapter of this serial with the main part of the draw. If you want a serial that is different, and cleverly done, this is it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Danubia to Open Season With Hungarian Picture

Danubia Pictures, Inc., will open its 1935-36 season with "Csunya Lany" ("Homely Girl"). Danubia Pictures has acquired the United States and Canadian rights to 10 Hungarian dialogue films for the new season. Three of the features have passed the custom office and the others are in production.

Danubia Distributing Corporation, New York, has been appointed sole distributors for Europa Film Company of Cleveland, Ohio, for the New York and eastern territories. The distributing company also acquired distribution and exhibition rights on three Hungarian dialogue features from Hungaria Film Exchange.

New Film Credit Bank Formed in Poland

A film credit bank will be organized in Poland, because Polish production is not able to provide the home market with sufficient domestic films. Producers who have not enough cash at hand will pay a certain percentage of the capital necessary to the bank, which then will finance the whole production.

The bank will also give credit at low rates for the building of new theatres throughout Poland. The newly constructed theatres are to be organized in a trust guaranteeing for the film bank a safe outlet for the productions financed.

A cooperative society for players also will be formed.

Anderson Takes Houses, Now in Control of Eleven

H. H. Anderson, owner of the Anderson Theatres Company, Charlotte, S. C., has purchased control of theatres at Dillon, McColl and Chesterfield, all South Carolina, from B. B. Benfield. Mr. Anderson now controls 11 theatres. He is completing another theatre in Dillon, and will continue to operate both houses there. Mr. Benfield will continue to operate the Ben's Broadway, at Myrtle Beach, S. C.

"Streamlined" Theatre Set for Columbus, Ohio

Following remodeling, Columbus, O., will have in the Grand the first "streamlined" theatre in that area. According to Harry Schreiber, city manager, the owners are spending $165,000 on the remodeling, to which RKO has added approximately $50,000. The house goes to RKO on a 20-year lease under terms of a deal just signed by Nat Holt, circuit division manager. The opening is tentatively set for October 1.

Members of the publicists' association got together the other night for an all-members meeting. Reports the next day were to the effect that it was an unqualified success. President Larry Stein said that the noon luncheons, which were a feature of the club before the summer vacation period, will be resumed this fall. Plans are now under way for the first anniversary party to be held this month.

Finger and Degen Remodeling Theatre

The New Gem theatre, owned and operated at Marissa, Ill., by Finger and Degen, is undergoing complete remodeling and redecoration for early reopening. The ceilings and walls are being covered with a new composition material to improve the acoustics and sound effects and the front of the orchestra has been rounded off by curving the walls toward the stage, to enhance the view of the screen from all seats. The entire theatre is being recarpeted. The front is being rebuilt, with aluminum work figuring strongly in the new decorative scheme.

Benefit for Sandler's Family

A performance will be held Saturday midnight, September 14, at the Savoy, Brooklyn, for the benefit of the widow and three children of Harry Sandler, operator at the Alba and employee of the Randforce circuit in Brooklyn 18 years, who died recently. Frisch and Rinzler have donated the theatre, and all managers of the circuit are assisting. Dave Newman of F & R is treasurer of the fund, while Harry Garfman of the Carroll theatre and Abe Feinman of the Parkside are handling ticket sales. Local 306 operators and all talent are donating their services. The entire proceeds will go to the survivors.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

THE 1935 GRAND AWARDS

As was to be expected, the announcement in last week's issue of the 1935 Quigley Grand Awards to be presented to the winners in Hollywood caused quite a buzz wherever theatremen assemble.

That the winners are to be transported via plane and are to have a full week in Studioland without question makes for an added incentive to those showmen striving for Award recognition.

Although we are not prepared at this writing to divulge the completed schedule of presentation and reception, it may be safely taken for granted that the two 1935 monthly plaque winners who are chosen for the Grand Awards will be honored by the production chiefs and their stars as no theatreman has yet been in the history of showbusiness.

GIVE 'EM ENOUGH ROPE

One of the reasons why exhibitor-executives hold down advertising may trace from the fact that every one of their managers is not the very best judge of whether or not the costs of a contemplated campaign or part of a campaign will return enough extra business to justify the expenditure.

And another reason for the general restriction may be laid to those managers concerned more with making a showing for themselves than worrying overly much about business. If their expensive stunts do not go over as anticipated, the one-way boys usually have some sort of a workable alibi in readiness to square themselves for the flop.

Unfortunately these cases make it that much tougher for the lads who can really deliver and this is why we would like to suggest an experiment that held down within reasonable bounds should go a long way in separating the strong men from the weak.

We would like to see executives call in the managers who justifiably or otherwise are blaming poor business on insufficient advertising appropriations, give each of them for a sufficient period a budget approximating the amount deemed necessary and speak somewhat thusly:

"Gentlemen, you have just won yourselves a healthy budget. Now go out and get the business. Drag in that extra dough. How, when, which or where is strictly up to you, just as long as you don't upset policies, burn the theatre or turn the place into a skating rink.

"If you hone to show your stuff, here's your spot and, gentlemen, you are on it. Proceed to produce."

Action of this sort should bring almost immediate results. For given enough rope, your hard-hitting manager will use it to hogtie a lot of extra worthwhile business. And with the same rope, making due allowance for uncontrollable circumstances, the weak sister may be expected to entangle himself in a series of revealing knots.

SIGN OF THE TIMES

Congratulations are distinctly in order:

To Myron Shellman, previously with the Mullin and Pinanski New England circuit and now on his own at the Raymond Theatre in Pasadena, Cal.

To Roy Rowe, until recently Warner city manager, in Washington, Pa., and now an exhibitor at the Pender Theatre, Burgaw, N. C.

And to E. C. Johnson, who goes from the assistant's job at the Ready Theatre, in Miles, Mich., to his own spot, the Buffalo, New Buffalo, in the same state.

As a sign of the times perhaps, it may be interesting to note that more than a few of our members are in actual negotiation or seeking about for situations of their own, which movement should obviously be encouraged for the good of the industry.

A BONUS PLAN THAT WORKS

A bonus plan depending not upon quotas or profits. A practical method based upon yearly grosses that determines the manager's end. A system in effect for the past year that has the double virtue of working out satisfactorily for the manager as well as the circuit.

The above are highlights of the percentage plan of compensation as conceived and carried out successfully for Famous Players-Canadian theatremen by headmen N. L. Nathanson and J. J. Fitzgibbons.

In Toronto, last week, your Chairman obtained from these executives and from many of the men benefited their personal reactions to the results of the first year of the bonus plan already set for a second year of operation. There is ample evidence to hand that for puzzled exhibitors sincerely seeking an air-tight plan of managerial compensation, the Famous Players-Canadian system may well be adapted as the solution of a vexing problem that must be solved.

Ties Star to Wire Gag On "Miss Glory" Opening

New wire circuit between New York and Hollywood was tied into the opening of "Page Miss Glory" at the New York Strand by Irv Windisch, publicist, who arranged for Western Union to install sending machine in lobby, machine to be synchronized to trans lux screen. Local motion picture critic was slated to send message which would appear on screen to Marion Davies and to have return message from Hollywood.

Drug store tied in by featuring a "Dawn Glory" sundae and offering five pairs of passes each day to those whose luncheon checks carried certain numbers. In cooperation with Auburn motor company, car similar to that won by the winner of magazine "Page Miss Glory" contest, was promoted with chauffeur and driven around streets appropriately bannered. Imprinted paper napkins were in ice cream parlors, ball parks and restaurants as were Marion Davies imprinted stills.

GLORY

An innovation for the front was an egg shell silk base oval, in center of which was hand-colored head of star built out in relief from silver foil background illuminated in series of changeable colored lights. Star names and title were constructed of built-up letters of fine chromium face.

Paper Sponsors Party On "Bees" for Williams

Rex Williams, Capitol Theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., started his "Keeper of the Bees" campaign off by tieup with newspaper on a classified advertising contest based around picture title. Special stories and pictures were run and paper sponsored an orphan's party which brought further publicity.

Window display of live bees was secured, streamers and teaser announcements plugging date. Style shop gave window to display of Betty Furness wearing fur coat, stills and window cards prominently displayed. Bookmarks were distributed in public and lending libraries, windows featuring the Porter books and scene stills.

RKO Radio Issues Scroll On "Three Musketeers"

In the manner of announcements of the time of the picture, Leon J. Bamberger, RKO Radio's sales promotion head, has created an attractive and interesting piece of advance trade advertising on "Three Musketeers."

The plug takes the form of a proclamation done of parchment stock and fastened to wood roller. Figure at top of knight carrying RKO banner on trumpet introduces the story and as scroll is unrolled, rest of copy appears.

Supporting star names were grouped around center oval using colored enlargements on silver foil.

Bally "Diamond Jim" At New York Roxy

For the metropolitan debut of Universal's "Diamond Jim," the sustained and highly effective barrage of showmanship loosed for the date at the New York Roxy scored quite a few direct hits. For the premiere, among the blaze of sun arcs, arrived every 10 minutes in an old-time hansom cab, a "Diamond Jim" and a "Lillian Russell" couple (see photo). These prototypes, without any advertising simply walked in the front door and out the stage entrance, then entered the waiting cab and did the stunt again and again.

Broadway also was treated to the sight of a venerable four-seater bike, piloted by two couples in old-fashioned costumes, and bedecked in diamonds (?) glistening from shirt, lapel and cane, a formally dressed and bannered "Jim" made the rounds, uptown and down, wherever crowds gathered.

Book and jewelry tieups had many windows showing replicas of some of the famous Brady jewels, one shop exhibiting original settings of the famous transportation set.

Studebaker agency showed original Brady bicycle against background of new models and surrounded by large theatre posters. Hookin also was made with tailor prominent in Brady's time as well as today.

Cafeteria chain arranged windows of large tempting meals with tieup copy that same amount of food was necessary to satisfy Brady's giant appetite.

Squadron of advertising planes covered all nearby beaches, newsboys handed out Universal's special "Jim" newspaper, radio and other publicity tieups worked six weeks ahead were other stunts effected by Morris Kinzler, Roxy ad head, in cooperation with Joe Weil and the Universal home office exploitation staff.

ROUND TABLE CLUB PRESENTS THE M & P THEATRES SECTION

That's a fast traveling outfit of showmen, those M & P theatremen who give an able account of themselves in the following pages in adding to the growing list of those taking part in the Round Table series of Guest Sections.

Led by the vigorous and long experienced Mullin and Pinanski—the "M" and the "P"—division, district chiefs, home office executives and theatre managers of the many operations conducted by this circuit continue to make theatre-conscious the New England sectors where they are situated.

From theatremen in the metropolitan Boston area, from those in the key cities and smaller situations come regularly for publication in these pages smart box office campaigns of more than passing interest to the membership. The M & P men are doing a nice job of work and it is with pleasure we set down in this issue some of their recent doings and observations on various ways-and-means.

Bonus Awards Made At F P-C Convention

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Happy to have the opportunity to meet up in person with some of the member-theatremen across the border, your chairman some weeks ago accepted a kind invitation from J. J. Fitzgibbons to sit in on the Toronto convention of the Famous Players-Canadians and to attend their annual picnic.

So-o-o, we managed to break away in time to land in the hospitable Dominion city on Aug. 30, the last day of the get-together that had been going full blast the entire week. And in time to be on hand while N. L. Nathanson, president, handed out a flock of bonus checks, with every manager present included in the divvy.

Before hitting convention headquarters, stopped at the Famous Players offices to say hello to genial "Fitz," to be tucked under the capable arm of Jim Nairn, circuit publicity chief, who guided us to the King Edward, where over 100 of the theatremen were discussing a lot of important business, directed by that swell person, Clarence Robson, Eastern division supervisor.

Others who spoke at the session were R. W. Bolstad, comptroller, T. J. Bragg, secretary-treasurer, Mr. Nairn, and your chairman, who expressed his pleasure at being able to be on hand. Noted around the rostrum also were executives Morris Stein, Toronto supervisor, Ben Geldsaler, booking chief, and Charles Dentlebeck, projection head.

Mr. Fitzgibbons arriving with Mr. Nathanson, just returned from abroad, then addressed the assemblage and introduced the circuit president, who greeted the conventioneers and presented the bonus checks before the meeting adjourned for lunch.

Canadians Picnic

After lunch, the folks gathered at the hospitable Rouge Hills Country Club, where general jollification was held, featured by a series of 20 novelty sport events. Some of the out-of-town visitors were Jules Levy, of RKO Radio, and Eddie Grainger, of Fox, among others. Representatives of all Toronto film offices and theatres were also present. Dinner and dancing followed, with intermission devoted to plenteous rag-chewing with the various Canadian Round Tablers, all in all a fine outfit of folks and pleased were we indeed to meet them.

Theatres Visited

Time being limited before train-time the next day, we used it to the best advantage by visiting at Toronto theatres in company with Roundtabler Jack Purvis of the Capitol, Sudbury, old-time associate at the Fox Detroit, who ushered us around town.

Among those we stopped off to see were star-maker Jack Arthur, at the Imperial, Tom Daily and assistant Hudson, at the Uptown, Dan Krendel, at the Tivoli. Missed Jules Bernstein, at Loew's, and other local theatremen not being "to hum," rode out to the famed Toronto exposition with Purvis and the HERALD Canadian correspondent, J. A. Cowan, in charge of the general exposition publicity.

Then back to the hotel for a bowl of that fabulous tomato-and-potato soup and to the train where your venerable chairman deposited himself wearily on to his "lower" with fond memories of a very grand and quite exciting visit, one we would like to repeat in the near future.

Roth Advertises for Bride for "Frankenstein"

A few days ahead of opening, Sam Roth, State Theatre, Harrisonburg, Va. advertised in the personal column for a mate to use in connection with his "Bride of Frankenstein" date. Over marquee, head of monster was cut from 24 sheet, mounted and boxed in, eyes cut out and covered with red gelatin and flasher lights attached. Emergency ambulance was stationed in front of theatre and special wierd front was built for engagement.

Valley Enterprises Theatremen Picnic

On August 11 employes of Valley Enterprises, Inc., operating the State and Strand Theatres, Harrisonburg, Va., and the Elkton Theatre, Elkton, Va., with headquarters at Harrisonburg, held their first annual outing and picnic. The entire personnel of the organization spent a very enjoyable afternoon at a recreation park near the city and activities on the program included a softball game between the Harrisonburg and Elkton employees, bathing and horseshoe pitching, after which picnic luncheon was enjoyed.

It is the plan of Charles S. Roth and Sam Roth, managing executives, to make the picnic and outing an annual event.

Louie Goes Chinese

You can depend on Louie Charninsky, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas, for the unusual, as witness the accompanying photo of his "Chinatown Squad" front. Through tieup with five and ten, Louie promoted the lanterns, umbrellas and chimes gratis. Boxoffice was covered with bamboo poles and staff dressed in Chinese costumes.

For "Unknown Woman" Louie sold it as the first G woman picture, papers followed through on this angle, giving him nice breaks.

"The motion picture is facing a new era of accomplishment. Confidence of the theatregoing public has been regained by fine pictures and intelligent advertising. The theatre today offers the finest of careers to the ambitious man of vision who has the desire to work loyally and wholeheartedly. This type of man is found in our ranks. For this reason we never have to go outside our organization when openings occur as we always have men ready for promotion. We are proud of M & P manpower."

Operations Cover All New England

The M. & P. Theatres Corporation operate theatres in New England from the 4,500-seated Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, one of the finest and most imposing theatres in the world, playing pictures and stage shows, with its own trained ballet and production staff, to the smallest of country town operations in a town of 3,000 population. Extending from the Canadian border to Long Island Sound, operating in 65 major cities and towns of the six states, every type of operation and problem is found in the M. & P. Theatres.

Martin J. Mullin

The "M" of the M. and P. Theatres, began his career at Paragon Park, Nantasket, Mass., from which he graduated to the business end of stage shows making one night stands in New England. In 1916 became associated with S. A. Lynch at the old Triangle Company and worked with Mr. Lynch in organizing Southern Enterprises.

In 1927 Mr. Mullin organized the maintenance, purchasing and warehouse departments of the newly formed Paramount Publix Corporation, from which he went to the Finkelstein and Rubin houses to translate those properties to Publix policies. In 1930 he took over the management of the New England Publix houses and after serving as a "cabinet member" in charge of the Northwestern Division, in 1933, with the reorganization of the Paramount Theatre interests, returned to New England as a partner in association with Samuel Pinanski to operate the M. and P. Theatres.

Edward A. Cuddy

Another New England boy, Mr. Cuddy, is division manager for all of New England. Previously he served as division manager for the company for western Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Starting as a newspaper reporter and writer for the Brockton Times and Lawrence Tribune, Mr. Cuddy gravitated to showbusiness with which he has been associated for over 25 years. His experience has covered all branches of operation in pictures, legitimate stage and vaudeville.

Charles G. Branham

Now special representative with the company, Mr. Branham has enjoyed an active theatrical career which has brought him into contact as city manager, district and division manager with theatre operating companies in many parts of the country, viz., the S. A. Lynch Southern-Enterprises, N. H. Gordon, Famous Players-Canadian, Universal and Publix Theatres.

Chester L. Stoddard

With 11 theatres under his direction, Mr. Stoddard is in charge of North Shore district. After graduating from the Missouri Military Academy, taught school there, and entered his theatre career with Balaban and Katz. Helped open the Metropolitan, Boston, also theatres in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Denver. Was in charge of all Paramount Publix personnel and front house operation before returning to New England as district manager.

William E. Spragg

Entering showbusiness at the age of 14, Mr. Spragg, now supervisor of the South Shore district, was manager for one of the first "Peck's Bad Boy" companies and has been with shows in Europe and Africa. Was with N. H. Gordon and booked for the circuit, and district manager for the North Shore district before taking over his present assignment. Headquarters in Pawtucket.

How the M & P chieftains started their theatre careers, what they did, where they were and what stops made on the road to their present assignments is presented briefly on this page, and an interesting record it is,

These folks evidently have been places, seen and done things, served in every part of the country. Their total of years in showbusiness is an imposing one, quite a few of which, it may be noted, have been spent with this circuit of New England theatres which now bear the M & P brand.

Armand J. Moreau

The 21 theatres in Mr. Moreau's district cover Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. Before going into showbusiness was in banking and in 1923 appointed field representative for Paramount in New England. In 1927 was given his present assignment. Headquarters in Portland, Me.

Robert M. Sternberg

The Metropolitan Boston district manager started his theatre career with the Gordon Olympia Theatres, and in 1928 was promoted to district manager for suburban Boston. Was in turn supervisor for Indiana and district chief for Comerford, returning to the South Shore before taking over his current assignment in charge of downtown Boston.

George T. Cruzen

Owner and manager of theatres since 1920, Mr. Cruzen now directs seven houses in Connecticut and Worcester, Mass. Operated for the Hosletller circuit, later became city manager in Newburgh, N. Y., managed the Allyn, Hartford, and the Paramount, New Haven. Headquarters at the Paramount, in New Haven.

F. W. McManus

In his position of district manager for Suburban Boston District "A," Mr. McManus has 16 theatres under his supervision, and has had experience in almost every branch of show business including the studios. Has been with Barnum & Bailey and after the World War became general advertising representative for the late Wm. P. Gary. In 1932 was appointed to his present position, his office located in the Allston Theatre, Allston.

Harry I. Wasserman

Previously owner and manager of theatres in Roxbury, Haverhill and Lawrence. Mr. Wasserman affiliated himself with the "Netoco" circuit as partner and field manager. When "Netoco" affiliated with Paramount, Mr. Wasserman was made a district manager and with the realignment of districts to the present M. and P. set-up became district manager for Suburban Boston district "B," now operating 12 houses.

Samuel Pinanski

The "P" is the other letter of the M. and P. Theatres Corp., and identifies Samuel Pinanski, partner of Mr. Mullin. Mr. Pinanski started at the Beacon and Modern Theatres, in Boston, in 1913, from which he progressed to the presidency of "Netoco" Theatres, then one of New England's largest theatre companies. He has had practical experience in every branch of the industry.

Mr. Pinanski was one of the first builders of theatres to develop the atmospheric auditorium and his innovations and designs have been widely copied throughout the country. This intimate knowledge of art and architecture resulted in the Oriental Theatre, Mattapan, the Egyptian, in Brighton, and the intimate State Theatre, in Portland, Me.

Mr. Pinanski was born in Boston in 1893, educated in the public schools, Phillips-Brooks School, Boston Latin and Volkman Preparatory Schools and Lowell Textile Institute where he was prominent in athletics.

Mr. Pinanski belongs to a well-known Boston family, being the son of Nathan Pinanski, a noted leader in the philanthropic and civic life of Boston.

Edward A. Smith

Years of experience in ace houses form the background of Mr. Smith, now managing director of the Metropolitan, Boston, one of the "ace" theatres of New England. Was in charge of the Midland division and later district manager in St. Paul and Minneapolis. Came to Boston in 1933.

Harry Browning

A dyed-in-the-wool Yankee is the director of M. and P. advertising and publicity, born in the shadow of Plymouth Rock. From his own houses in Connecticut became associated with Gordon Olympia Theatres and the Gray circuit. Opened the RKO Keith Memorial Theatre, in Boston, as managing director, and then with Paramount-Publix to open the Uptown Theatre, subsequently being placed in charge of the Home Office advertising department.

Hy Fine

The production manager of M. and P. Theatres is a keen student of music, having studied for many years under well-known masters. Mr. Fine was musical director for Shubert and Morris Gest shows, and voyaged to Australia to open offices for Selznick Pictures. Became musical director for Publix New England in 1932, and after serving as managing director at the Metropolitan, was placed in his present post.

Edward S. Canter

After graduating from Boston University, Mr. Canter became associated with Jacob Lourie and Samuel Pinanski as bookkeeper with the old "Netoco" group, rising to assistant treasurer and office manager. After affiliation with other theatres, returned to Paramount-Publix in 1932 and in the M. and P. set-up, became comptroller, which position he now holds.

Advertising Director, M and P Theatres

Theatre advertising is one of the hardest selling jobs in all the lines of public selling. The commodity sold is time, presumably a good time. The commodities on screen and stage are perishable goods. The public does not put down its hard-earned money just out of habit or just by chance. Every patron is sold by some influence. "Selling" brought them to the box-office.

Therefore, "Does it sell tickets?" is the gauge by which we try to measure all exploitation and publicity ideas in the M & P Theatres' home office advertising department. We realize that this gauge must be used in a broad sense, for many ideas may be good for certain individual situations under certain given circumstances, but would not be suited for a circuit as a whole. To advocate any specific exploitation for universal use, it first must be tried and tested. For that reason our advertising department thoroughly investigates every new exploitation idea and tie-up and often rejects many that, while seemingly attractive, have flash, rather than real sales value.

Department Acts as Clearing House

The M & P advertising department acts as a clearing house for advertising and exploitation ideas. It serves in an advisory capacity, assisting the manager in the field with helpful campaigns, contests and tie-ups that are adapted both to the individual picture and institutionally to the theatre.

The manager in the field creates new stunts and adapts old ones. A close scrutiny is kept on all activities in every operation and the relaying of successful ideas put over in one spot is sent to the entire field in bulletins, giving full details of what some brother manager has done with a particular picture, contest or tie-up. This dissemination of advertising ideas keeps the local manager fully informed with progressive showmanship material, which he in turn adapts to his own requirements in his own community.

Encourage "Tickler" Files

We encourage the keeping of a "tickler file." The home office "tickler file" fills a score or more of cabinet files, alphabetically separated under various captions and subheads and indexed in a reference index book which is added to as new material is placed in the files.

When material on some certain subject such as "Anniversaries," "Fashion Shows," etc., accumulates, all the material is edited and a "Master Manual" on the subject is compiled and the field is notified that this material is available. When the demand for some certain subject warrants the cost, the manual is plantographed and a copy sent to every theatre. We have now some thirty "Master Manuals" covering a wide range of special activities.

In the past many managers, for some reason or other, have hesitated to use a stunt that has been used before and were adverse to the systematic building of a "tickler file." These bugaboos—inhibitions—have to a great extent been overcome. Formerly many managers seemed to believe that it showed a lack of initiative, originally or of real ability to use another's ideas, failing to realize that a truly new idea is as rare as the fabled Phoenix. Of course they were wrong, for the smartest men in the business world are those who recognize a good idea and use it themselves with their own variations. Today, the smart manager puts over some swell exploitation that he took from last year's "Round Table" or other source, while his opposition across the street is wondering how he can drag patrons in with an original idea.

"Everything I know is in my tickler file," is a statement made by one of the most enterprising theatre managers I have known, and he was perfectly sincere. Supplementing his years of experience and the knowledge stored away by an alert brain, was the material cached safely away in his extensive tickler file, and that file contained enough material to complete a very successful career.

It is safe to assume that no one individual can store in his mind all the ramifications and the breaking down of the thousands of advertising ideas which are applicable to the theatrical business. Thus, a "tickler file" is an encyclopedia—a compendium for ready reference, that can be called upon at a moment's notice, and gives a manager the combined experience of thousands of the best minds who have faced similar problems as those facing him.

Harrison Creates West Consciousness On "Town"

Ed Harrison, Capitol Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., to sell his "Goin' to Town" date placed a rubber mat in front of his box-office on which was painted the star's name and opening date (see photo). Tieup with bus company brought bumper strips and one-sheet boards were placed next to newspaper stands in downtown areas.

"Eagerly Awaits Hollywood Mail"

by GENE S. FOX

Ad Director, Metropolitan, Boston

How to successfully merchandise the "de luxe" theatre of today?

Advertising formulas?

What to do and what not to do in the publicizing of the major theatre operation?

These assigned to my solution?

Flattery!

I forsake the attempt and thereby escape the resultant humiliation of setting forward any advisory structure that would reach the eyes of knowing showmen. What is more, there is untold wealth and no little glory for that man who can accomplish this end. The subscriptions to such an outline would be priceless and I for one would be the first to patronize.

With the present day economic fluctuations, the restless ebb and flow of the business tides, there are few precedents to be followed. The successful plan of yesterday may fail tomorrow, and the experience of preceding years provide us with little more than a sense of valuation as a partial guide to the problem of today. There are no set rules to be followed. This is an ever-changing business and alertness to every promotional possibility is the only avenue to pursue.

However, I wonder how many of my creed recognize the help and assistance now being rendered to us by Hollywood. How much easier our job has been made as a result of the many faceted services emanating from the studios.

Only a short time ago Hollywood had little interest other than the mere publicizing of the individual players of the studio's roster. There was little or no thought given to the problem of the theatre. Today there is a complete reversal of this mistaken idea. Hollywood has realized that the success or failure of their production will be decided at the frontier known as the theatre. They have plunged into cooperative spirit heretofore unequalled.

Theatremen at Studios

Publicity and advertising men have been recruited from the practical field of the theatre and placed into the studio publicity department. Exploitation divisions creating sound and merchantable ideas which are forwarded to the theatre publicity desks in advance of production releases. Members of the fourth estate, men who speak the language of the newspaper, have been pressed into the service as publicity writers and have amply proven their worth.

Valuable advertising manuals precede the routine press sheet. Photographic stills in abundance find ready placement in fashion, news and advertising columns. Radio broadcasts, fan magazine publicity, news stories, feature stories and trailers carefully supervised by men who know the theatre and know it well.

These are but a few of the many services rendered by the studios of today.

The alert publicity man eagerly awaits his mail from Hollywood.

Says Next Season Will Be Big Year

by EDWARD A. SMITH

Managing Director, Metropolitan, Boston

All Hollywood studios agog with production activity!

The legitimate theatre embracing the most elaborate plans in years!

De luxe motion picture theatres throughout the country preparing the most ambitious presentations featuring the "name" attractions of screen, stage and radio!

These are merely a few of the optimistic newspaper headlines which have made their appearance during the last fortnight and there can be little doubt that the season of 1935 and '36 will be recorded as the best business year since the memorable 1930.

While my enthusiasm in this prediction may smack of liberal optimism, there are some facts and figures which should provide all theatre operators with a surge of eager anticipation for the immediate future.

It is more than encouraging to know that the weekly attendance of the motion picture theatre has nearly restored itself to the records of 1930. Now, more than 75,000,000 patrons are attending the theatre annually. The box office incomes are estimated to be in excess of one and a quarter billion dollars. Such figures are a confirmation that the restlessness of the public during the stressful economic period has passed. Hollywood is responsible for the major portion of business advancement, as screen productions have reached a higher standard and story values have been selected with greater wisdom. The legitimate theatre, too, has played an important part in bringing people back-to-the-theatre for their entertainment.

There is little advantage in reviewing the trying problems which we have encountered during the past three years, save to cite the fact that we have emerged as better showmen and it is now for us to set our eyes to the future. Show business has returned.

Greenberg Dresses Up His Lobby for Summer

Ben Greenberg at the Stadium Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., dressed his lobby smartly for the summer as can be seen by the accompanying photo. Corrugated paper awnings were hung over inside exits and supported by stanchions representing battleaxes. These stanchions were made by stage carpenter from thin plyboard, blades were silvered.

SOME OPERATION PITFALLS

In Which Are Set Down Various Ways to Avoid Costly Mistakes In Path of Successful Operation

by HARRY I. WASSERMAN

District Manager, M and P Theatres

There are many pitfalls in theatre management that will mean disaster if not carefully watched. It is our intent to point out briefly a few of the costly pitfalls which, if avoided, will reduce the many problems involved in successful theatre operation.

Mongrel Policy Changes

There is nothing more destructive and demoralizing to a theatre's business than constant policy changes. When a theatre is in trouble, it is best to lay plans for a consistent run of good pictures and additional advertising coverage. Re-check the service, sound and housekeeping. We have found it profitable to make a general atmospherical change in the lobby, display frames and in the auditorium. If a change of policy is made, such change should be tried for at least three months.

Never Change the Policy of a Successful Operation. If a drop in business is noticed and cannot be attributed to a run of poor pictures or geographical changes, it is well to make a thorough survey of present conditions in the neighborhood so as to ascertain whether the neighborhood has deteriorated. If this is found to be so, lowering of admission prices and cutting of overhead is advisable. If the survey shows nothing unusual and attractions are satisfactory, housekeeping good, service pleasing, it is well to thoroughly check and analyze your advertising coverage with a view of instituting other media which you are not using.

Re-Institutionalizing

Costly mistakes have been made by overlooking the importance of re-institutionalizing your theatre. With a constant change in population, managers should make it part of their advertising and operating activities to re-institutionalize the theatre at least three or four times a year. Through various advertising media, advise your patrons about your excellent attractions, service, comfort, sound, ventilation, etc. If you have a parking space or unrestricted parking area around the theatre do not keep this a secret, but call all such important sales facts to the attention of your patrons. Doctors, nurses and other professional men and women should be continually advised relative to the emergency call service. Word of mouth publicity of this sort means extra dollars in your box office.

Publicity Racketeers

One of the many serious mistakes made in theatre management has been to tie up with outside publicity "chiselers" who come into our neighborhoods and use our theatres and merchants for easy-money pickings. I am referring to the following rackets:

Telephone Index, Calendars, Star Photos, Camera Giveaways, Various "Two for One's." Also Free Trips to Bermuda, etc., Monthly Programs, Merchant Tickets and Bicycle Giveaways.

As an example: To promote a boat trip to Bermuda, these fly-by-night chiselers sell to twenty or more merchants ads on a small circular for which they receive $39.50 from each merchant, or a total of $790. A telephone index will cost each merchant anywhere from $15 up—or as much as the promoters can get—netting these chiselers $250 to $350, and so on down the line. What does the merchant get for his money? Noth- but a small ad which does not mean anything to him, as it is sandwiched in with so many other ads it is hardly noticeable. When the merchant realizes that he has been "gypped" he blames the theatre and manager. Patrons, friends and good will are lost by such tie-ups.

Educating Children in Theatre Behavior

In suburban theatres it is good business for managers to cater to the children. Live-wire managers understand that the children of today are the patrons of the future. Therefore they use a hundred and one different means to attract children business. A great many managers have a tremendous problem in the proper handling of children. If children are allowed to run wild and make unnecessary noise, it has a definite tendency to drive away adult patronage during matinees. Destruction of theatre property such as cutting seats, and other pranks, is very costly, but can be easily overcome by educating the children in proper theatre behavior. This can be done by friendly talks from the stage or through the public address system. The use of annunciators carrying a friendly message has proved successful. Advise the children about your coming attractions, safety in going and coming from the theatre and ethics of theatre behavior.

Managers will find this educational work pleasant and profitable.

Pass Evil

We have known cases where the ratio of no service charge passes to paid admissions was one to ten. This pass racket has always been a serious and expensive problem. Of course there are many advantages which we derive from pass distribution. The question is—what is the fair and proper ratio? Personally, I believe the ratio should be no less than one no service charge pass to every 150 paid admissions. I firmly believe it would be good business for chain and independent operators to agree to eliminate entirely the no service charge pass. We might have a little difficulty at first, but this will eventually straighten itself out to the monetary advantage of the motion picture business.

Lengthy Advertising Contracts

Managers having the power to sign contracts, will find it good business to be cautious in committing the theatre for any lengthy period of time. The necessity and good business of variance in some of your advertising, demand precaution in signing lengthy contracts.

THE SMALL TOWN MANAGER

Theatreman in the Lesser Spots Must Be Person of Many Parts; Should Be Institutionalized

by ARMAND J. MOREAU
District Manager M. & P. Theatres

A great deal has been said and written about the theatre as an institution in a town.

The most vital nerve of a theatre, the manager, has never been properly exploited. In the Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont District of the M. & P. Theatres an effort is being made to institutionalize the "Small Town Manager," and make of him a distinct personality.

Many know that, in selling a ticket to a patron, it means selling that patron an illusion only. As a matter of fact, our entire business is comprised of selling intangibles and illusions. If a patron goes into a department store, or purchases any other type of merchandise, that patron goes out with a definite object in his or her hand. Whether it be groceries or a book, it is a tangible something for which they have paid. In the theatre they deposit their admission at the box office, enter, spend time and go out with nothing but an illusion—a frame of mind.

The distinct living personality that is really "on the job" is the manager, who is more than his title implies. Of course, ushers, cashiers, doormen are all living personalities, but it is the spirit of the manager that imbues these employes with the proper consciousness which is absolutely indispensable in a small town. . . .

If the occasion demands, a "small town manager" must be able to go out and sell tickets; usher; direct; run his machines, if necessary; stage productions, amateur or otherwise. He must be able to rig up his own lighting, know his own switchboard, do his own billing, make his own displays, and many other kindred items that would never be considered "immediate responsibility" of a "managing director."

Must Know-All, See-All

Where a theatre plays two, three, four or five changes a week, a "small town manager" cannot go out and stage large exploitation campaigns. His pictures come and go too fast. He must be able to fully understand booking and release dates so that he can arrange his programs to suit his patrons; to know his serials and short subjects so he can arrange to have programs of popular appeal on certain days. He must know the day that Mrs. Jones and her sewing circle patronize the theatre, and arrange programs that they can enjoy and appreciate.

He must know when little Willie and Johnnie would like to see Popeye; to know when and how these pictures must play; to know whether a picture can go one day, or two or three; to know when a picture is not going over too well, and when to substitute another to effect a profitable, sane, businesslike procedure. He must plan to have his accessories, his trailers and other material far enough in advance to meet his needs, as he is not near an exchange where material can be sent him over night. He must be thoroughly up on the knowledge of pictures as they are released so that he can act accordingly.

Much is said of no-cost campaigns and of the wonderful work done by exploitation and advertising men, but if the truth were known, nine-tenths of the no-cost stunts and gags as they are worked today, originated in the minds of small town managers who, of necessity, were forced to create such stunts. . . .

High pressure exploitation and sharpshooting practices are not used, and cannot be used by the "small town manager" in dealing with merchants and others. He cannot have recourse to hit and run ideas, as these merchants whom he fools remember these things, and when the time comes around again—the manager is the one left "holding the bag"—not the merchant. You will recall, just a few years ago, when clever exploitation men were sent into a town and told that they had three months to put a theatre on the map, and how these self-same exploitation men went in and, "by hook and by crook" established the theatre. Then another manager was sent in, and for the rest of his days tried to square what the high-pressure merchandiser dug up.

Managers in Civic Post

The small town manager is not one who is transferred very often. Once the manager finds his position and the spot is right, he is left there for the good of the organization. This practice has been worked out very successfully in our own district, where there have been fewer changes in the past few years than in any other district in the United States.

Worthy of mention is the fact that of twenty-one managers who comprise this district, four are presidents of civic organizations, such as the Lions, Kiwanis and Rotary Club; five are past presidents; four are members of their City Councils; two last year were approached to run as mayors of the towns; three are members of the Chamber of Commerce; two have been secretaries of their civic organizations; five have been active in church organizations. . . .

Our district covers 1,265 miles through Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. The remoteness of these theatres from their home office places more responsibility upon the shoulders of these managers. They probably make more decisions in one week than many a big city manager makes in months.

The bread and butter of the motion picture industry today comes from the tickets of small town theatres that, week in and week out, grind out three, four and five changes, and were it not for these theatres, which are literally the backbone of the industry, many a "Cathedral of Entertainment" would today be closed.

The small town manager is a great person, and in institutionalizing him you make your theatre a real place of entertainment, and not a mere auditorium of exhibition!

Bamberger's Staff Goes Chinese

Bamberger Goes Chinese For "Shanghai" Date

Before leaving his post at the Paramount in Springfield for the Victory in Holyoke, Herman Bamberger for "Shanghai" put out a ricksha with a girl carrying large Chinese umbrella and pulled by man in native costume. This street bally was used two days ahead and crashed a jubilee night parade which was staged in town. At start of every feature Herman sprayed oriental incense in ventilating system which permeated every corner of house. Accompanying photo shows house staff dressed for the engagement.

Promoted tea bags were distributed in imprinted envelopes. Instead of using sound track on stock opening, booth pulled down the fader and costumed usher came on stage and sounded large Chinese gong, timing action so that he finished as title flashed on screen.

When Better Displays Are Built, Botwick Will Do 'em

On the Reduction Of Insurance Costs

by MARION COLES

Treasurer, M and P Theatres

Theatres of a necessity carry many kinds of insurance and the knowledge of preventative precautions which lower the insurance rates are the duty of every manager.

Insurance charges are based principally on experience as to towns over a period of years and a smaller percentage of fires, accidents and burglaries from year to year will materially aid in reducing the premiums.

The average patron knows nothing about the inside of the theatre. His eyes are unaccustomed to the change of light, and on entering, for a few moments he can see but a few steps in front of him. He depends almost entirely upon the aisle lights, and that is why many accidents occur.

Can Control Accident Causes

It is our firm conviction that a major part of theatre accidents are due to poor lighting, defective carpets and linoleum and worn stair treads—all controllable causes; while fires are caused by overloading wattage on lighting wires installed for a certain maximum load, the lack of proper containers for the theatre's daily sweepings before they have been carted away or otherwise disposed of, and the accumulation of debris in boiler-room, cleaners' rooms, basement and back stage.

Stairways are always treacherous, both from poor lighting and stair coverings. If carpets covering the stairs are loose and torn or excessively worn, there is a very good chance that a number of patrons will injure themselves. From experience we know that most accidents of this sort can be avoided. Constant inspection is necessary.

Women's high heels coming in contact with defective parts of the carpets usually account for the most serious accidents on stairways. Many times women have slipped in theatres, broken both heels off their shoes and fallen down the entire flight of stairs. It is difficult to convince anybody that this was purely an accident and not gross negligence on the part of the theatre.

Offhand, we can think of a number of ways in which accidents on stairways occur. The edge of the step, that receives the most friction, often develops holes. Brass treads holding the carpet sometimes becomes broken or raised.

Repairs can often be made for little cost. By moving the carpet down the rise of the step, the same carpet can be used again with perfect safety. Bolting down or replacing brass treads insures greater safety of patrons.

Burglaries and the transportation of money to and from the bank are other insurance hazards for which precautions can be taken through proper inner chests in safes and police guard.

With an appreciation of these facts, it has been our endeavor, through instructive bulletins to the field, to acquaint and remind the theatre manager of the necessity of a personal daily inspection of his theatre, and the checking of these controllable hazards.

We have met with considerable success and through the cooperation of the district managers and theatre managers we hope with the coming year to show a considerable reduction in insurance costs.

M & P Briefs

Lou Schaefer, Paramount, New Haven, on recent veterans' convention offered local radio station use of marquee and theatre radio-telephone line for broadcasting of the Vet Parade which ran directly in front of theatre. Outcome was that after parade, many people flocked into the house.

Harry Botwick, State, Portland, Me., pulled the gag of asking patrons to express opinion on "The Scoundrel." Harry wrote to newspaper asking editors to urge people to write on their reactions to the picture. Returns were gratifying.

Ernie Goldstein, batting for vacationing Art Pinkham at the Calvin, Northampton, Mass., discovering that radio star booked at theatre was war vet, promoted his appearance at U. S. Hospital with papers cooperating. Ernie also offered passes to "Alibi Ike" to local ball players hitting home runs which offer made the sport columns.

Tom Kelly, Rialto, Brockton, Mass., tied in with local paper's "who are they" contest wherein pictures of prominents of former years were printed with contestants sending in names. Tom offered passes as prizes and crashed the theatre into general publicity.

Ed Harrison, Capitol, Pittsfield, Mass., discovering that member of local police force was selected to join the G-Men instruction class in Washington, ran ad with photo of officer and copy on "Men Without Names."

Claud Frederick used an old patrol wagon covered with banners as part of his bally on "Men Without Names" at the Garden in Greenfield. Lobby display consisted of police assortment of arms of every type taken from criminals. Collection of counterfeit coins, etc., completed the display.

Silver's Lobby Vote Tabulation

Nat Gets Six Week Break for Contest

Reported one of the most successful contests of its kind that received newspaper publicity cooperation from the middle of May to the end of June was Nat Silver's "Most Deserving Boy and Girl" contest put out at the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., the main prize being a four-day stay in New York with all expenses paid for the girl and boy in the high school senior class rolling up the greatest number of votes. Numerous merchants supplied other awards.

Nat first received permission of high school principal and with this start was able to build up increasing interest among the students and his general patronage. Voting slips were given with each admission and deposited in box in lobby (see photo) alongside of which was poster with tabulation of votes received by the leaders.

Paper tied in with the stunt giving unusual support with page one stories, photos of students in the lead and continuous daily publicity which included tabulation of voting.

With interest at its height, winners were not announced until the night of the presentation of awards from the stage which obviously added to the receipts of the evening. Principal of school was on hand to personally present gifts to each winner. To build up the occasion, Nat also put on a special show surrounding the prizes.

Entire campaign cost very little as Nat promoted bus round trips to New York and also hotel for winning couple and chaperone from paper. Before leaving, the newspapers took shot of Nat bidding winners good-bye which also received further breaks.

Simms' West Guessing Contest on "Goin' to Town"

A photo of Mae West was placed inside a cake of ice for a window display by Morris Simms, Olympia Theatre, New Bedford, and tickets offered to those coming closest to guessing exactly how long it would take Mae West to melt the cake of ice. Ballots were distributed and stunt played up in ads.

Morris also offers tickets for those securing week's lowest scores at local golf courses and another pair for baseball clubs whose players made a home run. Stunts broke papers with publicity stories.

Morrison Stages Pram Parade on "Little Girl"

Little ones, big ones, new ones and old ones, in fact any child with a doll carriage was eligible for prizes in the perambulator parade recently put on at the Strand in Dover, N. H., by Mel Morrison for "Our Little Girl." Mel distributed autographed photos of Shirley and reports that the adults were as interested in the goings-on as were the kids.

For "Ruggles" newspaper tied in by sponsoring a tintype contest two weeks ahead on which prizes were awarded those submitting the most unusual photos. Tintypes were mounted on compoboard and displayed in lobby. Department store paid for mailing and printing of heralds that went to their customers. Clocks in barbers were stripped with "now is the time to see," etc., and for bally shay with driver was used.

Executive Feels That Manager Of Today Must Be Counted With Local Better Business Men

by WILLIAM E. SPRAGG

District Manager, M and P Theatres

It is not a far cry back to the days before the organized motion picture theatre or even to the more recent days when the industry, in its swaddling clothes, was trying to raise its head out of the chaos that saw the birth of a business that labored under all the old stigmas, prejudices, but glories (if you will) that surrounded show-business as it came from the days of the fly-by-nights, through the era of variety and questionable stage offering and ethics into the dawn of motion picture presentation in theatres organizing for this purpose. This job was—it had to be—done by men steeped in the background of old time show business, of pocket business, of Barnum-like attributes and with distrust for the efficacy of figures as pertinent to theatre business.

Just as it took the organized motion picture theatre to start the industry on the road to becoming what it is, one of the greatest and most complex of our national commercial enterprises, so it took the organized motion picture theatre to start the reversal of form on the part of the theatre manager. The trek was and is still a long one, beset with strange complexes on the part of some who still feel that strict business fundamentals cannot govern show business, or that strict conformity to ethics is not a guiding star in the operation of today's theatre. And it can certainly be claimed that circuit operation has been the largest factor in setting the manager on the right road—the road that leads to theatre business as a business.

Man-Power Is Important

Time was when, in the memory of many of us, the majority of all those connected with the theatre in whatever capacity, were looked upon somewhat as social outcasts, perhaps considered from the very nature of their routines of effort or the very channels of their lives, as people set apart and hardly entitled to brush elbows, let alone match wits, with the better business man. Irresponsible nomads managers seemed to be in the eyes of all but themselves. Is it all to be wondered at? And circuit operation was responsible for that, too, for in the strenuous days of sifting out the wheat from the chaff it was still good business and still will be good business when and as the occasion arises, to necessitate a realignment of its managerial man power.

But circuit operators have learned another great lesson beyond that which dictates the conduct of theatre operations on a strictly business basis. That lesson is that money invested in managerial man-power is one of its most important investments. Theatre management is of value in direct ratio as this investment is given opportunity and encouragement to expand in given adaptable areas. Frequent interruptions of continuous constructive management in a specific location only increase the investment necessary and delays the return that should rightfully be expected from good management being able to acquire that complete knowledge of its community that every other business man has. Today stabilization in managerial manpower is fast winning from all and sundry an appreciation that the old prejudices and doubts are now ill-founded and that the manager of the local theatre is a personage to be reckoned with, a real asset to the community.

Manager Now Respected

And what of the manager's viewpoint of himself? Given the encouragement to enter entirely into the spirit of civic activities, to promote them when advisable, and urged to consort with the business men of his city, to study their merchandising methods, he has done so. Probably because of the fact that his business is the greatest and most delicate of all cash businesses, he has sharpened his wits. He has forged to the point where he can vie with any merchant in his town as a respected competitor for legitimate business gains and he is acquiring the stability of mind and purpose which coupled with the knowledge of his surrounding will spell the greatest of prosperity for the industry as a whole, and continue to make him a citizen greatly to be respected and reckoned with.

It is the writer's firm conviction that by far the greater number of our theatre managers today may place themselves rightfully in that category of the better business men of their city. The days of the clap-trap are over—it's business now on business principles. Let your background guide you all the rest of the way.

Wrong Number? You Can Still Get Theatre Info.

Maybe J. Marquis at the Egyptian, Brighton, should have been a detective, because he has discovered that his theatre's telephone number is similar to that of three business concerns and frequently patrons would dial these firms through error. By giving a couple of passes to these concerns their operators, when receiving calls for the theatre, give people programs and any other theatre information.

Glazer Has Mayor Greet the Captain

That was a neat bit of publicity rolled up by Marty Glazer, publicist for the Scollay Square, Boston, on his campaign put over with Manager Goodwin on the personal appearance of Captain John Craig in conjunction with the picture, "Sea Killers." Papers ran thrill and human interest stories on Craig's personal experience in landing big fish and in addition to other feature stories and odd stuff, Marty promoted civic welcome by mayor, shot also run by the dailies.

Special lobby display included cutout of Captain in diving outfit (see photo) with original camera he invented to take underwater shots. Sea trophies were mounted in large frame, each individually labelled with interesting captions. Topping display was stuffed nine-foot swordfish promoted by Glazer from exhibit at nearby beach requiring four boys and truck to transport big fish to theatre.

Brodie Gives Theatre For Graduation Exercises

What he reports as one of the greatest goodwill builders ever accomplished in Haverhill, Mass., was effected by Ellis Brodie at the Paramount Theatre there in offering to the high school the use of the theatre to hold graduation exercises.

Previously, says Ellis, the limited capacity of the high school auditorium prevented the presence of many who wished to witness the festivities. However, the chief difficulty in the way of accepting the theatre's offer was that the exercises were held in the evening and therefore the student body was allowed to vote on whether they would rather celebrate the occasion in the theatre in the morning or the high school at night. The response was unanimous in favor of the Paramount.

"See Yourself as Ithers See You," Says Harrison

A smart gag was put across by Ed Harrison, Capitol Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., for "Curly Top" in the form of a folder, out side of which was name of theatre, picture of Shirley announcing her appearance and playdate. Underneath was line "open this folder and see who is going to be at the Capitol in person to see Shirley." On the inside was a little mirror and the image of the owner looked up at him.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

A REAL FIND

LITERALLY, the news about Eastman Super X spread like wildfire. Never has a film "caught on" faster, or been more widely adopted in so short a time. The reason: Super X is a real find for the cinema world. Introducing new standards of speed and photographic quality, coupled with rare versatility, it represents a major advance in raw-film research . . . a true contribution to the art of the motion picture. Eastman Kodak Co., Rochester, N.Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

"ANNA KARENINA"

1935-36 MARCHES ON!

The sensational success of GARBO'S "ANNA KARENINA" establishes the 2nd Giant hit of M-G-M's Mightiest Year!

- ★ Great business everywhere. It even tops the famed record-holder "China Seas" in many spots (for instance, Boston, Bridgeport, Harrisburgh, New Haven, New York, Pittsburgh, Reading, Springfield, Philadelphia).
- ★ Four Year Attendance Record, Capitol, N.Y. Held Over 3rd Week!
- ★ Happy hold-overs from Coast to Coast.
- ★ Acclaimed by critics over the entire nation as Garbo's Greatest!
- ★ And now, gentlemen of the motion picture industry, wait and watch for M-G-M's "BROADWAY MELODY of 1936".

All praise to them! Greta Garbo, Fredric March, Freddie Bartholomew in Clarence Brown's production of "ANNA KARENINA". With Maureen O'Sullivan, May Robson, Basil Rathbone. Produced by David O. Selznick.

She's Starting the New Year with a Smile

As their fourth successive 1935-'36 innovation, Warner Bros. give you a gay Kay for the new season . . . doing a grand job in a show which Variety Daily calls so good that "few comedies . . . can top it for entertainment!"

FROM SCOOPS

Vitaphone Will Deal Out a Roy

From brilliant novelty scoops like "Keystone Hotel" to the grandest collection of sure-fire comics in the business, Vitaphone is showing the way in Comedy this season! Watch the boys who took the lead in Musicals and many other innovations step up the laugh-short standard—starting right now!

Leading the parade of hits—the Keystone gang in all their pie-eyed glory! Ben Turpin, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling, Hank Mann, Marie Prevost—the whole kaboodle of old-time favorites in a new 2-reel custard opera! And what a build-up! For months, the nation's press has been heralding the return of the Keystone Kops with a newspaper campaign bigger than that given most feature films.* There's a readymade audience of millions waiting with open arms for . . .

'KEYSTONE HOTEL'

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 21st

And the trade press chimes in with:*

"The film winds up with an old-fashioned pie-throwing fight that should not only please audiences but start them reminiscing. Exhibitors can't miss by playing this. Highly recommended."
—Motion Picture Daily

"Can stand up as the second feature on many double bills. As a novelty or a recording of motion picture history, it should mean something in ace houses. Production of the picture with the oldtime cast was a smart idea, one that should mean cash."
—Variety Daily

....TO NUTS

al Laugh-Feast in 1935-'36

And then week after week . . . the industry's ace comedians . . . all under contract to Vitaphone . . . all big names . . . and all set to make this a great year for comedies . . . and for you!

THE YACHT CLUB BOYS, singing clowns of two continents, are due to be among the year's best screen bets. Watch for their first 'The Vodka Boatmen' on Oct. 25th.

EL BRENDEL had 'em in the aisles last year with "What! No Men?" This will be an even better year for the legion of Brendel fans.

SHEMP HOWARD, Vitaphone's own discovery, has become one of the country's most popular howl-provokers. More laugh-filled releases coming from him this season!

HENRY ARMETTA is another of Vitaphone's feature scoops! He's starring in 'Romance of the West', the nation's newest short sensation.

BOB HOPE is known as 'Broadway's show-saver'. Better grab his shorts now—you'll have to pay more for him when he's grabbed for features. Watch for his first, 'Double Exposure'—it's a knockout!

ALLEN JENKINS, fresh from triumphs in feature films, brings a unique deadpan humor to short subjects — — and a huge following!

ROSCOE ATES' stuttering will continue to make plenty of trouble for his playmate, Shemp Howard. Funny? Y-y-y-you b-b-b-betcha!!

FRANK McHUGH and his inimitable laugh will be starred by Vitaphone this year—in answer to the requests of millions of rabid fans! Remember him in 'Glory'?

HOBART CAVANAUGH has proved his box-office value in full-length films. Watch 'em flock when he appears in a short all his own!

WARNER BROS.' VITAPHONE FOR COMEDIES

A picture worthy of their great talents

Francis Lederer and Frances Dee... new king and queen of gay romance . . . frolic into the hearts of audiences . . . in this sprightly entertainment that convulsed East and West Coast preview crowds with uncontrollable laughter.

"Lederer and Dee give performances that will win new thousands. Lederer comes into his own . . . he's any gal's heartbeat." —Hollywood Reporter

"Francis Lederer's finest performance. Portrayal by Frances Dee elevates her to top rank." —Hollywood Citizen News

"Francis Lederer especially suited to role he enacts superbly. Francis Dee's acting exceptionally pleasing." —Showmen's Trade Review

"Francis Lederer has never had better material. Frances Dee should land on the top rank of younger comediennes." —Variety Daily

MR. KORDA RETURNS

NOT so many years ago, somewhere in the wake of a wave of enthusiasm about European contributions to the art of the screen, there came to these shores one Mr. Alexander Korda, who went over the western horizon into Hollywood to be a director.

After that, nothing much happened and what little happened was not pleasant or encouraging to Mr. Korda. He got few assignments to direct and those few none too much to his liking. Then the assignments faded away, and so did Mr. Korda. He left Hollywood unnoted and unsung, just another in the great silent army of the disappointed.

Back from Hollywood this Mr. Korda, still, it would appear, believing in himself, against the verdicts of the mighty and whims of fate, went on to London and presently became important. Currently he is widely credited with having given the British industry a place in the sun and a measure of success new to its history. And today, this week, Mr. Korda is back from a visit to Hollywood, a partner.

He is the same Korda—and it is the same Hollywood, the same and forever.

PATTERN

OBSERVERS of what might be called the cinema scene are seeing a tediously interesting repetition of a familiar pattern in the rise of Columbia Pictures Corporation on the market and the contemporary development of "Wall Street mindedness" on the part of the executive head, operating it by remote control from his seat in the midst of production activities and turmoils in Hollywood.

Mr. Harry Cohn's sales of considerable blocks of the stock of his corporation have been duly reported for public record to the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington.

Meanwhile the withdrawal from the studio organization of Mr. Sam Briskin has come, it is said, in part for reasons not entirely unrelated to the handling of the corporation's shares. Mr. Briskin appears to have shared more completely in the important labors of attainment of the studio than in other considerations, including publicity.

RESPONSIBLE PUBLICITY

SPEAKING of relations between the daily press and the motion picture it is to be observed that the Evening Telegram of Toronto in its amusement section presents a two column head over theatre notices reading: "Comment by Press Agents on Coming Attractions—responsibility for opinions expressed in these advance notices rests entirely with the theatres concerned."

The consequences of this opening of the gate to the publicity men are not at all what the snap judgment of a layman would anticipate. While the writers do not take this opportunity to be at all doubtful of the merit of their shows they do present their wares with quite as much restraint and endeavor at news treatment as though they were on the staff of the paper. The result is newspaper copy, not "blurb." The press agents are in the paper on their own responsibility and they appear to accept it. They obviously want to be believed.

THAT very neat problem in picture publicity on the radio determining the line along which the audience is given enough entertainment to keep it listening, and not enough to impair its interest in the screen, does not appear to have been precisely solved in "Hollywood Hotel," the Campbell soup hour presided over by Miss Louella Parsons. Recent examples have been afforded in the radio attentions given to "Page Miss Glory" and "The Gay Deception." A great deal has been said and written about the destructive effect of admitting audiences in the middle of the show. An exposition of the show in advance on the air has high probability of attaining an even more serious result.

WITH the general use of panchromatic negative these days the player with eyes of blue or grey or green is no longer handicapped before the camera, we are reminded by Mr. Mervyn LeRoy. There was a time when the color blind film gave preference to the photographic contrast afforded by dark eyes. This will come as good tidings to Mr. Arthur Brisbane, the blue-eyed Mr. Brisbane, who every now and then does a piece on the assertion that all great men have blue eyes and that brown-eyed men never amount to much.

THE ways of fame and publicity are whimsical. The long obituarial attentions to the passing of Mr. John N. Willys told minutely of his dollar career and forgot that his greatest impress on the American scene was the production, too early perhaps, of the first streamlined motor car, the first public manifestation of the current fashion which is shaping everything from pickle bottles to theatre fronts.

JUST on behalf of the motion picture's assets in illusion it might be as well for the industry and its writers to forget the oft used term of "trick photography" and publicity references to the "trick photography departments" of the studios. "Trick" is a belittling word for an important element of technique about which the consumer is not properly concerned. For him results, not methods.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Heavy Buying

Starting its operations well in advance for the current season and given momentum by several hundred theatre reopenings, the industry's distribution machinery has made product deals with circuits and individual exhibitors which in number far exceed the total consummated by this time in 1934, a majority of large companies reported this week.

RKO Radio and Twentieth Century-Fox each counted 5,000 contracts signed and sealed, representing more than half of sales possibilities. Universal has added several hundred new accounts over the tally in the equivalent period last year.

A survey of sales progress as it shapes up to date with all large companies, together with a list of large circuits and important accounts closed, starts on page 13.

Again—'Nell Gwyn'

Note to the London Press:

"Nell Gwyn" has been rejected by the censors of British Columbia. Reason: "Story and dialogue salacious and at variance with decent conventions."

3.67 Shows

Determined to establish, for bargaining purposes, the part which the typical union family plays in the economics of exhibition, 40,000 of such families in Milwaukee were asked about their movie going habits by Projectionists Local No. 164, IATSE.

From the replies it was learned that the average theatregoer attends his neighborhood house 3.67 times a month, and the downtown de luxe run only 2.10 times; the average union family accounts for about 25 admissions a month, each person attending on an average of 5.78 times monthly.

Full results of the survey are reported on page 16.

Buying Originals

The purchase in August by Hollywood producers of 32 original stories, books and plays reflected the well-stocked shelves of studios with material from which to select themes for 1935-36 product schedules.

Universal was the most active, buying eight, with Paramount and Radio close seconds, each purchasing six.

The acquisitions, with title, company and latest available production plans, are listed on page 29.

Radio Trailers?

The regular trailer on a forthcoming motion picture, and even parts from the picture itself, may now be broadcast over the air as an advertising expression by the local exhibitor, and the electrical transcription interests are setting out to sell the medium to theatres.

They face strong opposition, however, for the theatre man does not like the radio because of its competitive aspects, and it is considerably a matter for speculation as to whether any new system such as a sound-on-film-on-air gadget can overcome this opposition.

The story about this new move to win over exhibition as a radio advertiser, the last large business institution in this country to employ the medium, is told on page 24.

From Addis Ababa

From within the shadow of the Royal Palace of the Emperor Haile Selassie—Ethiopia's "Lion of Judah"—John Dored, Paramount newsreel cameraman, writes a first-hand account of the focusing of the American newsreels' cameras on the battlefield where Mussolini's Black Shirts and Selassie's wild tribesmen are expected to settle the question of Italian aggression in Africa.

There's drama in the story Mr. Dored tells, on page 17.

Plea for Novelty

It's up to the producers to provide the exhibitor with screen material that really is "different," if the theatreman is to be prepared for the day when the novelty of the giveaway has worn off, writes "Bunny" Bryan, manager and publicity director of Balaban & Katz's Pantheon theatre in Chicago.

Mr. Bryan's conclusion follows his analysis of the many letters he has had from exhibitors, producers, publicists and even projectionists in comment on his article in the HERALD of August 10th. He summarizes those reactions on page 34 of the current issue.

Tax Returns Up

United States Internal Revenue receipts, always a barometer for gauging business conditions, show theatre admission tax returns of $15,379,397 for 1934-35, some $750,000 more than the $14,613,414 collected in 1933-34.

The government's report of admission tax receipts is analyzed on page 13.

Fighting the Laws

The motion picture industry has not given up the battle against adverse legislation, even though it has become law.

Exhibitors and distributors are engaging, independently or with others, in testing in the courts the constitutionality of measures enacted in the legislative season recently passed in seven states: California, Florida, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio and Wisconsin, while in Mississippi political change promises to bring repeal of the 12 per cent admission tax levied against box offices in that state. See page 43.

Protection Row

Granting of increased clearance is disturbing prior exhibitor-distributor relations in several key cities, and threats to take the issue to court are being voiced.

The selling of protection is in force nationally with MGM, a company spokesman said in connection with complaints in Cleveland that protection deals are upsetting the established system.

In Kansas City, Chicago and Baltimore, too, there are rumblings of conflict over protection granted or demanded. What is happening in these cities is related on page 39.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

British Excitement

John Maxwell, chairman of British Associated Pictures, sees a danger to the British industry and its investors in the climbing costs of production while gross receipts fail to increase at the same pace.

Extravagance and plain wastage of funds in production should be a storm flag to the business, Mr. Maxwell declared. See page 46.

St. Louis Waits

The Government's injunction proceeding in St. Louis against Warner, RKO and Paramount distributing companies, on a charge of conspiring to deprive F. & M. theatres of first-run product, will be heard October 1, as a result of postponement of the action on Tuesday when former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, of Warner counsel, was called to Oregon by the death of a sister. Forty-seven Government witnesses, many from New York, were on hand to testify.

Elsewhere the investigating arm of the Government was active, chiefly in Dallas, where restrictive clauses in circuit contracts were the object of attention, and in Cleveland, where single feature agreements were being looked into on complaint of independent companies. Details will be found on page 23.

For Big Films

Pointing toward productions for the world market, and particularly the American public, the newly expanded Capitol Film Corporation in London this week announced a first year budget approximating $3,000,000. Likewise the new United Productions, consisting of separate production units in a parent organization, starts with a projected standard of outlay of $500,000 a production, according to its announcement.

Mr. Woolf's releasing company, General Film Distributors, Ltd., will handle the product of both companies.

The story is on page 42.

Airing Salaries

Information regarding salaries and other compensation of officials of motion picture companies, withheld by them or their companies when filing applications for registration of their corporation's securities on stock exchanges, will probably be made public shortly by the federal Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington.

Indications that the commission would demand the public filing of such data are seen in the opening to public gaze recently of salary information of 12 non-film companies which sought to keep the records secret.

In the filing of their registration statements, a large number of companies sought to have their salary data kept confidential, in some instances stating on the application that it would be filed confidentially, in others asking for additional time in which to submit it, apparently in the hope that by this means it might escape public observation.

Only a few of the picture companies have not sought to avoid publication of salary figures. In most instances, the information was withheld, for later filing or until the commission passed upon a request that it be kept confidential.

Indications are that while the commission will consider every plea for secret filing, only those in which it can be shown the welfare of the company would be adversely affected without any compensating advantage to the public will such requests be granted. It is generally expected that the SEC will adopt a policy of "pitiless publicity."

Fight Duffy Bill

A Hollywood committee has been appointed to organize a west coast campaign against the Duffy bill removing the maximum penalty for copyright infringements. On the committee are Irving Berlin, Al Jolson, Gus Kahn, Wolfe Gilbert, Bert Kalmar and Al Dubin. The committee will work in conjunction with Nathan Burkan, counsel in New York for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Mr. Burkan addressed a meeting of sixty studio composers in Hollywood recently and described the Duffy bill as "tantamount to licensed piracy." The bill was passed by the Senate but failed to emerge from a House committee. It is slated to be revived in the next session of Congress.

Mussolini to Garbo

The Mussolini Cup for the best foreign film exhibited at the third biennial motion picture exhibit at Venice, Italy, has been awarded to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Anna Karenina," starring Greta Garbo.

The Gold Medal of the Italian Confederation of Professional Men and Artists for the best animated cartoon was awarded to Walt Disney for his "Band Concert."

Two other awards were made, one to Radio Pictures for "Becky Sharp," which was chosen as the best color picture, and the cup donated by the Government Motion Picture Bureau for the best director went to King Vidor for his work in United Artists' "The Wedding Night."

The Town of Venice cup for best music—and folklore picture was won by London Films' "Sanders of the River," United Artists release.

Korda—U. A.

The "internationalization" of United Artists was accomplished this week through the purchase by Alexander Korda, London producer, of a partnership in the American distributing corporation, giving this first British capital to be invested openly in a large American company the same voice in the management as the four other producer-owners: Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin and Samuel Goldwyn.

Mr. Korda's entry into the company marks a decided step forward, said Arthur W. Kelly, United Artists vice-president in charge of foreign distribution. Mr. Kelly saw in the alignment improved product, greater international appeal, as well as economies.

Immediately Samuel Goldwyn decided to produce a film in London and the new Pickford-Lasky productions intimated it would do likewise, these steps being the first to be taken in "a free interchange of personalities and production facilities between United Artists' producers on both sides of the Atlantic." Details of the new arrangement and its potential effects on operations of the corporation are set forth on page 42.

Cummings Lauds

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, while visiting Scotland Yard in London last week, commented on American crime news and particularly American crime pictures to the English press.

Applauding the Hollywood change of attitude regarding gangster pictures, he said:

"These pictures formerly idealized the gangster as a hero. Public opinion, however, has shifted and the motion picture magnates are beginning to put out a different type of picture, placing the accent where it should be. One of the factors which have changed public opinion, I believe, was the crime conference I called in Washington last year."

Giveaway Fever

Court battles and more court battles between state authorities and exhibitors over chance games are following the spread of the practice.

Legal controversies were reported from Connecticut, Des Moines, Boston, Detroit, New York, Rhode Island and Philadelphia.

A competitive fight between independents and circuits also was threatened in southern California by Fox West Coast when it became known that chance games have spread to 65 per cent of the independent theatres in the territory. This week's developments involving the giveaway and chance game are reported on page 77.

30,000 FILM CONTRACTS POINT BUSINESS UPSWING

Large Distributors' Product Deals Are Found Far Ahead of Last Year; Reopened and New Theatres and Earlier Selling Are Notable Factors

by AL FINESTONE

Given an impetus by earlier than usual selling activity and an increase in possibilities through the relighting of hundreds of theatres as well as the opening of new houses, a majority of large distributors this week reported that the number of product deals closed for 1935-36 was running far ahead of the comparative period last year.

On the basis of information provided by the home offices in New York, an estimated total of 30,000 contracts is indicated as closed to date by all the companies.

Of those reporting, RKO Radio and Twentieth Century-Fox were well in the vanguard with more than 5,000 individual accounts already closed by each. In the case of Fox, this is more than 50 per cent of the entire total of 9,500 exhibitor accounts enrolled all of last year. This, in relation to the estimated 14,500 theatres operating in the United States, has been described by Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the merged company's board, as "the greatest film circulation ever established in this business."

750 More Universal Accounts

Universal, which was especially active in spring selling campaigns, has increased its exhibitor list by 750 accounts over the figure at this time last year, said James R. Grainger, general sales manager, and approximately 50 important circuit deals have been closed. Other companies, too, are reaping the benefits of sending sales crews into the field well in advance of completion of programs and the annual conventions, a departure from the custom of starting selling immediately after the sales meetings.

Two thousand theatres have been signed to date by Republic Pictures, comprising circuits as well as individual operations.

Several hundred theatres have been added to the list of distributors' sales possibilities this year as a result of reopenings, which have exceeded many fold the number in any year since the business recession forced widespread closings. To a lesser extent, the list of potential accounts has been augmented by a young wave of new construction, predominantly by independent operators.

$500,000 Deal

Film companies for the most part could not supply actual figures because many deals are yet pending, and because numerous contracts have not been sent in by exchange managers or finally confirmed; but information available established definitely that sales had a long lead over this time last year.

The outstanding single contract obtained by Twentieth Century-Fox was a 40-picture deal with the world's largest theatre, the RKO Music Hall, and the jointly operated RKO Center, which closes the stage production of "The Great Waltz" this Saturday to return to films early in October. The contract provides that the Music Hall has first choice on 22 Twentieth Century-Fox films, and the Center first call on 18. John D. Clark, general sales manager, termed this "the world's largest individual film deal," from a standpoint of dollars and cents, the contract being estimated to yield $500,000.

Outstanding Deals

A study of the most important deals of distributors shows where the bulk of the 1935-36 product has been set in outstanding situations.

A deal has been effected extending for four years—to 1941—the arrangement whereby RKO gets Fox product first-run in Greater New York and in return gives Fox Metropolitan Playhouses first-run RKO pictures and whatever other product RKO acquires. The arrangement is exclusive of Fox product used by Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, but gives RKO theatres the product of Twentieth Century under the contract for this season.

In Boston, one-third of Fox product goes to RKO for first-run and the remainder to M. & P. Theatres (Mullin and Pinansky), Paramount operating partner, for first-runs at the Metropolitan, Fenway and Paramount. All Twentieth Century pictures in Boston go first-run to the Loew circuit. Outside of Boston, Fox films in New England will be shown by M. & P. houses first-run, while with the exception of Providence and New Bedford, the entire Twentieth Century lineup goes to Loew theatres.

Other Large Circuits

Other large circuits contracting for Twentieth Century-Fox product this year were listed by Mr. Clark as follows: Fox West Coast, comprising some 500 theatres nationally; Warner Brothers' theatres; Schine Enterprises, Inc., in upstate New York and Ohio; R. C. Richards Circuit, with headquarters in Mississippi; R. B. Wilby in the south; R. & R. Theatres (Robb & Rowley), at Dallas; Butterfield Theatres in Michigan; Balaban & Katz and Great States Theatres, Chicago and Illinois; Interstate Circuit, Karl Hoblitzelle, president, Dallas; R. E. Griffith Theatres, Dallas.

In addition to more than 5,000 contracts obtained to date, RKO Radio has closed with all the larger circuits, it being merely a matter of time before the actual contracts for these are in, said Jules Levy,

RKO has been especially active in Canada, where the 1935-36 lineup has been sold to prac-

National Attendance Upturn Brings $750,000 U. S. Tax Rise

Definitely demonstrating the extent that theatre attendance is on the up-grade, the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue this week reported that collections from the admission tax during the year ended July 1st last, showed an increase of more than $750,000 over the preceding year.

Total collections during 1934-35 were $15,379,397 against $14,613,414 for 1933-34, and $15,520,512 for 1932-33. Of these totals, ticket sales at film theatre box offices accounted for all but a fraction, amounting last year to $13,757,238 against $13,343,620 in 1934 and $14,027,694 in 1933.

Other collections included $509,384 on free or reduced rate tickets, taxed on the established price, against $513,921 in 1934 and $607,697 in 1933; $42,208 on leases of boxes or seats against $36,819 in 1934 and $27,077 in 1933; $22,172 on admissions sold at the box office in excess of the established price against $18,267 the preceding year and $9,020 in 1933; $94,595 on ticket brokers' sales against $105,878 in 1934 and $99,455 in 1933; and $953,799 on roof garden, cabaret and similar admissions against $594,910 in 1934 and $749,569 in 1933.

The improvement in business was not general throughout the country but was secured by marked increases in admissions in a number of states which more than offset losses in others, analysis of the bureau's figures disclosed.

Box office sales, it was shown, declined in some of the most important states, including Illinois, New York and Pennsylvania. In New York, the loss was slightly less than $149,000, which was almost entirely offset by a gain of $116,000 in California.

While the Bureau makes no distinction between motion picture and other types of theatres, in most states the full box office sales are those of the former and in only a handful of states are legitimate theatres of sufficient importance to make any great difference in the figures, only 17 states and the District of Columbia showing sales by brokers, in but five of which did such sales result in taxes exceeding $1,000, according to the statistics from the Bureau tically all of the important accounts, Mr. Levy said. Included are Famous Players-Canadian Corporation's 200 houses and several smaller circuits, such as the Bloom and Fein and Allen circuits, Toronto, which cover 20 situations each, and Confederation Amusements, Ltd., operating a large group of neighborhood theatres in Montreal.

Other important deals closed by RKO are with the Interstate and affiliated circuits, representing approximately 100 theatres in 36 situations in Texas and New Mexico; Robb & Rowley, 21 towns in Texas; the Butterfield circuit, 35 key towns in Michigan; Poli-New England Theatres (Loew), nine situations; Skouras-Fox theatres; Warner circuit; J. Louis Rome circuit of 10 theatres in Baltimore; Frank Durkee Enterprises, 20 Baltimore situations; Carl Bamford circuit (Publix) of Charlotte, N. C., with three situations in Asheville and the Paramount in Bristol; E. H. Rowley, with four first-runs in Little Rock, Ark.; Coulter Circuit in Richmond and Petersburg, Va.; Fred Sharby Circuit, six situations in New Hampshire and Vermont; Harry Zeits Circuit, Massachusetts; Enger Circuit, Bridgeport, Conn.; J. Real Neth Circuit, Dayton, O.; the first-run Grand theatre, Evansville, Ind.; Dickinson Circuit, 12 theatres in Kansas; Hall Circuit of 17 Texas situations; H. H. Hodge Circuit of eight Texas towns; seven R. L. Bailey theatres in Louisiana; Manning and Wink Circuit of six situations in Georgia and Tennessee; Anderson Circuit of six theatres in Chicago; the T. W. Bailey first-run situation in Wilmington, N. C.

Universal has gained hundreds of new accounts this year, both among circuits and independents, and in addition to the more important circuits "a great many" of the smaller ones have closed for Universal's 1935-36 list, said Mr. Grainger.

What is said to represent "the most important and extensive first-run contract" ever obtained by Universal in New York City has been signed by Howard S. Cullman, receiver-operator of the Roxy, for 26 of the company's productions. This is also described as the largest contract sealed by the Roxy under Mr. Cullman's operation.

RKO and Loew Deal

In the metropolitan New York area, 33 RKO and 58 Loew theatres have split the Universal output, each taking 18 films, with the Loew deal calling for preferred playing time. The Warner circuit has closed for Universal product for Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and New Haven, and deals with the circuit are being negotiated for the Pacific Coast and Albany, N. Y.

Mr. Grainger also announced consummation of contracts with the Butterfield circuit in Michigan covering 77 theatres and with the Jefferson Amusement Company of Beaumont, Tex., Sol Gordon, president, for 59 situations in eastern Texas, and the following: Malco Theatres, Inc., headed by M. A. Lightman, 33 houses in Tennessee and Arkansas; Minnesota Amusement Company, 32 theatres in Minnesota and South Dakota; Balaban & Katz, 31 houses in Chicago; Great States circuit (Publix), 63 situations in Illinois and Indiana, this deal embracing all features, serials, shorts and Universal News; Schine Theatrical Enterprises, New York and Ohio, 47 situations; M. A. Shea circuit, 20 houses in Boston, Cleveland and Pittsburgh; Danz circuit, Seattle, 18 houses; Morgan Walsh circuit, California, 14; A. E. Lichtman circuit, Washington, D. C., 10; Semelroth circuit, Cincinnati and Dayton, six; Dickinson circuit, Kansas and Missouri, 26; Harry and Milton Arthur theatres in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Prescott, Ariz., Boulder, Nev., Long Beach, Cal., and the circuit's first-runs in St. Louis, a total of 15 theatres.

SOME HIGHLIGHTS OF SALES SEASON

Twentieth Century-Fox claims the most lucrative film deal in the world —a 40-picture contract with the RKO Music Hall and the RKO Center in Radio City, expected to yield $500,000 this year.

Universal's list of accounts is reported as totaling 750 more than the number in the same period in 1934.

Several hundred reopenings have swelled the distributors' sales possibilities.

Additional Bookings

Universal has also closed Essaness, 28 subsequent runs in the Chicago territory; the Comerford circuit in Pennsylvania and New York states; E. J. Sparks theatres in Florida; Interstate Texas Consolidated Theatres, 72 houses; Dolle circuit, Indianapolis, Louisville and other Kentucky towns, 10; Milton Feld Theatres, first-run in Indianapolis; Charles Hayman Theatres, Buffalo and Niagara Falls, three; Schulte circuit, Detroit, eight; J. Real Neth circuit, Columbus, four; Allard Graves circuit, New Hampshire and Vermont, five; Robb & Rowley circuit, Texas and Oklahoma, 69; Dubinsky circuit, Missouri and Kansas, 10; Tri-State circuit, Des Moines, Cedar Rapids, Moline, Omaha and Sioux City, 26; Keith theatre, Baltimore; U. V. Young circuit, Indianapolis and Kentucky, 13; P. M. Lewis circuit, Atlantic City, four; Spreckles theatre, San Diego; Blumenfeld circuit, Berkeley, Sacramento and Oakland, Cal., nine; Interstate circuit, Massachusetts and Connecticut, 12; Scott circuit, Pennsylvania, seven; St. Louis Amusement Company, 22; Maine & New Hampshire circuit, in those states and Vermont, 23; S. Berger chain, Minneapolis, five; J. J. Parker theatres, Portland, three; Hall circuit, 31 towns in Texas; B. & F. circuit, Toronto, 17; Sharby circuit, New Hampshire and Vermont, seven.

In the absence of Felix F. Feist, general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who is vacationing in Europe, it was said at the home office that MGM is "further ahead in its sales this year than ever in its career."

William F. Rodgers, eastern division sales manager, explained it is premature to announce the number of accounts closed or a comparison with last year because many contracts have not been submitted to the home office for approval as yet and others are in the process of preparation. However, MGM features and shorts will play the entire Loew circuit and the affiliated Poli group in New England, and, as in past years, MGM films will go to Fox West Coast.

Chicago Atmosphere Cleared

With MGM harmonizing percentage and other differences with independent circuits in Chicago, one of the country's most important cities from the standpoint of revenue, the company's sales have made substantial gains. MGM is reported fighting it out with Twentieth Century-Fox for second place in the exchange rating, with Paramount so far leading.

Warner announced several weeks ago that contracts representing 36 per cent of a normal year's business already had been signed for the new season's output, and this week Andrew W. Smith, Jr., vice-president in charge of eastern and Canadian sales, said the company's standing was surpassing last year's.

Warners' 1935-36 rating was increased materially by a four-year franchise deal with the national RKO circuit under which Warner and Cosmopolitan productions will play the circuit's metropolitan New York theatres and other key cities. This deal climaxed two weeks of negotiations, resumed after a short interval during which first-runs were sold away from RKO in Greater New York to several independent circuit theatres. As a result, Warner's program is blocked out of four RKO houses in New York for this season, while subsequent runs will be sold to the unaffiliated circuits which formerly held high hopes for a first-run Warner contract, but the first-run deal with the competititve Century circuit will stand.

Warner Deals in Field

Outside of Greater New York, Warner and Cosmopolitan product will receive first runs in major theatres in New Orleans, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Omaha, Des Moines, Sioux City, Davenport, Cedar Rapids and other cities, beginning with Cosmopolitan's "Page Miss Glory."

Minnesota Amusement Corporation has taken the Warner lineup, the deal involving 77 theatres in the northwest territory, and deals covering the entire Warner-First National program of features, shorts and trailers have been closed with B & K and Great States circuits in Illinois and Indiana. Great States last year did not play Warner product, this representing new business in that territory.

Other major Warner contracts are: First-run franchises with Mort Singer at Orpheum Theatres in five cities in affiliation with RKO; Golden States and T & D, Jr. circuit a long term deal for 75 houses in San Francisco and outlying towns, including Vitaphone shorts and trailers; E. J. Sparks circuit, 85 houses in Florida, all features and shorts, and R. E. Griffith Amusement Corporation, for the entire output in 58 houses in Oklahoma, Texas and New Mexico.

While both Paramount and United Artists were reluctant to reveal details of their sales activity this year, a United Artists executive said the company's releases will play the entire Loew circuit, as well as the Warner and "all other circuits." In the case of Loew's the transaction includes Walt Disney shorts.

The full program of Paramount product will be exhibited in affiliated theatre outlets, which number some 1,100 throughout the world.

Marking a change from last year, Loew's Metropolitan circuit in Greater New York will get the entire Paramount lineup instead of the 50 per cent it tied up in 1934 when RKO Metropolitan theatres obtained the other half. Paramount films have been bought for first-runs by RKO in 10 cities—Cincinnati, Columbus,

GB Cites Expansion

George W. Weeks, general sales manager of GB Pictures, said his organization "has as complete coverage in all the important key situations as the old established producing and distributing companies, although in business less than a year." GB now has 31 sales exchanges, in the United States, releasing physically through Fox, and an investment of $22,000,000 was placed in circulation, said Mr. Weeks.

GB's entire program of 16 films, selected from the parent company's output of 52 for their American audience appeal, has been bought by these circuits; RKO nationally, deals outside of New York, including among other cities, Boston, Lowell, Providence, Syracuse, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and Newark; Malco circuit in the South; Harry Brandt Theatres in Greater New York; Theatrical Managers, Inc.; Harris circuit in the Pittsburgh territory; Gregg circuit in North Carolina; Warner circuit in Connecticut and Massachusetts; Central States Theatres; Glen W. Dickinson circuit in Kansas, Missouri and Iowa; Monarch Theatres, Ohio; Tri-State Theatres, Iowa, Nebraska and Illinois; Walter Reade circuit, New York and New Jersey; Wilmer and Vincent circuit in Pennsylvania and Virginia; Harry Arthur first-runs, Ambassador and Fox, St. Louis; St. Louis Amusement Company; Skouras Theatres.

First-run deals have been effected with the World, Minneapolis, and the World, St. Paul, for all 16 films. GB's New York outlet is the Roxy.

Republic Pictures Corporation, erected on the foundation of its predecessor, Monogram Pictures, entered the field with new distribution machinery which already has disposed of its initial program to 2,000 theatres, among them many key runs and circuits, chief among which are the Loew Metropolitan circuit in New York with 63 houses and the RKO Metropolitan group of 42 situations, each taking 24 pictures.

W. Ray Johnston, Republic president, announced a total of 115 key runs in 30 distribution territories, headed by the Fox and Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y., and including among more important situations, the Keith or Boston, Boston; Albee and Strand, Providence, R. I.; Loew's, Hartford, Conn.; Bijou, Springfield, Mass.; Princess, Toledo; Lyric, Tulsa; Astor and Hollywood, Atlantic City; Palace and Majestic, San Antonio; Palace, Dallas; Worth, Ft. Worth; RKO Downtown, Detroit; Riverside, Milwaukee; Rivoli, Baltimore; Roosevelt or Strand, Washington; Post Street, Spokane; Golden Gate, San Francisco.

33 Local Circuits Signed

Thirty-three local circuits have closed for Republic product in 19 exchange territories. Besides the RKO and Loew deals in metropolitan New York, they are: Warner theatres in Milwaukee; Jefferson Amusement Company, Interstate circuit, Robb & Rowley, Hall circuit, Rubin Frels' circuit, Hodge circuit, all in the Dallas territory; Publix-Kincey and Anderson circuits, Charlotte; Griffith circuit, Colorado; Schine and Benton circuits, Buffalo and Albany; Publix-Wilby, Hill circuit, Orr circuit, All Amusement Company, Neely circuit, all in the Atlanta area; Bailey circuit, New Orleans; George Hunt circuit, Portland; Redwood circuit, San Francisco; Franklin Theatrical Enterprises, Hawaii (served from San Francisco); St. Louis Amusement Company, St. Louis; Finkelstein and Central States circuits, Des Moines and Omaha; Berger circuit, Minneapolis; E. M. Loew, Morse and Sharby circuits, New England; U. V. Young, theatres, Indianapolis; Alger circuit, Chicago; Commonwealth Amusement Company, Kansas City territory and Southwestern theatres, Oklahoma.

CHANGES INVOLVE SEVEN COMPANIES

The season of 1935-36, among motion picture producers and distributors, will be notable for developments affecting seven active companies.

Four companies were involved in reorganizations which have been completed or are in final stages of consummation: Twentieth Century-Fox, with its resultant impact on United Artists; Paramount, whose discharge from jurisdiction of the courts is only a matter of time, and First Division, which became a subsidiary of First International Pictures, Inc., chiefly financed by Pathe, which itself was reorganized only recently.

A new producing and distributing company is Republic Pictures Corporation.

Gaumont British launched its first full selling campaign.

Allowances must be made for First Division in a survey of the sales situation, since as a result of the company's reorganization and the readjustment of its production program, it has not been able to start its campaign intensively until this week. The company announced, however, that three features readying for release will be shown in the RKO and Loew metropolitan circuits in New York. They are Invincible's "Death from a Distance" and Chesterfield's "Girl Who Came Back" and "Condemned to Live." First Division's "Java Head" has been sold to circuit operations in a number of cities.

Among other sources of product, Loew's this season will have available for its Greater New York theatres the following: MGM, 52; United Artists, 14; Paramount, 65; Columbia, 40, and 18 from Universal. The RKO Metropolitan circuit's mainstay will be 50 from RKO Radio, 65 from Twentieth Century-Fox, 18 Universal films and the Warner program.

Fox West Coast Deals

One of the foremost buyers of both first-run and subsequent run product, Fox West Coast, with some 500 theatres operated by Skouras Brothers, has set deals with United Artists, MGM, RKO Radio, Columbia, Warners, Universal, Paramount, Fox, Gaumont British and, to a limited extent, Republic.

The Stanley-Warner circuit in the Philadelphia zone has closed for Warner-First National, RKO Radio, Paramount, MGM and United Artists.

The 85 E. J. Sparks theatres in Florida have contracted for MGM, Paramount, Universal and Warner. To the Publix-affiliated theatres' first-run list in Minneapolis and St. Paul has been added Universal this year, rounding out the quota of product from MGM, Paramount, Warner, Fox and United Artists.

Allied of Texas is sponsoring sales of product to its membership under a reciprocal arrangement with the Sacks Film Company, San Antonio territorial distributor for Chesterfield, which is contributing the revenue from one film to the organization's treasury in return.

Among insular deals made with the home offices was one closed by Universal with Consolidated Amusement Company for its circuit covering the Hawaii territory, and contracts for all major company product except Universal effected by United Theatres Company, Inc., of Puerto Rico for its 15 theatres, the largest circuit on the island.

Zukor Named Head Of Broadway Corp.

Adolph Zukor has been elected president of the reorganized Paramount Broadway Corporation, the Paramount Pictures subsidiary which holds title to the Paramount Building and theatre in the Times Square area of New York, it was disclosed in the Broadway company's recent application to the New York Stock Exchange for the listing of its new securities.

Officers of the company, in addition to Mr. Zukor, are Y. Frank Freeman and Walter B. Cokell, vice-presidents; Cokell, treasurer; Eugene J. Zukor and Edward Brown, assistant treasurers; Frank Meyer and Cokell, assistant secretaries.

The Broadway company's application for listing of its new $8,875,000 issue of first mortgage sinking fund loan certificates, due Feb. 15, 1955, has been granted by the Stock Exchange. The certificates, which are being guaranteed by the parent company, Paramount Pictures, Incorporated, are being issued to holders of $8,875,000 of original certificates of the company in exchange.

The 1935 assessed valuation of the Paramount Building site is $6,000,000, and of the building itself, $5,600,000. The consolidated balance sheet of the company, as of June 30, last, shows assets of $14,018,040, of which $446,927 is in accounts receivable from the parent and affiliated companies. A deficit of $1,155,646 at June 30, last, is reported.

The Stock Exchange has also suspended from dealings two old Paramount bond issues, the Paramount-Publix 20 year five and one-half per cent 1950 issue and certificates of deposit, and the Paramount-Famous-Lasky 20 year 6s 1947 and certificates of deposit.

Subscriptions so far received to the new Paramount common stock amount to 1,462,442 shares of 1,610,452 shares authorized and 575,271 of the 644,181 shares of new second preferred stock authorized under the reorganization plan. The plan gave holders of common stock the right to acquire for each share of the old common one-quarter share of new common and one-fifth share of second preferred on payment of $2.

Neighborhood Theatre Still Has Greatest Appeal for Average Fan

DeLuxe Run Draws Average Theatregoer 2.10 Times a Month, Neighborhood, 3.67 Times

The neighborhood theatre draws the average motion picture theatre patron 3.67 times a month, whereas the downtown first-run house attracts the average fan only 2.10 times in the same period.

Consumers' surveys by retailers, wholesalers or manufacturers are not uncommon, but a survey by the employees of an industry to determine the economic power which they yield in their industry, through affiliated workers' organizations, is unusual.

Such a survey has just been completed by Motion Picture Projectionists Union, Local No. 164, IATSE, Milwaukee. The idea was conceived by the wage scale committee of the union and executed under its direction by Oscar E. Olson, business manager. The tabulated replies to a business reply post card questionnaire submitted by the union to more than 40,000 Milwaukeeans presents an interesting version of the part motion pictures play in the lives of the people.

Questions asked in the survey were as follows: How many persons in your family? How many under 12 years of age? How many over 12? How many times each month do you and the members of your family attend the movies? What movie house do you usually attend? How often do you attend a movie in your neighborhood, or downtown? What is the nearest movie to your home?

92 Per Cent of Replies Signed

The frankness of the persons replying is indicated by the fact that, although signatures were not requested, about 92 per cent signed their names and addresses.

According to the returns, the average trade union family unit (slightly more than 4 persons each) accounts for about 25 theatre admissions a month. The average attendance of each person is 5.78 times a month. Adults go more frequently than children, in small families, but less frequently than the children in large families. The members of the low income groups go to motion picture shows more frequently than those in high income groups, but this general statement is conditioned by the size of the family. The larger the family the less frequently each member attends the cinema.

Childless Families Go Most

Champion film goers of Milwaukee would appear to be families of two persons who average total admissions of 100 a month. This means that each of the two members of the family attends 50 times each month.

At the other end of the scale are those who never attend a motion picture show. These constitute but nine-tenths of one per cent of the average population. Commenting on this, Frank Kirkpatrick, noted economist, who analyzed the survey figures, said: "I can think of no other human activity except those having to do with primal existence, such as eating, sleeping, wearing clothes, etc., in which so large a percentage of our population engages. Certainly a much greater number than one per cent of us never smoke, never drink, never ride in street cars or motors, never read newspapers, or never engage in any one or another of the many activities we consider common or even essential."

HARRISON SEES NEED FOR A FILM THEATRE

Business men of Harrison, N. J., have pointed out that residents of the town spend money in Newark and Jersey City which would be spent at home if the town had its own theatre and are sponsoring a move to reduce the prohibitive $10,000 license fee for theatres.

The town has a population of 1,500 and has 80 saloons, but not a theatre.

5 Per Cent Watch for Label

Many of the persons answering the questionnaire volunteered information which is not unimportant. About 5 per cent said that they attend only those motion picture houses where the union emblem is displayed. Probably this percentage would have been many times greater if the question had been asked.

One woman replied she thought the salaries of actors were too high. Another said he does not attend because he is a musician and lost his job because of "sound." And dozens indicated on their cards that they would attend oftener if they received wages which permitted more spending for entertainment.

The survey disclosed many facts which are of particular interest to exhibitors. Although the typical cinema goer attends his neighborhood theatre 3.67 times a month and a downtown theatre 2.10 times in the same period, of all the persons replying to the survey, 2.7 per cent said they attended only the downtown houses and their average attendance per month per person was 5.33 times.

Drops in Higher Income Groups

If those who attend only downtown houses are added to those who listed a downtown theatre as the one they usually attend, the percentage of downtown movie goers is raised to 15.7 per cent with average attendance of 4.54 times per month, per person. This last named classification of movie goers attends local theatres only about one and one-half times per month per person.

While this survey for the most part was conducted among the members of trade unions in Milwaukee, a check was also made of professional and business groups. The latter information was not considered of great importance, insofar as the objectives of the projectionists were concerned, but sufficient information was obtained to indicate that attendance falls off sharply in the higher income groups.

According to the economist: "If patronage from any one group can be said to support such a widespread business, this survey indicates that the motion picture industry is largely supported by wage earners. Undoubtedly this is accounted for by the fact that people in business and professional groups have more of both free time and money to permit greater diversification in recreation than is possible for wage earners. Probably the best index of business in the motion picture industry is the index of employment and payrolls in industry."

30% From Wage Earners

The projectionists are well pleased with the results of the survey, according to Mr. Olson. He pointed out that even after discounting by 20 per cent official figures on trade union membership, the survey indicates that a typical downtown Class A theatre receives about 30 per cent of its business from affiliated wage earners. Other classifications draw large percentages of their box office receipts from trade unionists as follows:

Class 1 (a) (Not given because it would disclose exhibitor).

Class 1 (b)	6	per cent
Class 2	40	**" "
Class 3	24	**" "
Class 4	33½	**" "
Class 5	40⅓	**" "

"Our thought in making this survey," said Mr. Olson, "was to determine what part of the patronage in the industry comes from our affiliated fellow workers. We wanted to know this for bargaining purposes, believing that the more we know about our business the better equipped we will be to deal justly for ourselves and with our employers."

"With this information we are provided with arguments that the exhibitor cannot ignore. On the other hand, we know that he has arguments that we should consider. When each of us knows where the other stands, and why, wage scale bargaining should not be difficult. This, in turn, should eliminate costly disputes."

Newsreel Camera in Shadow of Palace of the Lion of Judah

Dored Sends Firsthand Account of Latest Events at Ethiopian Frontier

by JOHN DORED
Paramount Newsreel Cameraman
Stationed at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia

John Dored, Paramount Newsreel cameraman, shown ready for action at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, where, with native assistants, he and other newsreel photographers are awaiting word to film Mussolina's invasion with Italian forces.

Mr. Dored enjoys several distinctions. Aside from a long and active career with the news camera, he is a personal friend of Emperor Haile Selassie. He is the Emperor's advisor at times on things photographic, and was the first newsreel cameraman to report for duty in Abyssinia.

On the eve of almost certain hostilities in Africa, A. J. Richard, editor of Paramount News in New York, received from Cameraman Dored a first-hand account of incidents to date at the front. These are related herewith for the first time.

We are headquartered in the Imperial hotel here, in the shadow of the palace of my personal friend, the Emperor, Haile Selassie.

This old town hums. Fierce native tribesmen throng through its dirty twisting streets. Supplies pour into the city. The hotel is already filled to near capacity. Foreign newspapermen are keyed to a high pitch. It is almost impossible to purchase a camel (the animal)—the "news hawks" having bought them up to prevent latecomers from following the news to the front. Our war staff, however, is completely quartered and equipped.

It rains every day, clearing occasionally for a few hours. At night it grows intensely cold, and there is no heating system in the Imperial, nor any other place.

Ethiopian officials are very courteous, very cooperative, but very firm. Our cameramen are permitted to make pictures of anything they want—with the approval of these officials. The fact that we were the first on the scene hasn't hurt matters. In fact it has helped us to become known, which is everything now. Without ready identification, a news man, especially a newsreel cameraman, might just as well have stayed at home.

An army officer has been assigned to accompany each cameraman at all times. That makes things a lot easier.

White Men Off Streets

A white man may not walk on the streets of Addis Ababa, nor may he carry any burden, not even a newspaper. That meant hiring a carriage and driver, at least ten porters, and an interpreter. After three days we were ready to take pictures. By this time an engineer from our Paris bureau had arrived with sound equipment.

The following morning we started up into the hills overlooking Addis Ababa. With us were the Ethiopian officer, all ten porters, the interpreter, and 12 mules carrying the bulky sound equipment and necessary accessories. All but the porters were mounted on wiry native horses.

It was slow going. The trail we followed could hardly be called a road. The rain poured down monotonously, reducing the patch underfoot to an ankle and sometimes a knee-deep morass of mud. Ten miles of this twisting mountain trail must be covered before the elevation could be reached. Then all we could do was hope that the sun would come out momentarily; otherwise no picture would be possible, because at this distance from the city and with such poor light, it would be impossible to expose the film sufficiently.

Eyed With Suspicion

Four hours of slow plodding and the miniature caravan was still a mile from its goal. Occasionally we met small groups of natives driving heavily loaded mules before them. These wiry tribesmen, scarcely touched by civilization, eyed our camera expedition with suspicion and muttered low remarks as we passed. They wore curious tent-like "raincoats" of stiff straw extending almost to their ankles to ward off the rain. The officer persuaded one group to pose. Our camera was set up while the open-mouthed natives watched. Mud and rain made the task a dreary, tedious effort.

Thatch mats were laid in the road to give cameramen and soundmen dry footing. The porters set up a flimsy canvas roof to shelter them from the downpour. By this time the fear and suspicion of the tribesmen was such that they could not be persuaded to pass or stand in front of the apparatus that to them appeared to be an instrument of the devil. The Ethiopian officer prevailed upon them to remain, but they went muttering on their way and even the jingle of our silver coins could not tempt them. Two hours were wasted. It would be necessary to knock down our outfit and continue the journey to the mountain top now near at hand.

Another group of travellers approached. After a half-hour's negotiations, involving persuasion to the extent of five dollars in silver coins, they agreed to be photographed. It was first necessary for both cameraman and soundman to stand in front of the running camera in order to show them that they would suffer no injury. The painful progress of the little group in their stiff thatch "raincoats" driving their mules over the muddy trail was finally "shot."

Then Pandemonium

About to make a retake for closeups, pandemonium suddenly broke upon the group. One of the natives tripped on the straw matting and his sprawling bare feet hit the storage battery used to power the sound apparatus. Blue flame spattered and crackled round his legs. His shriek of terror sent all the natives screaming down the trail. It took an hour to get them back up the road and more precious minutes to restore discipline. The shocked porter, his teeth chattering in fright, refused to return. He went back to Addis Ababa with the travellers who had posed for the picture. It was the first sight of electricity for all the natives, and afterwards, no one in the city would approach the assembled apparatus.

Our outfit was finally dismantled and again packed on the backs of the mules. In a half hour the elevation was reached and Addis Ababa could be seen faintly through the gray veil of rain. Now it was necessary to wait for the sun. The outfit was set up again, after which the natives prepared a midday meal. Our camera-crew, army officer, and interpreters ate a lunch at the hotel. Six hours passed and all hope of the sun's appearance was gone. Fifty feet of film were "shot" in the vain hope that it might be even faintly exposed.

Five days passed before the sun shone again over Addis Ababa. Each one of those days the same muddy, exhausting journey was repeated. But our pictures were made, at the end of the fifth day—just one scene that when finally shown to the public would run 10 feet at the most, for a period of six and two-thirds seconds.

At the end of each exasperating day we returned to the drafty unheated Imperial, soaked through and chilled to the bone. The menace of fever constantly threatens and as a preventive we take quantities of quinine, almost as unpleasant as the fever might be.

Swedish Officers Drilling

Meanwhile in the Royal Palace the net of diplomatic intrigue kept us and newspapermen in constant tension. We watched each other suspiciously for fear of being "beaten" on some sensational break. During the day our camera crew investigated various parts of the city for "color" shots. We "shot" several hundred feet on Swedish military officers drilling the pitifully inept natives, recruits in a motley collection of makeshift uniforms, without so much as a rifle with which to train. We photographed Emperor Haile Selassie in his suite of offices in intervals between the parade of known and unknown visitors to His Highness. Always the military officer accompanied them. Many scenes we wanted he refused us permission to "shoot."

Can't Film Crack Troops

When Haile Selassie reviewed his crack troops just before their departure for the Eritrean border, the officer politely informed us that it would be impossible to photograph them. The pictures were photographed; a camera concealed in the roof of a thatched hovel caught some significant views of the not-so-inept, well disciplined and adequately equipped regiments. Other scenes were taboo. Newly-arrived crates of supplies, the transfer of inestimable wealth from the secret vaults of the Emperor, to the more remote and safer resting place, hoards of modern military equipment—all these could not be photographed and no ingenuity could invent the means for "stealing" them.

No objection was made to taking pictures of the thousands upon thousands of wild tribesmen who tramped into Addis Ababa, barefooted, and carrying only an antiquated but accurate rifle and a few rounds of ammunition. Every day they thronged into the city, their chieftains paid respects to the Emperor, then they departed again. Though officials refused to reveal their destination, no one in Addis Ababa doubted that they were headed anywhere but to the frontiers.

Every encouragement was given our crew in recording the meeting of Ethiopia's prominent women who banded together in an organization "For Defense of Ethiopia" and who raised $10,000 for war supplies in less than three minutes.

Next comes the actual scenes of battle, now considered almost inevitable. Preparations for the newsreel coverage of actual warfare are being rushed. Camels are being held in readiness, more than 50 natives have been hired. Some will serve as porters and guides, but others in relays will rush exposed film to shipping points. With other newsreels' representatives arriving on the field, the fight to get pictures to America first will rage almost as bitterly as the struggle between Italy and Ethiopia.

40 Miles a Day Barefooted

A good-sized caravan will be a necessity. Every vital item of equipment must be considered; every unnecessary object must be left behind. When war starts the cameramen will have to move fast, for Emperor Haile Selassie's barefooted troops march 40 miles a day over agonizing terrain. If the Emperor refuses official permission to cameramen to go to the battle front, they'll have to find other means of getting there, even if it's necessary to buy airplanes to do it. The pictures must be obtained, and will be obtained.

Brains, bravery and bribery will bring the war to a world audience on the motion picture screen. While the cameraman fights native ignorance and suspicion, official restrictions, and all the barriers of nature, he must remember that pictures don't make themselves.

NEWSREEL "BREAKS" CRIME AS POLICE FAIL

The spectacle of six cold-blooded young gangsters falling prey to their overweening conceit and confessing before the sound cameras of Hearst Metrotone News to a brutal murder and robbery in Brooklyn early Labor Day, is being viewed on the screens of the country.

The criminal sextette fell victims to their underworld vanity after hours of questioning by police had failed to break down their defiant denials. But the spotlight of the sound cameras unsealed their lips, and as they posed and talked for the films, each word they uttered brought them nearer to the electric chair. Hearst Metrotone got it exclusively.

The slaying to which they confessed was characterized by New York's District Attorney Geoghan as one of the most cold-blooded crimes on record. Its victim was Edwin Esposito, New York subway collector. And the proceeds were a little more than $30 in nickels for each of the six.

Rubber Bathtub

As the small army of reporters, still photographers and moving picture men wait watchfully, the tension is relaxed occasionally by a touch of humor. One newcomer (not a newsreel man) arrived at the Imperial hotel accompanied by five porters weighed down with baggage. Later a reporter with whom he was forced to bunk reported that one of the bags contained a very neat little folding bathtub of rubber.

Newsreel men won't have rubber bathtubs with them when the African campaign begins in earnest. They'll ride on horses and camels until they're ready to collapse from exhaustion. They'll sleep when and where they can. They'll hope for even one slender meal a day. They'll fight fever, heat, and they'll battle obstinate equipment, jiggled out of order in long wilderness marches; they'll curse the war and pray that they won't stop a bullet. Then they'll worry about getting the film back to Broadway.

Most Expensive Assignment

While coverage of war is more or less a routine matter for seasoned newspaper correspondents, the Abyssinian-Italian trouble, if real complications ensue, will be the first major encounter which organized cameramen of American newsreels will experience, according to A. J. Richard, editor of Paramount News, in New York.

Mr. Richard, for over 20 years a newsgatherer for motion picture screens and one of the federal administrators of motion picture arrangements during the World War, made these observations:

"In the World War, picture-reporting of the news was in its infancy. Rigid government regulation prevented independent organizations from sending their cameramen where the fire of battle raged most violently. All pictures were made by military photographers, and only those approved by government censors were released.

"Today all that is changed. Emperor Haile Selassie has asserted that cameramen will not be permitted to accompany his troops because it will be too dangerous; but within 14 days of the first battle of bullets in Africa that same rattle will echo in thousands of theatres throughout the world.

"The possible Abyssinian-Italian war will be the first real war that the newsreels have ever had the opportunity of covering. It promises also to be the biggest and most expensive assignment in the history of newsreels.

80,000 Feet of Film Shipped

"Prior to the World War the only other possibility had been the frequent fighting in Mexico and the only real opportunity had been in Pancho Villa's operations. In this case Villa is reported to have sold out the picture rights of his campaign for $100,000 to a Chicago motion picture concern. It is even reported that many of his major battles were fought according to light conditions and camera locations.

"In the present Abyssinian situation reports for a time were circulated in New York that an attempt was being made to buy picture rights and 'bottle-up' the pictures of one side or another. Finally, both the Abyssinian and Italian governments denied that any favoritism would be played in the event of hostilities.

"While cameramen have had a taste of war coverage, and even casualties in the last 10 years since the World War in various disturbances throughout the world, there has never been the opportnuity of making newsreel pictures of anything approaching a major campaign.

"To provide for every eventuality in Africa, we alone have shipped into the possible war area over 80,000 feet of film. Each cameraman, and there are now five in Africa, has been provided with a spare camera in case the first machine is broken, destroyed or confiscated. And each cameraman, in addition to the usual field equipment, has been supplied with two gas masks, concentrated food and maps. A portable dark room has been set up in Addis Ababa for making frequent tests of exposed films."

All of the newsreel units in Abyssinia are using every known method of transportation from the camel caravan to motorcycles with side cars and airplanes.

Jack Lewis, Eddy Eckels Head New Coast Publicity Service

Publicity service on a large scale for Hollywood clients both in and out of motion pictures will be the business of the new combination of Eddy Eckels, recently resigned RKO studio advertising and exploitation chief; Jack Lewis, formerly with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and Hubbard Robinson, former western chief for Warner Brothers Theatres in exploitation.

All ex-reporters, the three have gathered togethered nine Hollywood publicity and advertising writers, to supply, on behalf of clients, each of Hollywood's 250 correspondents with publicity material. So far they have signed to handle Fanchon and Marco and some 26 free-lance motion picture players and directors, and have formed two community associations involving groups of local stores and cafes for exploitation.

Mass. Allied Wants "Top Hat" on 1934 Pacts

The Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, an Allied unit, has advised members by bulletin that they should insist on "Top Hat" as a 1934-35 release, despite the fact it is being sold in Boston as a part of the RKO 1935-36 product.

"RKO is legally as well as morally obligated to deliver 'Top Hat' as a 1934-35 picture," the bulletin said, "in view of the fact that the company promised to deliver three Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers pictures when selling the 1934-35 product, but has come through with only two."

First Division Adds to Sales Staff

Harry H. Thomas, president of First Division, has returned from a tour of branches and announced the appointment at Detroit of Sam Decker as midwest division manager, and William Flemion, branch manager, with Clive Waxman, circuit representative, George Custer, city salesman, and Bert Foster and Frank Stuart, salesmen for the state.

Al Friedlander, vice-president, reported the appointment in Buffalo of Basil Brady, former Pathe manager, as branch head, while Charles Johnson, formerly with Columbia, will cover central New York state, and Amos Leonard will cover the Syracuse section.

To Preserve Illusion

Measures to counteract the tendency of some columnists and publications to disclose production secrets to the public were discussed at a meeting of advertising and publicity department heads of film companies at the MPPDA office on Tuesday. A report was made on the proposed publication of a children's magazine designed for free distribution at theatres. No action was taken.

Whitehead to Aid TERA

Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors, has been named by Miss Hallie Flanagan, in charge of Federal theatre projects, to the Reclassification Board of the Temporary Emergency Relief Administration. Mr. Whitehead will recommend performers for acting posts and act as general advisor.

Wampas-Masquers May Merge

A proposal that members of the Wampas, organization of West Coast film publicity men, be absorbed in The Masquers, is to be voted on by members of both organizations in Hollywood. The Wampas, once a powerful organization famous for its nominations of "Baby Stars," has lost much ground in recent years.

Lawton Heads Division

Stanley W. Lawton, managing director of the George M. Cohan and Wallack theatres, New York, has been appointed head of the motion picture division of the National Constitution Day Celebration Committee. He has prepared a trailer for the celebration, which takes place September 17.

Trop Japanese Representative

J. D. Trop has been appointed American representative of Towa Shoji G. K. Company, Japanese distributing organization.

ST. LOUIS TRUST SUIT POSTPONED TO OCT. 1

U. S. Studies Cleveland Single Feature Agreements; Dallas Trade Practices Scrutinized

Postponement to October 1 of the federal action against large distributors in St. Louis, investigation of single feature agreements in Cleveland, presumably at the instigation of independent producers and distributors, and a searching examination of exhibition and distribution practices in the Dallas territory were the highlights of developments in the Government's moves against the industry this week.

Former U. S. Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, of counsel for Warner Bros., Inc., and affiliated companies, was called to Portland, Ore., by the death of a sister. Judge George H. Moore, over the objection of Russell Hardy, assistant U. S. attorney general, on Tuesday continued the hearing on the Government's petition asking the U. S. district court in St. Louis to order Warner, RKO Distributing, Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., and their subsidiaries and officials to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not be issued restraining them from continuing their alleged conspiracy to deprive the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central theatres, F. & M. operations, of first-run films, as charged by the Department of Justice.

Expense Assessed to Warners

The expense of bringing the 47 Government witnesses to the court and other costs incident to the hearing, totalling about $5,000, were assessed by Judge Moore against the Warner companies.

Samuel B. Jeffries, of St. Louis, counsel for Warner, told the court it would be several days before Senator Reed could return, and held that it was customary under such circumstances for the courts to grant a postponement. Counsel for the Paramount and RKO were ready and willing to proceed, and the continuance was vigorously opposed by Mr. Hardy, who said the victims of the alleged conspiracy were being "destroyed" by the delay. He said other attorneys were available to defend the Warner companies.

The injunction proceedings come up the day after the criminal case against Warner and other companies is set for trial. Mr. Hardy informed the court he would provide counsel for RKO and Ned E. Depinet, its president, and would file the bill of particulars ordered by the court several weeks ago.

Additional Delay Seen

The serious illness of Abel Cary Thomas, general counsel and secretary of Warner, and one of the defendants in the criminal case, may be the occasion for additional delay in the criminal suit.

Warner and its affiliates are contending no injunction is necessary as the same issues are covered in the trial of the antitrust charges set for September 30. RKO and Paramount contend there is no argument not to sell the F. & M. theatres, while Warner charges that an injunction that would compel film sales to those houses would place them in absolute control of the first-run situation, as F. & M. has an agreement covering the Fox and St. Louis theatres.

Those subpoenaed from New York were Neil Agnew, Austin C. Keough and Norman Collyer for Paramount; Jules Levy and Cresson Smith, RKO; E. K. Hessberg and Robert W. Perkins, Warner; and Harry C. Arthur, Irving Lesser, Jack Partington and Spyros Skouras. Subpoenaed locally were Louis Ellman, RKO; Maurice Schweitzer, Paramount; James Winn, Warner; Clayton Lynch, MGM; Harry Scott, U. A.; Joseph Garrison, Universal; Byron S. Moore, Shubert theatre; Robert Hicks, Orpheum; Harry Greenman and Charles Kurtzman, Fox theatre; Clarence M. Turley and Allen L. Snyder, Ambassador; Tom K. Smith and Jacob Chasnoff of Boatmen's Bank; John S. Leahy, Bank of Commerce; Thomas M. Dysart, Frederick H. Keisman, Joseph H. Grand, Fred Wehrenberg and Bruce Barnes.

Others called were J. M. Ulmer and B. D. Gordon, Cleveland; David Levinson, M. A. Rosenthal and Frederick W. Straus, the last named of Straus Securities Corporation, Chicago; Milton B. Arthur of Cabart Theatres Corporation, Los Angeles.

Investigation of antitrust charges in connection with the single feature agreement unanimously adopted in the Greater Cleveland area last year and the one now in preparation is being made there by Department of Justice agents, who have been interviewing signatories to the contract.

Dallas Inquiry Under Way

In Dallas a Department of Justice study of minimum admission clauses in contracts between the Interstate circuit and distributors is under way and may have a bearing on determining the legality of contract riders such as have been urged by the MPTOA nationally to regulate industry practices and eliminate alleged exhibition clauses abuses.

Dwight L. Savage, special assistant to the attorney general on antitrust matters, has been holding daily conferences for the last several weeks with individual exhibitors and attorneys for the various interests involved.

The declared object of the scrutiny is the clause in Interstate's contracts through which distributors agree not to sell film which has played opening run admissions of 40 cents or more to subsequents charging less than 25 cents. The clause has been contested by Dallas subsequent run exhibitors and upheld in the state courts.

Other circuits believed to maintain similar clauses in their contracts with one or more distributors, including Robb & Rowley, Jefferson Amusement Company and Griffith Amusement Company of Oklahoma City, which has Texas interests, are also being questioned. Mr. Savage has also asked branch managers at Dallas to answer 18 questions in a prepared questionnaire pertinent to the situation.

The investigation grew out of cases filed by Rubin Frels before the grievance board, complaining of his inability to obtain product. Mr. Frels has filed suit at Victoria, Texas, and is understood to have action in preparation for the federal court. Records of the former Code Authority in connection with the cases have been obtained by the Government.

In the U. S. district court in St. Louis, Judge Charles B. Davis has overruled a demurrer of Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., to a damage suit for $6,750 filed against the company by the Abraham Lincoln Amusement Company, which operated the Odeon theatre. The action contends the theatre was forced to close because of the plaintiff's inability to obtain first-run films from Paramount under a contract.

URGE THEATRES TO ADVERTISE ON RADIO

Freeman Lang Studios Go to Producers for Library of Musical Numbers for Electrical Transcriptions for Theatre Tieups

Motion picture exhibition is about to be approached by electrical transcription interests with sales arguments for using the radio as an advertising medium through local broadcasting stations. Admittedly an enemy of the radio in the fight to hold the entertainment interest of the public, the motion picture theatre is virtually the last national business institution to make use of whatever sales advantage the radio offers.

Sound-on-film for radio stations has become an actuality, with the Freeman Lang Studios in Hollywood ready to place such service on a commercial basis. One of the possibilities in this connection is selling time to local theatres and using sound trailers from productions booked to run at the local showhouse.

New Reproducer Developed

A new reproducer, of the carying case type, has been developed independently for the purpose of the Freeman Lang transcriptions. Capable of using eight sound tracks, the reproducer was demonstrated at the recent annual convention of the National Association of Broadcasters, at Colorado Springs.

While the studio will produce some film for radio distribution on behalf of theatres, it also is negotiating with some of the large producers for a library of musical numbers and announcements on forthcoming attractions scheduled for theatres locally in the large centers.

The impending move, as sponsored by the electrical transcription interests, follows by a week the decision of Hollywood producers to return to the air with national broadcasting exploitation of pictures and studio personalities, this regardless of any resentment of exhibitors toward the socalled "unfair" competitive aspects of the radio (Motion Picture Herald, September 7th). The producers' decision is an about-face from the previous policy of several studios of prohibiting their players from appearing on broadcasting hookups.

Exhibitors had expressed themselves months ago in no uncertain terms on the subject, charging stars and producers who were encouraging radio-film broadcasting hookups with inducing the public to sit at home to listen in, to the detriment of motion picture box offices. Exhibitors turned a deaf ear to the defense offered by producers and radio interests that these air performances of film stars built up personalities for the box office.

Large Daytime Audience

The extent of the daytime feminine audience listening in to combination commercial announcements, principally of local merchants, and of entertainment, was learned this week from a market research for National Broadcasting Corporation, which shows that on the average weekday from Monday to Friday at 11 a.m. there are more than 16,000,000 radio homes with some 40,300,000 persons present and awake, as follows: adults, 29,856,000; children, 10,443,000 (girls, 5,503,000; boys, 4,940,000).

In order to analyze the tremendous quantity of material, six months of intensive work were required and the findings are said by NBC to be startling, showing, it is claimed, unsuspected strength of radio during the day, and providing an explanation of the size of the market for daytime advertisers.

That radio broadcasters were making elaborate preparations to enter the sound-on-film broadcasting field on a nationwide scale became known last March, when, after years of experimentation by radio and sound engineers with various types of equipment to develop practicable "sound-on-film-on-air" apparatus, executives of United Research Laboratories announced that the first tests had been completed and that it was ready to place the first equipment on the market.

Warner Brothers installed equipment at its Hollywood station, KFWB, and listeners had the opportunity to hear for the first time a film-on-air program broadcast direct from a radio studio. At that time, however, there was no indication that attempts would be made to try to interest exhibitors in the method and medium.

The first program of this nature—there had been two previous broadcasts of sound-on-film from a motion picture, not radio studio—included a portion of the motion picture, "Sweet Adeline," with two songs by the star, Irene Dunne, one by Phil Regan, and a chorus of 40 voices featuring Dorothy Dare. The film broadcast also included selections by the Leo Forbstein orchestra.

100 Stations Reported Signed

Gerald King, manager of Warner's KFWB, said at that time that by using the film method of broadcasting the listener is treated to a program perfected in every respect for each broadcast as the result of many rehearsals, and that among other advantages was the elimination of nervousness of artists in front of the microphone.

It was further explained that the equipment rendering sound-on-film broadcasts surpasses the electrical transcription method of disc broadcast for the reason that no surface noise is heard and discs and needles are unnecessary. Likewise, said Mr. King, the high and low frequencies are more clearly reproduced.

Since then World Broadcasting System is said to have signed up more than 100 radio stations in the field for sound-on-film service.

Meanwhile, both broadcasters and the electrical transcription interests see in theatre advertising on the air a considerable swelling of the $73,000,000 spent annually by all other radio advertisers. They realize that millions of dollars are spent every year by exhibitors locally on newspaper, billboard and other advertising mediums.

Film Alliance Lists Policies and Board of 21 Advisors

Following the announcement last week of the organizing of the New Film Alliance, Inc., by a group of New Yorkers, headed by Merritt Crawford, former trade paper journalist, as president, the Alliance on Tuesday set forth its policies and the names of an advisory board in the following statement:

"A group of 21 persons, all well-known in the film, stage, newspaper and magazine fields, have accepted appointment to the advisory board of

"In addition to G. W. Pabst, internationally-famous motion picture director, and Herman Shumlin, well-known Broadway producer, the board includes: Playwrights George Sklar, Albert Bein, John Howard Lawson, Albert Maltz and Robert Gessner, author and scenarist. Journalists: Andre Sennwald, New York Times; Richard Watts, New York Herald-Tribune; Thornton Delehanty, New York Post; William Boehnel, New York World-Telegram; Paul Harrison, of NEA; Otis Ferguson, New Republic; William Troy, formerly of the Nation; Kyle Crichton, Colliers; and John Gassner, of the Theatre Guild; Margaret Larkin, of the Theatre Union; Evelyn Gerstein, critic and lecturer; Margaret Bourke White, well-known photographer; William Gropper and Reginald March.

"The purpose of the New Film Alliance, Inc. is:

"1. To bring a new orientation into the motion picture and to employ its artistic potentialities to the end that contemporary problems may be dealt with honestly and an intelligent guidance offered to a film-going public which more and more is demanding adult entertainment

"2. To encourage new talent and to offer enlarged opportunities for independent production and creative effort, both inside and outside the film industry.

"3. To encourage the use of motion pictures as a medium in the effort being made today to expose and combat the evils of war, fascism and censorship.

"To accomplish these ends the following steps are planned:

"Production: The New Film Alliance, Inc., proposes to set up a nationwide organization of independent, experimental and amateur film producers; bring them into productive contact with one another, provide technical and artistic criticism of scenarios and completed films by experts; sponsor, distribute and give guidance to those productions; aid in the formation of new groups and provide them with facilities for securing scenarios, talent and training.

"Distribution: The New Film Alliance, Inc., aims to establish a nationwide non-profit-making organization of audience groups reaching even to small towns and farms and provide such organizations with 16 mm. and 35 mm. prints of new films made by affiliated producers and old films of merit which have been shelved by commercial distributors. The revenue obtained from distribution of films produced by affiliated groups will be returned to them for utilization in further production.

"Exhibition: The New Film Alliance, Inc., periodically will present closed membership showings of film classics, censored films and new films of artistic merit not commercially released.

"Projects: The new Film Alliance, Inc., intends to institute lecture series in the history and social aspects of the motion picture as well as film theory and technique and work toward establishment of a competent film school for the training of film-makers in the various aspects of production."

AUGUST'S 32 STORY PURCHASES SHOW WELL-STOCKED SHELVES IN STUDIOS

Buying of Story Properties Below 56-a-Month Average, but Quality of Books and Plays Continues at High Standard

Warner Acquires Robin Hood and Beethoven Stories; Goldwyn Gets 'Children's Hour' Play; Paramount, 'Burlesque'

The completeness of 1935-36 product schedules from the standpoint of story material on hand is reflected by the all-time low record purchase by producers in Hollywood of only 32 books and plays during August, a considerable drop from the 56 monthly average for the last 12 months.

Classics Purchased

August purchases, a barometer further enlightening exhibitors as to what they may expect on distributors' pre-season numerical commitments, do not, however, suffer from a potential quality standpoint when compared with the larger group acquisitions of previous months. They include some notable properties, Warner has decided on stories of Robin Hood and Beethoven to add to their growing collection of outstanding classics. Paramount, too, made a purchase that promises much in acquiring "Burlesque," George Manker Watters' record-breaking Broadway play of several seasons ago. The producer has spotted Sylvia Sidney in the star part.

Goldwyn Buys Play

Samuel Goldwyn was the successful bidder for "Children's Hour," Broadway play of the past season, and to Universal went Phil Stong's Saturday Evening Post serial about "The Farmer in the Dell." "If Winter Comes," a box office performer of the silent days, will be brought back in sound by Fox, while the Broadway play, "Mother Lode," was acquired by Radio. Paramount bought rights to "Turn Off the Moon," forthcoming Pictorial Review serial.

Numerically, the August purchases compare with previous months as follows:

Month	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals
September	28	40	7	75
October	25	20	6	51
November	39	17	8	64
December	19	19	6	44
January	26	14	7	47
February	21	17	3	41
March	28	15	5	48
April	43	44	13	100
May	23	19	9	51
June	24	19	7	50
July	41	12	10	63
August	21	7	4	32
TOTALS FOR 12 MONTHS ..	338	243	85	666

Nearly two-thirds of all the manuscripts were acquired by three companies, Paramount and Radio each buying six, although both were topped by Universal's eight. Originals lead books and plays by 21 to 7 and 4, respectively, representing 66 per cent of the total purchases, as compared with the 50 per cent represented by originals during all of the previous 11 months. Story deals in August tabulated by companies were as follows:

Purchasers	Originals	Books	Plays	August Totals
Goldwyn (U.A.)	..	..	1	1
MGM	1	1	..	2
Paramount	4	1	1	6
Radio	4	1	1	6
Republic	1	..	..	1
20th Century-Fox	1	1	1	3
Universal	6	2	..	8
Walter Wanger.	..	1	..	1
Warner	4	..	..	4
AUGUST TOTALS	21	7	4	32

August purchases, together with authors' names and the production credits available, follow:

Adventures of Robin Hood, original, purchased by Warner Brothers, for James Cagney and Guy Kibbee.

Amateur Racquet, original, by Albert J. Cohen and Robert Shannon, purchased by Universal.

Battle of the Alamo, original, by Lindsley Parsons and Robert Emmett, purchased by Republic.

Walking Dead, original, by Ewart Adamson, purchased by Warner, for Boris Karloff, with Mr. Adamson adapting.

Yellowstone, original, by Houston Branch, screen story by Arthur Phillips and Cy Bartlett, purchased by Universal, for John King, production by Jerry Sackheim.

Self-Sustaining Drama for Relief

Abandonment of free shows for a nationwide system of self-sustaining dramatic ventures has been decided upon by federal officials in Washington in mapping out an actor relief program.

With many details still unsettled, headquarters of the works program revealed that President Roosevelt has approved expenditure of $27,315,217 for cultural projects intended to give emergency jobs to artists, writers, musicians and actors. Nearly half the total will be spent for drama projects.

Including vaudeville performers as well as legitimate talent, relief authorities will concentrate on encouraging local activities which in time will become self supporting and will attempt to provide "entertainment to large audiences at low cost."

Equity and stage hands lost their fight for observance of union scales when relief directors announced the subsistence wage schedule, with a maximum of $94 monthly, will be adhered to in the cultural program.

Kessler Howe Joins British Lion

Kessler Howe has joined the New York office of British Lion Pictures, Ltd., as director of publicity.

New Ruling on Theatre Licenses

Giveaways, currently the subject of considerable controversy between New York authorities and theatre owners, were in no way involved, as previously reported, in the case of the Third Avenue Peerless theatre in Brooklyn against New York License Commissioner Moss to compel Mr. Moss' department to issue a license.

Bernard S. Barr, of the New York law firm of Barr and Barr, counsel for the Peerless theatre, explained that the decision handed down in favor of the exhibitor, by Judge McLaughlin, defined the rights of the license commissioner, who tried to overrule the building and fire departments.

"The decision is the first of its kind to be handed down, and is of major importance to New York exhibitors," observed Mr. Barr.

The Third Avenue Peerless, erected some 20 years ago, made application for renewal of its license, but was refused on the ground that the license commissioner had personally found what he claimed to be an inside building violation in the theatre.

The various city departments, including building, fire, water, gas and electricity, had inspected the premises and found no violations whatsoever, and so reported to the license commissioner.

A mandamus proceeding was brought by the Peerless to compel issuance of the license. The decision of Judge McLaughlin ruled, in effect, that where an application is made for renewal of a license, and the city departments of fire, water supply, gas and electricity and the department of health have inspected the premises and found no violations, the commissioner of licenses must renew the license, even though in his own opinion a condition exists which he claims to be a violation.

Exhibitor Units Set Conventions

The arranging of conventions, board and committee meetings was the principal order of business before exhibitor organizations this week.

The directors and officers of Allied of New Jersey have decided to hold a regular meeting of the board on the second Tuesday of the month, the sessions to be at headquarters in the Hotel Lincoln, New York. The next gathering of the membership, however, will be at the Walt Whitman hotel, Camden, September 17th.

A meeting is also scheduled by the Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, Inc., for September 15 to discuss product.

In Pennsylvania the Allied Motion Picture Theatre Owners have set October 21-22 for the annual convention, which will be held at the Hotel Schenley in Pittsburgh, while the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio have November 19-20 as the date of their gathering at the Deshler-Wallick Hotel in Columbus, Ohio.

Charles E. Williams, president of the Nebraska-Western Iowa MPTO, issued a call to members to attend the fall meeting on October 8 and 9, at the Loyal Hotel, Omaha.

Butterfield Becomes Pathe Managing Editor

Allyn Butterfield was appointed this week as managing editor of Pathe News, succeeding W. French Githens, who resigned to become an executive of Newsreel Theatres. Mr. Butterfield this week is celebrating his 20th anniversary in motion pictures, having started with the original Vitagraph Company in 1915. He has been in the newsreel division since he joined Hearst-Vitagraph Newsreel, in 1917, later serving as associate editor of Kinograms and as editor-in-chief of Universal Newsreel.

20th Century-Fox Answer Is Awaited

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation is expected by attorneys to make answer in a week or ten days to the allegations of wastage of assets and other charges cited in the suit of Mrs. William Fox and her All-Continent Corporation pending in the New York supreme court and aimed to prevent operation of the merger and, eventually, its dissolution.

Following submission of the answer, attorneys for the plaintiffs will ask the court to permit examination before trial of officers and directors of the film company and the Chase National Bank, a majority stockholder. If allowed, the examination is expected to begin in October. Counsel for the William Fox interests are preparing an amended complaint in the Mrs. Fox action to cover new developments that have arisen since the merger.

Meanwhile hearings were resumed this week after summer adjournment on the Chicago Title and Trust Company's action to recover $1,000,000 from Mr. Fox as a result of a default of a redemption of Roxy Theatre Corporation stock, which the former film magnate allegedly guaranteed at the time of the purchase several years ago. Reporters and the public are barred by agreement of counsel. At the conclusion of the hearings, which are expected to require several more weeks, Referee Sol M. Stroock, who is taking testimony, will make his report to the court.

Among other developments of the week was the official registration of the name of Twentieth Century-Fox Distributing Corporation, at Dover, Del., replacing Fox Film Distributing Corporation, the company's distributing subsidiary.

After negotiations extending over a period of weeks, National Theatres, Fox Film's theatre affiliate, has given five-year personal service contracts to Charles Buckley, vice-president on the West Coast; Jack Sullivan and Edward L. Alperson, film buyers in Los Angeles and New York respectively. Charles Skouras, in charge of coast theatre operations, has received a personal service agreement, and one is to be signed by E. C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest division manager at Kansas City.

Hays Returns Monday

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, who has been in Hollywood since July 1, is expected back at his office in New York on Monday.

Dillard Joins MGM

Tyree Dillard, Jr., who was general counsel for the NRA Code Authority, has joined the MGM legal department under J. Robert Rubin.

New York Union Merger Pending

George Browne, president of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators, has refused to rescind an order handed down denying Local 306, New York operators union, the right to strike in the event negotiations between the circuits and the union in New York reach an impasse. Mr. Browne made known his decision in Washington following a visit of a committee from the New York area.

In the troubled area members of Local 306 are accepting $1.60 an hour until negotiations on a basic wage scale are accepted. Acceptance of this scale, however, is not in the form of a salary. It is being paid in I. O. U.'s, the understanding being that if a higher wage scale is agreed upon finally the operators will receive the difference on signing of a contract.

Merger to be Sought

A new turn was given to the New York union situation on Tuesday when it became known that efforts will be made to merge Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union with Local 306 in order to bring about an amicable settlement of the strife which has been raging for three years.

Pending the outcome of the negotiations a truce was agreed upon late Monday night by the two unions which brought picketing of both 306 and Allied-manned houses to an immediate end. The meeting and truce were arranged at the instance of Frank Tichenor, who is reported to be acting upon insistence from Mayor LaGuardia that the theatre picketing "nuisance" be terminated.

Under the truce Local 306 agrees to refrain from efforts to make employment contracts with theatres manned by Allied members and the latter organization makes the same agreement with respect to theatres manned by Local 306 men.

Meanwhile, Local 306 is continuing its negotiations on a new basic wage scale with circuit representatives.

Detroit Agreement Made

This week, in Detroit, an agreement on a new contract between operators' local and film houses has been tentatively set, with the present scale, ranging from $60.28 for the smallest houses to $85 for larger theatres, being continued. Closings at 11:30 o'clock are provided under the new deal.

In Kansas City, however, the operators' union, No. 170, is asking a 20 per cent increase at downtown first-run houses. The requests are being opposed and negotiations are underway for an amicable settlement.

The Mullin and Pinansky circuit has settled its operators' union difficulties by increasing the scale from $50 to $60 for its five operators.

Dexter in from Australia

Gayne Dexter, one-time advertising manager for the original First National company, is in New York from a lengthy stay in Sydney, Australia, and is reported about to join a major film company. In Australia, Mr. Dexter edited Everyones, a trade weekly.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

IT WAS WITH great pride, and no little envy, that the publishers of the Kansas City Jewish Chronicle headlined the local-boy-makes-good announcement that one Meyer Goldberg, of their native Kansas City, "is a Hollywoodian now, with screenland pouring some of its bounty into his willing lap." And is Meyer willing!

"Tired of things humdrum in Kansas City," the Jewish Chronicle chronicled, "young Goldberg wrote to Carl Laemmle, Universal film king, who is a 'landsman' of Meyer's late father. Contrary to all expectations, Laemmle answered immediately. And Meyer went west to meet Laemmle. He was introduced to Hollywood in the huge glistening structure which the film magnate calls home and was given full rights to the Laemmle flock of cars and army of chauffeurs. Following the princely introduction, Meyer was provided with a studio bungalow and entered on the payroll. The bungalow was formerly occupied by Boris Karloff, who kindly consented not to haunt the place.

"Meyer," the story continued, "now is on the road toward the title of Universal's most-employed 'extra.' Moral: A 'landsman' in Hollywood is worth two in the bush league."

What is really troubling the Jewish Chronicle editors, however, is that Kansas City "seems to have become Meyer Goldberg conscious. Practically everyone we meet asks us if we've heard about Meyer Goldberg hours before they inquire as to the state of our health. It is, however, great for the gossiper, for it has added considerable to our Goldberg lore."

The choicest tidbits collected by the Chronicle come from Kansas City's Mr. and Mrs. Myron Leiser, who, the paper explains, "have the advantage of a relationship with the Goldberg movie novice and a recent vacation in California.

"Not only, the Leisers tell us, is Meyer connected to Laemmle by virtue of the wisdom of his father in selecting the movie king as a neighbor in Europe, but he himself was a schoolmate in Germany of Laemmle's nephew's wife. This makes it more binding, since friendship to a relative of a producer in Hollywood is almost on a par with being an American heiress at a garden party reeking with masculine European nobility."

The Jewish-Chronicle believes, however, that "Meyer's appearance suggests something to Universal," explaining that one day recently at the Ocean Park pier in California, Goldberg and the Leisers "became the center of a swirl of children who had mistaken him for Eddie Cantor. They refused to believe otherwise until he patted a homely lass on the head and said warmly that he was very fond of little girls. That clinched the argument. Even juveniles can reason that a Jewish father, who is paying the bills of five daughters cannot possibly have an overwhelming affection for little women."

The highest theatre in America is the Gem in Silverton, Colorado, a small mountain town up in the Rockies, operated by Mrs. Mary F. McGuire, who has been running Universal's pictures continually for 21 years. It caters to miners all the year round, and trans-continental passers-by during the summer. There isn't much winter trans-continental traffic over the roads in Silverton since the Donor party trekked below her mountains and arrived in a starving condition at Fort Sutter in 1849.

Part of the year Silverton is absolutely isolated from the rest of the world. It is located so high in the mountains and the snow gets so deep there in the winter, that at times the town has no communication with the outside other than the radio. Mails during the winter arrive only spasmodically. Mrs. McGuire's print delivery problems are worrisome.

There's money aplenty to be made in the creeps-and-horror business, confided Bela Lugosi as he picked his steps down the gangplank at New York. "Sure, being horrible is a good business. I can buy steamship tickets, give tips and buy the boys a drink."

But he's not going to be as horrible in his next production, just completed in London. In that one he only kills seven people. It's the story about "The Mystery of the Mary Celeste," a mystery never solved in the long years since the brig Mary Celeste was found at sea with all sails set, a meal on the table, everything shipshape—and no trace af the master, his wife, child or crew.

An indignant fan writes a letter to the "Voice of the People" editor of New York's Daily News:

EDITOR:

Here's hoping the two dirty-necked molls who sat behind me in a certain movie theatre one recent afternoon get tongue-tied or choke. These greasy things kept describing the picture out loud, as they had seen it before, much to everyone's annoyance, and when asked to refrain they answered in language unfit to print. Again, mouthy mutts, I hope you choke.

One of this department's eagle-eyed sleuths reports from New York's Union (Red) Square sector that a newsboy hawking the American edition of the Moscow News in front of Communist headquarters down on East 13th street, the other day, was experiencing some difficulty in disposing of his papers. Suddenly he hit upon an idea which took form in this shouted expression: "Wuxtra! Wuxtra! Read all about it! Mae West takes the gas pipe because she couldn't get another fella! Wuxtra! Wuxtra!"

The front cover of the paper was emblazoned, not with a story about Mae West, but with a portrait of Lenin, in honor of the Seventh Congress of the Third Internationale, in session in Moscow.

Wuxtra! Wuxtra! Another plot against the Reds is unearthed, the New York Times headlining from Moscow: RUMBA AND FOXTROT HELD TO BE FOES OF SOVIET YOUTH. Insidious enemies of the Soviet union, Moscovites shout, as they prepare to stamp 'em out. That places jazz in the same class with Mr. Hearst.

President Roosevelt is a confirmed motion picture fan—sees as many as half-a-dozen pictures a week, and most of the newsreels and cartoons. Like most screen enthusiasts who have met the great of Hollywood he frequently reminisces about the studio folk. One of his favorities, so Beverly Coote tells us, goes back to the beginning of the Liberty Loan drive in front of the old State War and Navy Building, early in 1918—Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Doug Fairbanks, Marie Dressler being among the celebrities present. Oh, yes, and that tall, handsome assistant secretary of the navy, now the President, who at the beginning of the drive was assigned to look after the stars.

There was an improvised fence to keep the crowd at its distance and the agile Marie Dressler, while trying to perch herself atop the rail, displayed too much confidence in its integrity. It crashed, and Marie fell on Mr. Roosevelt. "Golly," he reminisced with a rueful smile, "she was sure heavy."

FOR HIS final reportorial contribution to Omaha's World-Herald theatre pages, able Keene Abbott, retiring drama critic, looked—and found—in the darkness backstage of modern film palaces, mellow memories of the days of long ago, when Mrs. Leslie Carter, E. H. Sothern and such old troupers trod the gas-lit boards.

So, out into Omaha's blazing sun and down the hill he trudged to see ol' Dave Clark, curtain-puller at the Omaha theatre, who helped many a time with setting the stage for some of the most notable players who ever peered across the footlights.

"Things were livelier then," reflected Dave, as he reminisced about the time when he was "running the gas" (flame footlights) at Omaha's old Boyd theatre—renamed the Farnum—and three bears got drunk. Somebody, for a joke, had secretly mixed raw alcohol with the sugared water they drank from bottles just before their act.

"And when three lummoxy bears get crocked," Dave explained, "they sure can stir up a rumpus. I mind how those beasts went on the rampage, snarling and lamming each other, and clawing and biting, and tumbling down stage toward the footlights. If they should get singed in the gas flames, and go flop among the audience, then watch out for a panic."

Such a thing mustn't happen. So Dave turned off the gas.

Climbing back uphill to the Brandeis theatre, Abbott sat down backstage with Omaha's other old-school backstage hand, Bill Barrett, who, too, recalled the period of theatricals when "things were livelier" than just pulling drapes over a moving picture screen. For example, an incident connected with the very, very temperamental star, Mrs. Leslie Carter, in "Du Barry." After her big emotional scene, an elderly member of the stage crew, an assistant property man named Washburn, rushed out to help clear the stage. To fetch away a pair of handsome candelabra was his special task. He had been instructed about them, been given repeated instructions, and was most anxious to make good in his old days.

Then up went the curtain, with the star taking her bow. Poor Washburn was beside her, frozen stiff with fright, a branching candlestick in either hand.

"All of us," said Bill, "furiously beckoned for him to come away. He couldn't. There he stood, petrified. The curtain came down and went up again, the star taking a second bow. Washburn hadn't moved. He couldn't. Came a third bow. Washburn—standing right there by Mrs. Carter—solid as a wooden fence post, still desperately gripping his candelabra.

"Didn't we all expect a hot brain storm from that stormy lady?" chuckled Bill Barrett. "But, know what? She started laughing, had spasms of laughter, simply rolled with laughter, and for a long while couldn't stop. In her whole stage career—and it was a long one—she thought that the funniest thing that ever happened."

There'll be no more of those days for Dave, for Bill, and Keene, too.

Giveaway Solution Up To Producer, Says Exhibitor

Need of "Different" Films Pointed in Reaction to Bryan Article

by "BUNNY" BRYAN
Manager, Pantheon Theatre, Chicago

My recent article (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, August 10th) concerning the inevitable problem coming when giveaways fade, has brought some interesting reactions to my desk, reactions from exhibitors, producers, projectionists and publicity men. In fairness to everyone concerned, we believe it worthwhile to pass along the high spots of these comments.

A Coast exhibitor, after roundly condemning giveaways, says in part: "I believe we are right on the threshold of a cycle of socalled unusual films. . . . 'Sequoia' clicked almost everywhere. It received the backing of the women's clubs as well as many more ticket-selling controls."

"An Arkansas projectionist writes: "I have a stunt that is free from all lottery taint, yet just as interesting," and the beauty of it is, we believe he has the germ of an idea with box office possibilities.

A producer says: "You have hit upon one of the things the industry badly needs, a getting away from the eternal sex; an opening up of a field hitherto only slightly touched."

A Middle Western exhibitor writes, "I'm with you one hundred per cent when you say, 'We must give them diversion of a different kind.' . . . I've played several unusual pictures recently, pictures we would have considered having very little general appeal just a few years ago and because the public is right now in a receptive mood for something different and because we went out and sold them intelligently, always bearing in mind Lem Stewart's old slogan, 'Does It Sell Tickets?', we mopped up at the box office and obtained plenty of favorable patron comment."

Centuries of Publicity

A publicity executive puts it this way: "The trouble with so many exhibitors and executives in these days of banker-controlled showmanship is our very natural tendency to over-emphasize advertising costs, because they are controllable, and then sit back and lay out a routine campaign which, of course, brings back only routine returns. . . . Giveaways have been clicking because of the several centuries 'advance' given games of chance. How can we expect satisfactory grosses from our pictures unless we give them complete and comprehensive advertising and publicity treatment?

And so the comments continued, the interesting part being that, while many of the exhibitors had been or were using giveaways, all seemed to feel that they would run their course and we must be readying something, something in the way of entertainment, to take their place.

We agree heartily with the exhibitor who points to "Sequoia" as an example of the draw of the unusual films. We played "Sequoia" at the height of the giveaway craze and stood 'em up plenty opening day and came right back the following day without a giveaway and did considerably above average business. We have already mentioned the excellent results obtained from Captain Craig's personal appearance along with his unusual picture and are hoping some producer will give us in the very near future another picture that will warrant the same treatment we gave "Sequoia" and "Sea Killers."

While, naturally, we are primarily interested in the box-office of any attraction, the patron comment and goodwill generated are certainly very valuable. We know that unusual pictures bring new faces, many of whom become regular or drop-in patrons. We know that unusual pictures with their diversified story and treatment are welcomed by our regulars as a tonic after the cut and dried stories embodied in so many of the programmers.

Says It's Up to Producers

Insofar as routine campaigns are concerned, there is real food for thought. When one is riding the crest of the wave, one is inclined to become fat and careless. I do not believe any seasoned showman considers giveaways as entertainment, notwithstanding their acknowledged draw at the box-office. After all, the picture is still the thing. All things otherwise are only supplementary. If we are dispensing entertainment, we must sell and sell strongly and intelligently. We cannot just sit back and say, "What the H—! We're going to load the house anyway, so why burn up any extra energy and money in a ticket selling campaign?" We are in the motion picture business, a business built upon keeping on our toes, and brains allowed to lie dormant

The writer is and has been for many years in show business because he likes it, gets a kick out of it. Years ago, as a newspaperman, we were constantly planning for the future. As a circus press agent and motion picture publicity man we thoroughly enjoyed the newspaper and other contacts made and the results anticipated and usually obtained. Today, as one of the several thousands managing theatres and selling shows, after years of floor work and standing on the front, years spent, in part, in watching the smiles of anticipation on the patrons' faces as they approached or entered the theatre, we believe the motion picture industry's contribution to the public has been priceless.

We feel that the opinion of the exhibitor, the man who comes in daily contact with those buying the products of the studios, is very valuable to the producer and the financier backing the production. That's why we are groping and seeking, before it may be too late, an intelligent solution to the problem, "What next after giveaways?" It seems to me it is up to the producers now.

Screen diversion as a steady diet was suggested in the August 10th issue of the HERALD by "Bunny" Bryan, manager and publicity director of the Balaban and Katz Pantheon theatre in Chicago, in answer to his own question: "What are we going to do after the novelty of giveaways has worn off?"

From exhibitors, producers, publicists and even projectionists have come varied reactions, all of which Mr. Bryan has consolidated into the accompanying article, which he sums up with the thought that it now is up to the producers.

Court to Rule on Pathe Examination

A motion for examination before trial will be heard in the New York county supreme court September 16th before Justice Charles B. McLaughlin in a stockholders' action brought by Pat Casey against Pathe Exchange, Inc. Counsel for Mr. Casey will seek the court's permission to examine Frank Kolbe, president of Pathe Exchange, and Robert W. Atkins, executive vice-president. He will request an order compelling them to produce all records, account books and agreements at the time of examination.

This is an action in discovery and inspection to determine the assets and all of the business transactions of Pathe.

Mr. Casey's affidavit explains that the examinations are sought to show that Robert R. Young dominated and controlled Stuart W. Webb and Mr. Kolbe during the time each occupied the official position of director and president of the defendant corporation; to show that Robert R. Young was in command of the defendant corporation and constantly supervised and directed its program and policies; that Robert R. Young, at the same time, held an obscure official position in the management of the corporation; to show that during 1933, 1934 and 1935 and a considerable period of time prior thereto, the defendant acted under the direction of Mr. Young and conspired with him to the extent of causing waste of the defendant's assets, violating their duties and wrongfully suffering acts to be done in such a manner as to result in the squandering of the defendant corporation's assets.

Sues Columbia Over Royalties on Series

Samuel J. Joseph, attorney for Harry Levey, has filed in the New York supreme court an application for a temporary injunction seeking to restrain Columbia Pictures Corporation from paying Rex Film Corporation any monies or royalties due on the "Voice of Experience" series of shorts. A hearing is set on the application for September 13 before Judge Hofstadter.

Other defendants listed are Voe Pictures Corporation, M. Sayle Taylor, known as the "Voice of Experience," Elmer A. Rogers, general manager of Rex Pictures, and Benjamin K. Blake, production manager of Rex.

Levey claims he first approached Mr. Rogers and Mr. Taylor and sold them the idea to make the shorts.

The Dark Angel

(Goldwyn-United Artists)

Drama

The story of the beautiful tenderness of a love that grew from childhood to wartime in a picturesque English countryside, spoken softly and convincingly honest, sentimentally though never mawkishly, is brought back in sound after a decade, in Samuel Goldwyn's production of "The Dark Angel," from Guy Bolton's stirring play.

The technique of production and the tempo of story narration equal the quality of the performances, and that is high, at times superbly touching. Fredric March, Herbert Marshall, a new, no longer exotic Merle Oberon, John Halliday, all turn out a merit-packed picture from opening shot to finis.

There is much to resemble pastels in the settings that find Kitty Vine (Miss Oberon), English girl, loving Alan Trent (March), while his cousin (Marshall) loves her.

Months in the trenches bring to Alan the realization of his love for Kitty. Home on leave, he confesses his love and they arrange to marry on the morrow. An order cancelling all army leaves shatters their plans, and they spend their last hours near the transport steamer trying to forget that they may never see each other again.

Gerald is wounded and Alan is believed killed The war over, Alan is in a training school, blind and unwilling to return to be a burden to Kitty.

The institution's officials persuade him to return home and to the girl but he loses his nerve en route and instead alights at a village some miles beyond. Here he achieves considerable success under an assumed name.

One day while Alan is fishing with Sir George Barton, official of the training school, a woman member of a hunting party is thrown from her horse and stunned. She is Kitty Vane, who Alan has learned is now engaged to his cousin Gerald.

Alan rushes away unseen and Barton, noting his reactions to mention of her name, phones Gerald and tells him where to find Alan.

Comedy

Showmanship possibilities abound in this Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy feature length comedy. It is packed with hilarious situations and the two comedians, aided and abetted by a very capable supporting cast, turn in characterizations with their best performance values of the year. In story content it is different from any of their recent efforts. It is for the most part a burlesque of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

James Finlayson, Daphne Pollard and Mary Gordon support the stars and the combination of all their names in front of any theatre should signify comedy of the first order. Romantic angles are handled by William Janney and June Lang, a newcomer.

The film abounds in production values and the Scotch element assures more than ample opportunity for suitable exploitation. The direction of James W. Horne keeps the action moving right along and the photography is very good.

While in jail in America, Laurel, now known as McLaurel, and Hardy are notified that Laurel has inherited an estate from his Scotch grandfather. They escape and take a cattle boat to Scotland to meet Mr. Miggs, lawyer of the estate, to find they receive only a moth-eaten bagpipe and a snuff box, the money going to a distant cousin, Lorna McLaurel, who is in love with Mr. Miggs' clerk, Alan Douglas.

The inheritance is left in trust to Colonel McGregor, however, until Lorna comes of age, so his sister, Lady Ormsby, takes the young girl to India where her brother is in the army.

Shocked at the turn of events and desperate, McLaurel and Hardy blunder into the army and are promptly decked out in kilts. From this point on the laughs fly thick and fast as they are shipped off to India, along with Alan, who is seeking Lorna. The three arrive at the army post and find it about to be attacked by Mir Jutra, Mohammedan leader. In the meantime Lorna has announced her engagement to Colonel McGregor, thinking Alan has ceased caring for her. Volunteers are called to assist in capturing Mir Jutra. Alan steps forward with the sergeant major. McLaurel and Hardy join them, thinking they are accepting an invitation to lunch. The quartet leave the post and are duly captured by Mir Jutra but the troops rescue them only to be rewarded for their labors when our heroes lead several swarms of angry bees into their midst.—BAEHLER, New York.

(20th Century-Fox)

Detective Mystery

Concocted of tried and proved ingredients, this latest of the "Chan" series stacks up as one of the most pleasing of the popular features. With a familiar character in a familiar role, the show is plotted to a familiar theme, yet the production's entertainment-showmanship value is novel and different.

Geared to a thrill action motivation, the picture is surprising in its amount of humanness, given a comedy tinge as it concerns the Chan father and son relationship. The intriguing atmosphere of dangerous adventure against sinister and mystic backgrounds creates an air of melodramatic mystery into which a vein of hokum has been inserted that effectively secretes the yarn's climax from even the most discerning amateur sleuths.

The soundly written story, capably directed, is mystery plus. It introduces Charlie, returning to China on a mission that is secret to him, playing leap-frog and singing a Chinese song with a lot of children. His own life threatened unless he leaves the land of his ancestors, he meets his son, Lee (Keye Luke, first introduced in the role in "Chan in Paris"). The relation furthering the comedy, the show plunges into its real atmosphere when Chan, kidnaped, is rescued by Lee in a wild fighting brawl. Then the show takes on its real purpose, the tracking down of a gang of dope smugglers. Andrews, a federal investigator, joins forces with Chan, and Nash, who shares the slight romantic interest with Diana, is made to look like the ace culprit. But in the thrilling climax the show takes an amazing twist as Chan once more demonstrates that he is still the same old super-sleuth and the dope ring is smashed and the culprits caught.

While Warner Oland naturally is the outstanding interest-creating factor in connection with the character he has created over several years, the idea of the Keye Luke son relationship is one that commands more than usual showmanship attention. Story content, likewise, should not be overlooked in showmanship adaptation seeking to inspire patron interest. In development and purpose unlike any of its predecessors, it permits billing as something entirely apart from what has been seen before.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Associate producer, John Stone. Directed by James Tinling. Assistant director, Aaron Rosenberg. Original story and screen play by Edward T. Lowe and Gerard Fairlie. Cappy Ricks Returns

(Republic)

Comedy-Melodrama

Sound entertainment, in which the element of comedy predominates and is adequately balanced by well developed melodrama, romance and exciting action, establishes this attraction as a better than average attraction. Showmanship potentialities to stimulate audience interest in the picture's entertainment worth are included aplenty.

The show deals with popular stuff and is handled in a manner to accentuate that quality in writing, direction and acting. In returning to the screen a popular old fiction character, the Cappy Ricks of Peter B. Kyne, the production itself, rather than personalities, is the principal entertainment and showmanship element. As it unfolds, Cappy, the lumber-shipping magnate, comes out of retirement when his old business rival, Blake, through political connivance attempts to put the skids under Cappy's wooden shingle business. Furious at the manner in which Peasley and Skinner are running the organization, amazed to discover that his resourceful star salesman, Peck, has been fired, Cappy gets him back in a sensational comedy excitement manner and the pair join forces to give Blake a run for his money.

The situation is complicated in the way in which the romantic angle is brought in as Peck becomes attached to Blake's daughter, Barbara. Approaching the climax, Blake's tactics and Cappy's idea of ringing in a number of phoney petitions result in a number of action-packed, hand-to-hand mob encounters in which the wrestler Man Mountain Dean provides plenty of fun. The finale has everything straightened out, with Cappy retaining his business and also acting as a sort of benign cupid in fixing up the misunderstanding between Peck and Barbara.

Not a pretentious offering, but one in which there is a load of entertainment meat, plus more than enough showmanship angles with which to sell it, the show is one that any kind of exhibitor can offer patrons who like their entertainment to be entertaining.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Streamline Express

(Mascot)

Comedy

This production, while unpretentious, is garnished with plenty of laughs, good character portrayals and production values. Exhibitors should have little trouble exploiting this one because of the backgrounds against which the story is laid, namely, the theatre and a streamline train speeding across the continent.

The sequence of events is rapid and plausible and only once or twice in the middle of the picture does the action seem to sag, while with the resumed pace the end appears a bit abrupt.

The story tells of the efforts of a Broadway producer to bring back a runaway star, as she takes a streamline train for California, and his final victory after overcoming many obstacles.

In the cast are Evelyn Venable, Victor Jory, Esther Ralston, Ralph Forbes, Sidney Blackmer, Erin O'Brien-Moore and Vince Barnett, and, while there are no outstanding marquee names among these players, those of Miss Venable and Jory should be suitable for exploitation purposes.

Jimmy Hart, Broadway producer, is putting the cast of his new show through a dress rehearsal when he discovers his star, Patricia Wallis, in a temperamental fling has left the theatre to take a new streamline train to California. He pursues her, and, after finally getting on the train, discovers she had no intention of returning to the theatre but intends to get married at the end of the trip to Fred Arnold.

In the meantime John Forbes has arrived on board with Elaine Vinson, who poses as his wife. Mrs. Forbes comes to confront the runaways, having discovered their plan through a necklace her husband purchased for Miss Vinson. As the train pulls out it is discovered that Miss Vinson is a former partner of Gilbert Landon, notorious crook, and she is forced to give him her new necklace to pay for his silence.

Hart has been trying to convince Miss Wallis she should return to the theatre, having convinced a steward—for a large sum—to change places and clothes with him, but is still unsuccessful. Forbes then misses the necklace and Miss Vinson tells him it has been stolen.

All the passengers are searched, and when Hart, having been sent to tidy Landon's room, discovers the lost jewel in a tube of shaving cream he is accused of the crime. Miss Wallis identifies the producer and Landon confesses, as does Miss Vinson. This brings together the producer and the star, who have now discovered they love each other, and Mr. and Mrs. Forbes also realize they are still in love.—BAEHLER, New York.

Drama

Although this picture has more than the usual amount of Soviet propaganda found in recent importations from the Russian studios, it is powerful and dramatic at times, what with stark realism in several scenes. The dialogue is in the native Russian, but superimposed titles chart the progress of the story.

The idea behind the story is the maintenance at any costs of the Soviet collective farm. The film's director never forgot this aim for a second, and as sharp and penetrating as the picture becomes at times, he never allowed any other element to overshadow the message to be conveyed.

The entire action is laid on a model collective farm. All the peasants are happy and interested in their work, until it is discovered there isn't ample food to carry the communal hogs over the winter. Gerasim Platonovich, leading worker, suggests the animals be distributed among the families, and this is done. His wife, Varvara, disagrees and returns all the swine to the communal barn. The people to whom the animals had been given try to regain them by force and Varvara finds herself reprimanded by the district political head.

Brooding over the reprimand, Varvara feels sure that there is some "enemy" of the group working toward their failure. In the meantime it is revealed that the culprit is Gerasim, a former landowner of the old regime anxious for the new system to fail. When he reveals this to his wife as she tells him of approaching motherhood, the woman tries to report him and he murders her, making her death appear to be suicide. The district head suspects this, however, so Gerasim influences his dead wife's rather stupid brother to attack the Communist leader, saying that with his removal the trouble experienced by the group will disappear. The leader fails to die, and in the climax the two men are uncovered and sentenced, one to death and the other to Siberia.

It is essentially adult material.—BAEHLER, New York.

Produced by Lenfilm, U.S.S.R. Distributed by Amkino Corporation. Directed by Friedrich Ermler. Release date, August 28, 1935. Running time, 105 minutes. Adult audience classification.

Travelogue

Photographed in the tropical lowlands of Guatemala and with a running commentary by Alois Havrilla, this travelogue of the "World on Parade" series shows the natives engaged in the pursuit of their industries. The natives, with the blood of early Spanish settlers and native Indian stock in their veins, are particularly adept at weaving and the making of clay pottery. In a land where coffee is one of the main industries and bananas grow in vast quantities, Guatemala is entirely free of machinery. Also pictured are many old buildings, built centuries ago, that still stand. An entertaining short of historical nature.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Lady in Red

(Vitaphone)

Excellent Cartoon

This cartoon, a burlesque of the song, "The Lady in Red," featured in "In Caliente," is grand entertainment packed with laughs. The story is centered in a night club in a land of roaches and the creatures are really funny. A lady roach is featured in a miniature cafe where she sings nightly and all the gay blades seek her favors, only to be spurned. Finally, a parrot breaks out of his cage and captures the lady, but by a stroke of luck she is rescued by a brave little fellow who sets fire to the bird's tail. The title song is sung all through the film. Running time, 7 minutes.

Unusualities

(RKO Radio)

Interesting

One of the "Easy Aces" series, this presentation is interesting and mildly instructive. As the title implies, unusual things are pictured, with Jane and Goodman Ace supplying commentarial background. There are "Nature's Needle," a large needle growing in a cactus plant; "Aqua Buoy," a waterproof suit and protecting hood in a new conception of a lifebelt; "World's Largest Manicure," wherein elephants are set upon by manicurists; "Portable Cabanas," or portable bath houses; "Window Umbrella," an umbrella with a window; "Comerant Fishing," featuring the comerant bird as a fishhook; "The Bird Man," in an unsuccessful attempt to fly like a bird.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Dublin in Brass

Very Good Musical

Morton Downey, in Ireland, is in love with Andrea Marsh. He has been told he can come to New York and become a policeman so he leaves with high hopes, arriving in America on St. Patrick's Day. He gets entangled with a drunk and is arrested, but Miss Marsh's uncle, a policeman himself, rescues him. Downey, ashamed, writes Miss Marsh, but she, unknown to him, has followed him to America. All ends well when the singer lands a contract to sing on the radio instead of joining the force. Downey sings several songs and this singing alone is enough to put the film over in any theatre. Running time, 20 minutes.

RENDING OF CLEARANCE PACTS SEEN IN GRANTING OF PROTECTION DEALS

Distributors Reported Ready to Give Extended Clearance to the Circuits in Chicago, Baltimore and Kansas City

Protection Sold to Independents in Cleveland, Scene of Reported Inquiry by the Department of Justice, Says MGM

Sharp disruption of the clearance and zoning situation, accompanied by protests and threats from independent exhibitors to seek relief in the courts and from government agencies, was evidenced this week in reports distributors were preparing to grant extended clearance to circuits in Chicago, Baltimore and Kansas City, and in MGM's admission that protection has been sold to independents in Cleveland and, furthermore, that the practice is national in scope.

In Cleveland, where Department of Justice agents were reported to be investigating the protection situation, it was charged that MGM plans to upset the existing clearance and zoning arrangement by granting greater protection than is provided in the schedule, while in Chicago the dominant Balaban & Katz circuit was the center of a fight over its demands for an additional week's clearance for 30-cent theatres, and independent exhibitors were threatening court action in Baltimore and Kansas City.

The justification for the demands and the granted protection ranged from the necessity of safeguarding distribution revenue to the contention that existing clearance is inadequate.

In marked contrast to these disturbances —which were not entirely unanticipated when the clearance and zoning boards went out with the end of the NRA—the schedule for the Los Angeles territory drawn up under the former code, and the only one approved by the Code Authority, is being closely adhered to by an overwhelming majority of exhibitors with resultant benefits reported to all concerned.

At the same time, it was said in distributors' home office circles in New York that the selling of protection is not a new development and that it has been the accepted practice in New York City for the last 25 years.

Reduced Admissions Blamed

Replying to reports from Cleveland that an independent circuit there was reported to be buying protection in new MGM contracts, an MGM sales executive said in New York that the company had granted increased protection to a number of independents in Cleveland and that the company is following the policy everywhere else.

"More than 25 independents in Cleveland recently reduced admissions to 15 cents," the sales executive said. "As you know, the town is flooded with double features again after a period of singles.

"There are a number of exhibitors who do not want to reduce admissions, but would be forced to follow suit unless granted extended clearance. In order to protect our rentals we had to sell with an extra seven days to two weeks protection. Many of our pictures play on percentages in Cleveland and if exhibitors cut to 15 cents our revenue would likewise diminish.

"I have always maintained that clearance has a definite value in returns of our pictures. M-G-M has no stereotyped plan of clearance, but we are anxious to keep up admissions and likewise protect our revenue nationally. This company has only sold protection where justified," the executive added.

Frank D. Drew, MGM branch manager in Cleveland, gave further elucidation by explaining that the clearance setup is being disturbed very little, the only major departure being that in no instance is MGM making admission price a factor in establishing protection for the houses which are showing its pictures.

"We are selling protection according to the policy of the individual house as we see it," Mr. Drew explained. "Our established policy is to sell clearance as it is deserved in our estimation with no regard to admission scales.

"We furthermore reserve the right to determine what protection we shall give to double feature houses."

"Policy Is Equitable"

Mr. Drew made it clear this was MGM's policy only and that the situation had not been discussed with any other exchange manager, adding that he believed his company's policy to be equitable "to both distributor and exhibitor."

Loew's, Cleveland's MGM first-run account, as in former years is obtaining 35 days' protection over de luxe suburban runs, but has increased its protection over 15-cent and double feature houses to 77 days instead of the former 63 days.

Cleveland exhibitors fear that MGM's attitude will be the opening wedge for other companies to seize on as justification for insisting on similar zoning clauses. Moe B. Horwitz and Leo Greenberger of the Washington and Community circuits, respectively, discussed the matter with Abram F. Myers and Sidney E. Samuelson, national Allied officials, at the Allied of New Jersey convention in Atlantic City recently, it is understood, but whether action is planned by the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio has not been revealed at the time this issue goes to press.

Denies Retarded Sales

Mr. Drew said MGM's policy has not retarded sales, and that reports to the contrary, he has closed every circuit and independent account in the Greater Cleveland area.

In Chicago a fight between Essaness and Balaban & Katz circuits over the latter's increased clearance demands, which would disrupt the eight-year-old releasing system, has taken the place of the independents' boycott against MGM which held the center of the stage last year.

B & K wants distributors to grant seven days protection for its 30-cent situations over houses charging 25 cents top, which, under the unofficial but well established plan, now obtain releases immediately after the close of the run at 30-cent theatres. The circuit's demand is a renewal of one made last season, but this time it is more determined.

A majority of the Essaness operations are in the 25-cent classification, and since it would bear the brunt of the change the circuit is vigorously protesting, with the support of other independent circuits. A majority of the distributors are reported favorable to the B. & K. claims, but MGM and Fox are alied with the opponents.

Midwest Buys Protection

From Kansas City comes word that Fox Film has sold Fox Midwest first, second and third runs in zones, with protection over others, and that Warner, MGM, Columbia and Universal also may be releasing new season product on the same basis.

Independent exhibitors so far have not been approached on new season product deals by the major distributors, and they regard this as significant, especially in view of the fact that the exchanges are showing no desire to enter into a clearance pact proposed by the unaffiliated houses without the approval of Fox Midwest. The independents expect to force the issue shortly, and Federal court action on the ground of conspiracy and monopoly are already being discussed.

Threat of action was also heard in Baltimore where independents are opposing extended protection demands of an important unaffiliated circuit operator. It is understood one distributor has granted the higher clearance.

While the Los Angeles schedule is generally considered equitable and is being closely followed in that territory, the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California has informed members that the clearance over 25-cent houses outside Los Angeles will be reduced from 49 days to 42 days and subsequent runs will be reduced accordingly. The organization is working to cut the period to 35 days.

Sam Briskin Resigns From Columbia Studio

Sam Briskin, studio manager for Columbia Pictures, has resigned, effective October 15th. He gave as his reason the fact he couldn't come to terms with Harry Cohn, president, on a new deal following a difference over a stock transfer which allegedly never materialized.

KORDA'S PURCHASE OF PARTNERSHIP 'INTERNATIONALIZES' UNITED ARTISTS

London Producer - Director Elected Member of Board; Sir Connop Guthrie on Executive Committee of U. A.

The sale this week by United Artists' four producer-owners of a fifth share in the corporation to Alexander Korda, London producer and director, brought the first open investment and management participation of British capital in an American distributing corporation of socalled "major" size.

At a meeting held last Friday at the studios of United Artists in Hollywood, it was announced that Mr. Korda, chairman of London Films, was elected a member of the U A board of directors and now becomes a partner in the ownership of the company on an equal standing with Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Samuel Goldwyn.

It also was announced that Sir Connop Guthrie, member of the directorate of London Films, who accompanied Mr. Korda on the visit to Hollywood, has been elected a member of the executive committee of United Artists. London Films is the company's production affiliate in England.

Saluting Alexander Korda as "a producer who, almost single-handed, raised the British film industry from the shadows of mediocrity to a foremost place in the world market," Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president of United Artists in charge of foreign distribution, declared that "Korda's entry into the company marks a decided step forward in the further internationalization of United Artists."

Goldwyn to Make Film at London

Plans are now being made for Samuel Goldwyn to produce a film at the new London Films studios in England. It is probable that the new organization of Pickford-Lasky Productions also will soon go to England for production of one of its coming season's pictures.

"It is to be the beginning of a free interchange of personalities and production facilities between United Artists' producers on both sides of the Atlantic," said the home office management in New York.

Financial terms of the arrangement by which Mr. Korda acquired a fifth interest in the corporation were not disclosed. However, the New York Times observed that the existing members paid a reputed $650,000 for Joseph M. Schenck's holdings when Mr. Schenck resigned as a partner to join 20th Century-Fox, and another $550,000 for control of Art Cinema Corporation. "Their own memberships," the Times concluded, "are valued in excess of $1,000,000 each."

Mr. Korda hailed the new arrangement as a "hands-across-the-sea move which I am sure will be beneficial to both the American and the English industries."

He said he would go on producing his pictures in England, returning immediately to London to begin production of "Cyrano de Bergerac," with Charles Laughton, and "Lawrence of Arabia," with Walter Hudd, a new actor discovered by George Bernard Shaw in England.

Aside from the free interchange of artists, writers, directors and technicians between American and British studios that will result from the new deal with Mr. Korda, Mr. Kelly believes that it will also have the effect of ultimately making London as important a production center as Hollywood.

Sees Better Grade of Product

"In the first place," he explained, "if the production burden is more evenly divided between Hollywood and London, we will get a better grade of product.

"Secondly, with a base of production on both sides of the Atlantic, we are more apt to get films of international appeal—pictures with scope, with stories of universal interest that will make them more acceptable and more marketable in foreign territories.

"Thirdly, there are definite economic and psychological factors that make it imperative for American producers who are eager for a place in the foreign market to make pictures in London, one of the ranking cosmopolitan centers of the world."

The coast conferences over, Alexander Korda left Hollywood by plane Wednesday and was to arrive in New York Thursday. He was accompanied by Stephen Pallos, general manager of London Films, and Sir Connop Guthrie.

Korda to Produce Six

Maurice Silverstone, chairman of United Artists, Ltd., the European division of the company, is also due to arrive in New York Thursday. The four will spend a few days in the east before sailing for London.

Tentative plans are for Mr. Korda to produce six pictures during 1935-36, at least four of which will be made in England aiming at the international market. He intimated certain films not in the company's announced program might be made for the English market only, adding that he was not interested in raiding American studios for talent and intended to build his own talent roster.

United Artists' producers won three of the six prizes awarded at the third biennial motion picture exhibit held at Venice, Italy.

The gold medal awarded by the Italian Confederation of Professional Men and Artists for the best animated cartoon was presented to Walt Disney for "The Band Concert." The special cup donated by the Italian Government Motion Picture Bureau for the best direction went to King Vidor for his work on "The Wedding Night," a Samuel Goldwyn production, and "Sanders of the River," a London Films release through United Artists won the cup donated by the Town of Venice for the best music-and-folklore picture among the 84 screened at the exhibition.

Among the other prize winners were: the Mussolini Cup to Greta Garbo for her work in "Anna Karenina" (MGM), produced by David O. Selznick, who is now a United Artists producers, and a cup to "Becky Sharp," RKO, for best color film.

British Companies Plan Big Budgets

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Production programs announced this week by two British units emphasize the extent to which London is interesting itself in studio projects, and also the growing importance of C. M. Woolf's releasing company, General Film Distributors, Ltd. General will handle the product of both Capitol Film Corporation, Ltd., which has a first year's schedule of £600,000 ($3,000,000) and of United Productions, Ltd., which in its policy statement envisages £100,000 ($500,000) pictures as a standard.

Implicit in both these announcements is the intention to aim at world distribution, and more particularly American, and this policy is obvious also in the story, director and star plans of both companies.

Capitol, an expansion of the earlier company with the same name, founded by Max Schach and Karl Grune (and which made "Abdul Hamid" for ABP) has such directors as Karl Grune, Al Werker, Jack Raymond and Maurice Tourneur, and its star announcements include the names of Ann Harding, Elissa Landi, Jack Buchanan, Clive Brook, Helen Vinson, Nils Asther, Fay Wray, Anna Neagle and Richard Tauber.

Separate Units in Parent Body

United Productions, with a makeup similar to that of United Artists—that of a number of separate production units in a parent organization—has on its directorate C. M. Woolf, Dr. Kasas, Leslie Howard, Eugene Frenke (husband of Anna Sten) and Rudolph Forster (the male lead in Bergner's "Dreaming Lips").

Its story announcements include "Bonnie Prince Charlie" under Leslie Howard's supervision, and "Lady Hamilton" with Anna Sten and Forster, supervised by Dr. Frenke. Before "Lady Hamilton" goes into production, Anna Sten is playing in "A Woman Alone" for Garrett-Klement Pictures, Ltd., which has just signed Henry Wilcoxon to play opposite her.

Studio Space at Premium

Capitol is taking space at British & Dominions studio at Elstree. During the next 12 months the demands on the B&D plant will be such that the new floor mentioned as a possibility at the recent company meeting already seems a minimum necessity. Apart from B&D's own program, the studio has to accommodate the production demands of Herbert Wilcox Productions, Ltd., as well as Capitol, and Trans-Atlantic already is using space there. It is also the center for Paramount British productions, while the demands of independent producers probably are as pressing in the case of B&D as in that of every other modern plant in the London area.

RKO Directors Meet

The board of directors of Radio-Keith-Orpheum held its regular quarterly meeting last Friday. J. R. McDonough, president of RKO Radio Pictures, arrived in New York for home office conferences.

FIGHT STARTS OVER EIGHT ADVERSE BILLS ENACTED IN LAST SESSION

California Citizens' Statewide Petition Against Chain Store Tax Points to Long Non-Enforcement Period or Repeal

Tax Opposition Undertaken or Planned in Florida, Mississippi, Missouri, New York, New Jersey; Playdate Laws Assailed

The few victories won in state legislatures over the motion picture by proponents of the hundreds of adverse bills that were proposed during the legislative season recently ended—culminating the worst attack on the industry in years—are threatened with a short life.

A statewide petition by citizens against California's chain store tax (probably applicable to circuit theatres) destines that levy to a long period of non-enforcement or repeal.

Distributors are ready to fight Florida's stamp act.

Mississippi exhibitors envision repeal of the state's 12 per cent admission tax, as a result of impending political changes.

Missouri's tax law is being attacked as invalid.

Distributors in New York are continuing their court opposition to the city sales tax.

New Jersey merchants are up in arms over the state's new sales tax.

Tests of the new Ohio and Wisconsin laws prohibiting designated playdates were set for September 23d.

Concessions were granted exhibitors on Ontario's heavy taxes.

The petition for a referendum on California's recently-enacted chain-store tax has already been signed by 250,000 residents, and election authorities believe only 150,000 names are required to compel the state to return the question to the voters. This automatically would stay enforcement and during the stay attacks are expected to be made on the bill's constitutionality.

Non-Payment Defended

Large distributors, led by RKO, are defending their non-payment of Florida's stamp tax on contracts and other legal documents on the grounds that the contracts are not closed within the state but at the home offices in New York. The tax is 10 cents for each $100 involved in the contract. The state is expected to start suit to force collection.

The nomination in Mississippi of Hugh L. White for governor at last week's primaries is encouraging to theatre owners who now see possibilities of obtaining a repeal or considerable modification of the state's 12 per cent admission tax.

Cole County circuit court, at Jefferson City, Missouri, received a request from merchants to rule on the constitutionality of the state's new sales tax law, which merchants and exhibitors agree is one of the worst nuisances ever perpetrated as an obstacle to the normal conduct of business where the making of change in small amounts is an important part of the procedure. The tax, one per cent, requires payments in mills with tokens.

New Jersey's merchants were equally bitter toward the new state sales tax there and were preparing to go to the courts for relief, on grounds of unconstitutionality.

Distributors met in New York last Friday to decide on action against the city's attempts to collect sales taxes on local film rentals, and it was decided to retain special counsel for the fight, which will be led in a test by Universal and United Artists.

PETTENGILL TO PRESS BLOCK BOOKING BILL

The Pettengill bill to outlaw block and blind booking will be pressed at the next session and hearings will be sought in January, the Representative said in the Congressional Record Wednesday. He said the bill was written by the Motion Picture Research Council "aided by many other sources." No effort will be made to enact censorship regulation, he added.

The city some weeks ago filed notices with both these companies for payment of the levy, and briefs setting forth the reasons for non-payment were promptly filed with City Comptroller Frank T. Taylor. Basically, the distributors contend that films are not subject to such a tax.

The suit of RKO Distributing Corporation in a test against the State of Ohio, John W. Bricker, attorney general, to determine the validity of the law prohibiting designated playdates, is scheduled to be heard before Judge Benson W. Hough, in federal court, Columbus, O., on September 23d.

The playdate bill passed both legislative houses at the last session, but was not signed at that time by Governor Davey because it was declared unconstitutional by the state's attorney general. It automatically became a law, however, on July 16th, just before the distributors' test suit was filed, and has since been pending.

Like the Ohio test, a similar situation in Wisconsin is expected to attract nationwide motion picture attention. The Wisconsin suit likewise is set for September 23d, and, instituted by Fox and MGM, will be heard in federal court at Milwaukee.

Concession in Ontario

Premier M. F. Hepburn has extended a concession to exhibitors of Ontario by amending the drastic Amusements Tax Act to exempt children under 16 when the admission price does not exceed 25 cents. However, exhibitors must continue to make complete returns on the non-taxable attendance.

Further observation of the legislative front as it affects motion pictures disclosed this week that Sunday films will come up for vote in November in three additional towns: Sharon, Franklin and Oil City.

The 1935 session of the Massachusetts legislature, just concluded after a meeting of record length and activity, found motion pictures successful in practically every instance, this despite the seriousness and multitudinousness of bills introduced which were unfriendly to the industry. To Joseph H. Brennan, former Boston Loew State theatre manager serving his first few months as executive secretary of the state MPTO, goes most of the credit for the emerging of the industry from the stormy legislative sea. Mr. Brennan was the acknowledged leader of the motion picture in State House circles and was aided, on occasion, by Martha W. Ferris, of the Boston Film Board, and by Arthur K. Howard, of Allied.

Several billboard bills were shelved without much discussion. Then Governor Curley introduced a billboard measure that provided for the scrapping of all local laws and the placing of all outdoor advertising under a politically appointed state administrator. Largely through the efforts of Mr. Brennan, portions of the bill that would have imposed censorship on theatre marquees, license fees for each change, were extracted. After establishing a record for the number of times it was killed and revived, the billboard bill was allowed to remain defeated.

Dangerous to the industry was the bill introduced by Representative Thomas A. Dorgan which sought to ban all children under 14 years of age from theatres except at "suitable" showings. Suitability would have been determined by an unpaid board consisting of one representative of each important religious sect, appointed by the governor. Furthermore, the bill provided that any concern showing "or producing" a motion picture that did not pass the board would have its license revoked in Massachusetts. This would have given the board the right to prevent any distributor from doing business in the Bay State. The House turned down the bill by the narrow margin of 57 to 31.

Representative Dorgan also sought to prevent attendance of individuals under 20 years of age at theatres located in buildings where liquor is sold. The House defeated this, 56 to 42.

A drastic measure introduced by Senator Scanlan would have turned licensing boards in the state into censor groups required to pass on each separate motion picture before it could be exhibited in any of the boards' respective communities to anyone under the age of 21 years. The bill also sought to prevent everyone under the age of 14 years from attending the showing of any motion picture, whether approved or not, after "seven o'clock in the evening unless accompanied by an adult."

Win Fight on Licensing

Theatremen won the fight against a bill to place the licensing of stage hands into the hands of the commissioner of public safety, believing the present setup to be fair.

Another bill that probably would have put many smaller theatres out of business was turned down after a long fight. This would have set up a complicated licensing system for heating and cooling systems in theatres.

An attempt to legalize dancing on theatre stages on Sundays fell through when the industry, fearing friction with religious groups, did not support it.

A measure to establish an "Economic Council," along the lines of the NRA, met industry disfavor because, among other things, it would have controlled the financing of film companies and subsidiaries and regulated distribution. It was defeated.

A petition, framed to provide for sharper enforcement of the Sunday law in this state, providing for film censorship, was deemed unnecessary and defeated.

Numerous tax bills were filed. All especially pertinent to the industry were defeated. In addition to several sales tax measures, such bills eventually killed included one providing for a levy of five cents on all theatre admissions with an added ten per cent for tickets selling for more than 50 cents.

Florida Storm Pictures Were Lost for Days

Back of the photographing for the newsreel of a great disaster, there invariably billows and storms a great story of human achievement. Back of the steamer Dixie and Florida Keys storm story lies a tale of news gathering that combines heroic fortitude, ingenuity, foresight, utter folly and dogged perseverance.

On the night United Press flashed a warning that a storm was threatening Florida, Charles Ford, editor of Universal Newsreel, immediately got busy, with telephone and telegraph, making arrangements in the Florida points which seemed to be strategic. The man for the assignment was photographing the garment strike in New York, and Mr. Ford gave him his orders to proceed to Newark airport, where a plane would be awaiting him. His instructions were in the plane. In spite of the most terrific flying weather, the plane finally staggered into Jacksonville. It could go no further. They had expected this in New York, and had made arrangements, by offering a big bonus, for a "daredevil" to drive the cameraman in a car from Jacksonville to Miami.

Flies Over Steamer

The car left at 4:30 Tuesday afternoon, and arrived in Miami at 5:00 A. M. Wednesday, the driver almost helpless, the car ruined. In the meantime arrangements had been made with the Coast Guard for a seaplane. Pathe and MGM newsreels then combined with Universal. All agreed that the shots be shared equally. Only one cameraman could go on the treacherous air journey, but James Lyons is an intrepid cameraman, and he flew over and photographed from every angle the stranded steamer Dixie before any rescue vessel could come within a mile of where the Morgan liner lay.

On the way back to Miami Lyons discovered from the air the catastrophe that had overtaken the veterans on the Keys, and induced the Coast Guard pilot to fly over the destroyed camp so he could photograph that. Back in Miami, Lyons called up New York. Universal had already bought by phone a Cadillac auto and it lay with the engine running, ready for Lyons to make the trip to Jacksonville. In Jacksonville he would have just time to catch a train, and all provisions had been made for the insurance and packing of the film. It was late Wednesday night.

Cameraman Collapses

But Lyons hadn't slept in 48 hours, and he had had the physical experience of pitting his strength against the hurricane, which at times had registered 120 miles an hour. He was at the end of his strength as he was about to seek the auto at Miami to make the trip of 400 miles to Jacksonville with the only shots made of the Dixie. And as he stepped out of the booth he collapsed. The police picked him up, but naturally did not know how valuable was his equipment and his cans of pictures.

In the morning Ford again took up his long distance direction of the adventure. After two hours of failure to contact Lyons in despair he called up his own younger brother John, who lives in Miami, but who knows nothing whatever about photography. He gave him the facts and put it up to him to locate Lyons and rescue as much as possible of the wrecked newsreel story. Young Ford discovered that Lyons had walked across the street after telephoning Ford, and dropped senseless with fatigue. Young Ford also located the film and the camera but not the camera case.

He gathered up everything that he could find, not knowing exposed film from unexposed. The Fords spent $50 in long distance conversation while the newsreel editor in New York tried to explain how to unlock and unload an Akeley camera, a job that is purposely made as intricate as possible. By this time trains were running from Miami to Jacksonville. Young Ford insured the shipment for $5,000, which the telegraph company reduced to $50, thinking the larger sum was extravagant. This well-intentioned act caused further delay. A $5,000 package would have been guarded with care and not dumped unceremoniously on the platform.

Ford, in New York, kept in contact with the shipment by phone and telegraph in the hope that he would be able to take the shipment off the train in Jacksonville, and send it by plane to New York. But the fliers were still grounded in Florida. However, the orders to take the shipment off at Jacksonville could not be countermanded in time, and the film was heaved out on the platform at Jacksonville. It was four hours before another train, and a slow one at that, could pick it up.

A whole day had been lost and still no flying weather. It was not until noon on Friday that a plane sent out from New York intercepted the shipment at Roanoke, Va., and brought it to New York for showing in the theatres on Saturday morning.

Paramount Earns $796,000 in 2nd Quarter of 1935

Estimated net earnings of $796,000, after interest, reserves and federal income taxes were reported by Paramount Pictures, Inc., for the second quarter of 1935 in the first official statement of earnings, issued Tuesday, to come from the corporation since the reorganization was effected July 1. These earnings are equal, after one-quarter's dividend requirements on both classes of preferred stock, to 17 cents a share on the 1,610,452 common shares, and compare with estimated net earnings for the first quarter, ended March 31, of $1,472,000, or 59 cents a share on the common.

$1,289,500 Operating Earnings

Operating earnings of $1,289,500 for the second quarter compared with $2,405,000 for the first three months of 1935.

Added to the second quarter's operating earnings were $76,800 in dividends from non-consolidated subsidiaries and a foreign exchange adjustment of $216,200.

Deducted were $55,000 for interest on a bank settlement (non-recurring after June 29, 1935); estimated federal income taxes of $195,500; $400,000 for interest for the second quarter on the new debentures of Paramount Pictures, Inc., which bear interest from January 1, 1935, in accordance with the plan of reorganization; and, $136,000 for reserve for losses of Paramount Broadway Corporation and companies which are inactive or the future status of which is uncertain.

Reorganization Costs Excluded

A statement from the corporation said:

"The above results have been prepared by the company's accountants from the books and reports of subsidiaries, and are subject to annual audit by public accountants. They exclude expenses incident to the bankruptcy and reorganization of the parent company. They do not include the results of operations of Olympia Theatres, Inc., and Minnesota Amusement Company and certain indirectly owned subsidiaries which were in receivership or bankruptcy throughout the period, and whose operations, therefore, do not affect the current earnings of Paramount Pictures, Inc.

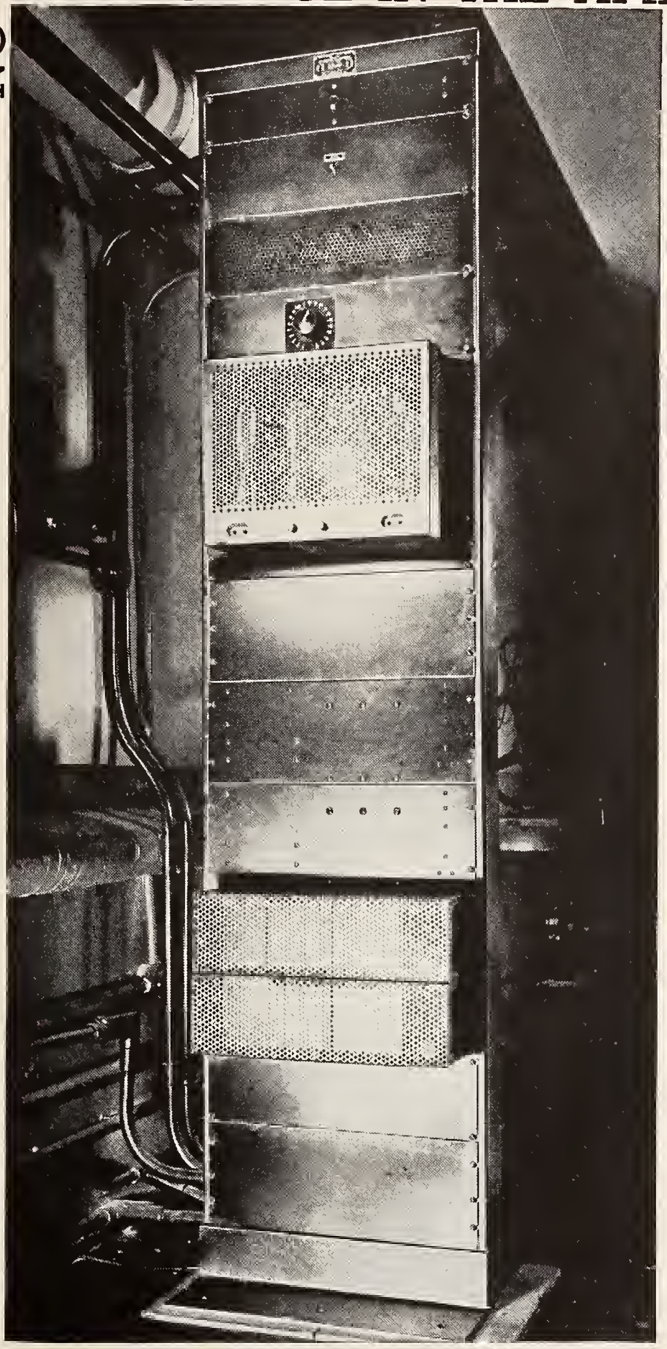
"Net capital losses for which new reserves were created on the balance sheet of September 29, 1934, are also excluded. Operations of companies which are not wholly-owned or substantially wholly-owned are included only to the extent that dividend income has been received therefrom.

"The second quarter's earnings reflect seasonal factors, and to some extent the adverse effect of the temporary slowing down of production resulting from the reorganization of the studio management undertaken early in the year and still in progress. Studio production is increasing, but the effect of the lower production rate during the spring and early summer will continue to be reflected in operating figures for some time."

Picks Four for Germany

RKO Export Corporation has closed a deal with Charles F. Unger of New York and Berlin for four of its 1934-35 pictures to be distributed in Germany. The films picked by Mr. Unger are "Roberta," "The Gay Divorcee," "Break of Hearts" and "The Silver Streak."

NO 2 BOX OFFICE IN THE AMPLIFIER



Money-Making Step-Up

ALMOST any amplifier can step-up the volume of sound, but it takes a mighty fine one to avoid stepping-down the quality and box-office.

That's why RCA put so much thought and effort into making the finest amplifier it could devise for its High Fidelity Photophone equipment.

This amplifier handles the output of the sound head without distortion. It steps up the volume to the level you need and preserves all the most delicate tones and overtones that are so essential for faithful reproduction, audience satisfaction.

This is a triumph of great engineering.

It is also a masterpiece produced by practical men, for practical men to use.

You see the evidence of practicality in the absence of batteries, of motor-generators; in the use of standard tubes; in the standard mounting racks that can be placed against a wall, since all units come out from the front; in simple provisions for meeting emergencies; in thorough precautions to make emergencies as rare as possible.

Add all these things up. Plus them with a maintenance and service schedule that gives you expert attention when you need it, at a fair price. The combination means Box Office set-up—money made with the most efficient use of money and materials.

AMPLIFIED POINTS

1. All AC operated. Each unit complete in itself, without separate eliminators.
2. Each unit fits standard channel iron rack, and is installed from front. Rack can be placed against wall, saving space.
3. Standard RCA Radio tubes, low in price, available anywhere.
4. No amplifier in sound head and so no troubles with vibration, oil, dirt. Amplifier can be placed where convenient, almost any distance from sound head.
5. Optional remote volume control permits adjustment of volume directly from auditorium.
6. Reliable, long-life rectifiers for speaker fields and exciter lamps.
7. Separate voltage and power amplifier in same rack. If power amplifier goes, continue show with voltage amplifier. Should there be any changes in recording in future, amplifier can be easily, economically brought up to date.
8. Simple, reliable, swift change-over relay.
9. Projectionists have what it takes to get the most out of the amplifier.

RCA

SENSE MAKES DOLLARS

Hit films and attention-arresting promotion can go a long way toward overcoming imperfect sound. But why handicap your bookings? It's good dollar-making sense to take all the RCA High Fidelity Photophone apparatus can give you.

MAXWELL WARNS OF PRODUCTION "BUBBLE"

Chairman of Associated British Says Gross Receipts Have Not Kept Pace with Costs

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

An outspoken warning of the danger of over-expansion in the British production field and a possible loss of millions of pounds of invested money, as in the first post-quota boom, was pronounced by John Maxwell, chairman of Associated British Picture Corporation, Ltd., at the annual meeting of that company, when the already announced final dividend of 6 per cent (making 10 per cent for the year) was confirmed. Mr. Maxwell's word of caution came at about the time that an estimate was going the rounds of the trade that $50,000,000 had been invested in the British industry since the end of May.

"Conditions in the production field have become increasingly difficult in the last 12 to 18 months," he said. "Costs have been mounting steadily, individual films have become more expensive, and gross receipts have not been increasing proportionately."

"There has been a great and unusual flow of money into film production and it is not always wisely and properly spent," he said. "British film production seems to be looked upon as a new Klondyke—a land flowing with easy money for all and sundry. Large sums of money are being spent extravagantly and wastefully.

Points to Labor Pay Demand

"These fantastic ideas of money values are even permeating downwards, and at present we are faced with demands from the Electrical Trades Union for some of their members which, if granted, would mean that a man called in to work for one hour on Sunday would be entitled to be paid about £5.12 for his hour's work, and if called in to work at night instead of during the day for three nights in the week, would be earning £40 to £50 ($200 to $250) for his week's work."

Mr. Maxwell said he knew of large sums of money advanced on pictures having been lost in the last year or so, adding: "I would deplore a return to the conditions that existed in 1928-29 when almost two millions was lost in the liquidation and reconstruction of film production companies. . . ."

"I think it right to remind those who are financially interested but have no actual experience in the business, of the underlying risks. I make these remarks also for the purpose of conveying to our shareholders that we are not dependent to any extent for the profit-earning capacity of the corporation on our film production department. . . ."

Accountancy Plan

Giving details of ABP's own method of production accountancy, Mr. Maxwell said:

"Our method is to cost each picture separately, and when it is finished it goes into stock at actual cost. All receipts derived from the film are applied in reduction of the cost as the money is received, until a point is reached when the cost is completely eliminated by receipts, and the surplus thereafter emerging is then, and only then, treated as profit. If, at the end of twelve months, the receipts from any films have not reached the cost figure on our books, then the shortage between receipts and costs is written off at once as a loss. In this way, we never at any time assume profits before they are actually realized, and on the other hand write off losses as soon as they are ascertained."

With regard to Wardour Film, Ltd., and Pathe Pictures, Ltd., Mr. Maxwell said:

"Our distributing companies do not in any sense exist or make their profits at the expense of the production side of the business, as we only charge against our productions department a commission for the services rendered by the distributing companies in handling their pictures, which is practically equivalent to the actual cost involved in this service."

Mark Ostrer Comments

Mark Ostrer, chairman and managing director of Gaumont-British, in an interview with "The Cinema," supported Mr. Maxwell's warning so far as it refers to "a certain type of independent company that comes into the industry to make an isolated picture, raises money from one source or another, and then rushes round hiring artists on any terms."

At the same time he issued a warning of the danger of judging a film production enterprise by the scope of its expenditure.

"It is not the amount spent on production that matters," he said. "It is the amount spent in relation to the quality produced. We spent considerable sums on our pictures, but we do it for the international market, and we get in the results."

Mr. Ostrer found an explanation of the growth of small companies in the encouragement given by the Films Act in its present form.

"Some of the small independent companies are just nuisances," he said. "They do not mean anything to British production. They are kept in being because of the Quota."

He advocated amendment of the Act by restoration of the "margin of safety" between the distributing and exhibiting quotas which has been abolished now that the 20 per cent figures apply universally. This margin was once 50 per cent, but was reduced in stages to 5 per cent (20 per cent distributors, 17½ per cent exhibitors) before it was removed altogether.

"March of Time" in England

For the British introduction of "The March of Time," Frank Tilley of Radio Pictures, Ltd., staged a press luncheon at Kettner's which attracted an unusually large attendance of Fleet Street celebrities, including Editors Christiansen of the Express and Carthoys of the Daily Sketch, A. Webb, assistant to the managing editor of the Daily Herald—Odhams group—and Bill Hickey, the Express quick-fire personality writer.

The impression made by the specimen reels afterward displayed at the Prince Edward was decidedly favorable, and the promise of British material in regular "March of Time" releases suggested that exhibitors also will look with a kindly eye on the new attraction, the American history of which, by the way, was very interestingly explained by Daniel Longwill of Time.

Garvey Resigns at Fox

Stanley Garvey has resigned from the story department of Twentieth Century-Fox at the Hollywood studios. He will be succeeded by Karl Tunberg, who was formerly in the department under Jason Joy. Tunberg will also act as assistant to Julian Johnson.

To the Staff of the Fox Film Corporation
Theatre Owners and Others Who May Be Interested

I wish to express my grateful thanks and appreciation for the support and cooperation rendered to me in the exhibition, distribution and the studio's efficient contribution in the motion pictures produced by me. It has been a friendly association which has been mutually profitable.

I regret parting company with old and loyal friends with whom I have been associated for the past 20 years in the Fox Film Corporation throughout the world. These many friendships I am sure will endure.

I have made no plans or commitments for my future picture productions. Upon completing my vacation, about November 1st next, I will announce my new production activities and affiliation. I will produce pictures in Los Angeles, California.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

SCHNITZER SELLING SHOWS BEHIND SCREEN
LASKY PROTESTS SCHUMANN-HEINK SIGNING
ENGEL AND ZINN QUIT 20TH CENTURY-FOX
16 FEATURES COMPLETED, 8 GO INTO WORK

JOSEPH I. SCHNITZER, past president of RKO-Radio and one of the industry's great salesmen, is now selling shows from behind the screen, instead of for the screen.

A year ago Mr. Schnitzer discovered the plight of Dan, Joe and Ike Greenberg, three salvage merchants who knew nothing about the picture business. Twenty-four hours after meeting the boys, Joe Schnitzer was the sole owner of the extensive costuming concern.

Started as a two-by-four Indian curio store on Main Street, years ago, today as the Western Costume Company it occupies a six-story building with a million square feet of storage space, and services every major studio in Hollywood, reducing costs of production in time, research, investment.

Three quarters of a million costumes hang in the antiseptic dark of storage racks, waiting for hurry calls. Guns, from priceless old muzzle-loaders to deadly efficient Remington rifles, are stacked in the huge gun room, oiled and ready for use. The gleam of gold and jewels and enamels comes from case after case of medals and decorations from every country in the world. There are wedding dresses of the gay nineties and christening robes from Italy. There are brain-spikes from the Malay Peninsula and shovels from a Florida chain gang.

On the main floor are authentic costumes which many museums would treasure. These, of course, are not rented. They are used as models. The balcony houses thousands of volumes on costume, and Captain Cook, librarian, adds constantly to the great files of clippings and photographs used to authenticate designs.

During the year Mr. Schnitzer has established contacts all over the world to speed his service. A case in point was a call from Twentieth Century-Fox for a uniform worn by the doorman at Monte Carlo for "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo." Mr. Schnitzer cabled his French representative. In a matter of hours photographs were speeding back to Hollywood, where after another few hours the uniform, guaranteed a replica in every detail, was delivered to the studio.

The average rental of a garment is $7.50 a week, though some go as low as $3, and others command $150. The charge includes fitting of the player, and invariably a trip to the cleaning room or laundry when the garment is returned.

16 Films Start, 8 Completed

Since August 25 the combined newly-started picture quota of seven Hollywood studios is 16 features. In the same period eight pictures were completed.

With five pictures going in work, Paramount assumes the new production leadership. Included in the group is a Wanger production, "Mary Burns, Fugitive," which will feature Sylvia Sidney with Alan Baxter, Pert Kelton, Ivan Miller, James T. Mack and Isabel Lamal. William K. Howard is directing. The second feature, "The Bouncer," presents Carl Brisson, Arline Judge and Mady Christians in the principal parts, supported by Eddie Davis, Inez Courtney and William Frawley. Robert Florey is directing. In the third to go, "Coronado," the cast is composed of Leon Errol, Johnny Downs, Eddy Duchin, Jack Haley, Jameson Thomas, Alice White, Nella Walker and Betty Burgess. Norman McLeod is directing. Two others newly starting are "Klondyke Lou," in which Victor McLaglen will be teamed with Mae West with Raoul Walsh directing, and "Anything Goes," featuring Bing Crosby with Ethel Merman under Louis Milestone's direction.

At 20th Century-Fox three pictures were started. In "Thanks a Million," Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Fred Allen and Patsy Kelly are featured and the support includes Paul Whiteman and his band, Phil Baker, Rubinoff, Raymond Walburn, Bennie Baker, Paul Harvey, Edwin Maxwell, Andrew Tombes, Alan Dinehart, William Stelling, Bottle and Beetle, Romona, Yacht Club Boys and the Radio Rogues. "Charlie Chan's Secret" will present Warner Oland, Charles Quigley, Rosina Lawrence, Henrietta Crosman, Edward Trevor, Astrid Allwyn, Arthur Carew, Egon Brecher, Gloria Roy, Charles McNaughton, Jonathan Hale and Ivan Miller. Gordon Wiles is directing. In "Snatched," which George Marshall directs, will be seen Rochelle Hudson, Bruce Cabot, Cesar Romero, Edward Norris, Warren Hymer, Orrin Burke, Frank Conroy, Robert Gleckler, Herbert Rawlinson and Charles Wilson.

Other Pictures Started

Two pictures were started at Universal. "His Night Out" will present Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey, Robert McWade, Jack LaRue, Willard Robertson, Oscar Apfel, Greta Meyer, Jack Norton, Priscilla Lawson, Billy Burrud and Frank Mayo. William Nigh is directing. The second feature, "The Ivory Handled Gun," stars Buck Jones with Charlotte Wynters, Walter Miller, Carl Stockdale, Frank Rice, Joseph Girard and Bob Kortman. Ray Taylor is directing.

Republic Pictures also started two productions, both of which are Mascots. "Melody Trail" will present Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford, Willy Castello and Marie Burton, Joe Kane directing. "Confidential," which Edward L. Cahn is directing, will present Donald Cook, Evalyn Knapp, Warren Hymer, J. Carroll Naish, Theodore Von Eltz, Allan Bridge, Kane Richmond, James Bush, Lynton Brent, Edwin Hearn and Lillian Castle.

After one start that subsequently had to be deferred, MGM put "Riff Raff" actually in work. The cast includes Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy, Joseph Calleia, Una Merkel, Allan Jenkins, Roger Imhof, J. Farrell MacDonald, Geove Givot, Paul Hurst, Helen Costello, Wade Boteler, Victor Kilian, Mickey Rooney, Helen Flint, Baby Jane Quigley, Burton Moorehouse and James Marquis. J. Walter Ruben is directing.

Reliance started "Splendor." Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea are starred, supported by Helen Westley, Paul Cavanagh, Ruth Weston, Billie Burke, David Niven and Ivan Simpson. Elliott Nugent is directing.

MGM Completes Three

On the completed side of the ledger, MGM turns in three features which are potentially in the big picture class. "A Tale of Two Cities," directed by Jack Conway, boasts one of the most elaborate name value casts ever presented by this studio. With Ronald Colman featured, it includes such names as Elizabeth Allan, Reginald Owen, Dudley Digges, Henry B. Walthall, Donald Woods, Basil Rathbone, Lucille LaVerne, Claude Gillingwater, Billy Bevan, Isabel Jewell, Tully Marshall, Tempe Piggott, Mitchell Lewis, May Beatty, Nigel Brulier, Barbara Barondess and many others. The second picture, "Robin Hood of Eldorado," will present Warner Baxter, Ann Loring, Margo, Bruce Cabot, Eric Linden, J. Carroll Naish, Francis McDonald, George Regas, Bradley Page, Soledad Jimenez, Edgar Kennedy, Tom Moore, G. Pat Collins, Jason Robards, Paul Hurst and Marc Lawrence. William Wellman directed. After nearly three months in production, "Mutiny on the Bounty" finally was completed. Also boasting an extensive cast, it features Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone, Dudley Digges, Eddie Quillan, DeWitt Jennings, Craufurd Kent, Herbert Mundin, Stanley Fields and Charles Irwin. Frank Lloyd directed.

Universal completed two pictures, "Remember Last Night" and "Three Kids and a Queen." In the first, a mystery story, directed by James Whale, will be seen Edward Arnold, Constance Cummings, Sally Eilers, Robert Young, Robert Armstrong, Reginald Denny, Louise Henry, Jack LaRue, Monroe Owsley, Arthur Treacher, Rafael Ottiana, Gregory Ratoff, Ed Brophy, George Meeker and Alison Ardell. The second features May Robson, Frankie Darro, Henry Armetta, William Benedict, Billy Burrud, Charlot Henry, John Miljan, Hedda Hopper, Hale Hamilton, Lawrence Grant, Henry Kolker, Irving Pichel and Herman Bing. Edward Ludwig directed.

Radio completed "To Beat the Band," which will present Roger Pryor, Hugh Herbert, Helen Broderick, Johnny Mercer, Ronald Graham.

Warner finished "Broadway Hostess." The cast includes Wini Shaw, Phil Regan, Genevieve Tobin, Lyle Talbot, Fred Kohler.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

The lads of the Chicago Amusement Publicist's Association, under the expert guidance of President Larry Stein, have announced plans for their big Mardi Gras dinner-dance to be held in the Gold Room of the Congress hotel, Saturday, October 19th. A gay evening undoubtedly will be the result, as plans for this affair are most elaborate and in keeping with the cleverness of the various members.

Sam Morris, Chicago American news sleuth, was about ready to give the world a yarn for which it has been most expectant. A pal of Sam's received a wire from Hollywood signed—Jean Harlow. It revealed her marriage to Bill Powell. In order to make sure, Sam had International News Service check the yarn in the coast city. Both Jean and Bill denied the marriage. Now, Sam's friend is wondering whoinel sent the wire.

Ralph Shellhorn of Dundee, Wright Catlow of Barrington and Charlie House of Monmouth were three exhibitors who graced Wabash Avenue with their presence this week. They reported business is on the upgrade.

A new theatre is being erected at Belmont and Central avenues by Balaban & Katz. The house will have 2,000 seats and is being erected at a cost of $135,000. Plans call for opening on or about January 1. The policy for this deluxe house will be first-run pictures for that neighborhood.

Alex L. Levy is in charge of the construction which starts immediately. The site has long been considered by various theatre men but the B & K circuit closed the deal.

Film Row bowling experts are getting the kinks out of their arms. The new season is at hand and the Chicago Motion Picture Bowling League is about to embark upon another busy schedule. Eight teams comprise the league this year. They are: Paramount, National Screen, Erpi, Universal, Boxoffice, Judels, Columbia, Film Pickup Service. Mussey's Alleys at Adams and Wabash will be the scene of the battles for the league title. The first matches got under way September 18th.

Otto Bolle, Paramount's Detroit manager, was a visitor here last week. He closed several important deals and left for home a happy man.

Henri Elman, back from New York, says he meets more Chicagoans on Broadway than on Wabash. Among those he saw on his last trip were Dave Dubin, Julius Goodman, Harry Hollander, Harry Rathner, George West, Ben Serkovitch, Dave Hochreich and Phil Spitalny. Henri, incidentally, spent an evening at the Ubangi Club and now he is a leading exponent in the Ubangi sign language.

Merle Oberon stopped off between trains the other day and visited with the local lads for a few hours. As a result business was at a standstill for that particular afternoon.

Some weeks ago the Postmaster here ruled against any advertising for "Bank Night" going through the mails. A few days later Postal Clerk Joseph Shanahan of the 63rd street station dropped into the Southtown theatre and copped the $1,200 award. What the moral is we haven't decided. However, there must be one . . . somewhere!

Charles Reagan, Paramount district manager from New York, is in the village attending to business.

Some of the Honky-Tonks along South State street are making use of screen stills to advertise their girl shows. Photos of shapely film cuties in poses which the Hays office barred several years ago adorn the theatre fronts of these houses, which offer three features and a stage show for a dime.

Dorothy Ann Blank, formerly editor of College Humor, is packing her bags for a trip to Hollywood. She will announce her plans when she arrives and from what we hear they will be of the sensational variety.

Ed Magar of Allied travels fast. We ran into him in six different exchanges the other morning. And he said he had been to three others besides.

John Howard and Bob Lucas dropped in suddenly from Indianapolis and departed the same way. They closed several film deals while here.

Loop business is centered around the Palace this week. The house has had a lineup over a block long from opening until the last show every day this week. Gross of $33,000 is predicted. "Top Hat" is the attraction.

Joe E. Brown's personal appearance here has been cancelled. A telegram stating salary of $7,500 for the appearance was garbled and B & K thought it was for $2,500. When the truth was known the deal cooled . . . very quickly.

Congratulations! Clyde Eckhardt.

Our hat is off to Clyde, who for the past twenty years has been with Fox Film Corporation, and never has missed a paycheck.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE

Paramount

There appear to be exploitation possibilities galore in this production's title, theme and personnel. A fresh, up-to-date yarn, it majors in the entertainment character similar to that which made such pictures as "It Happened One Night" and "The Gilded Lily" such popular attractions. Dealing with elements that are popularly familiar and understood, it's the comedy-dramatic-romantic yarn of a barber shop manicurist (reason for the title) and her ambition to snag a wealthy husband. She meets the boy, who has all the requirements only to have his wealth disappear in the market crash. Desperate, she pledges her troth to a rich invalid who has everything to gratify her social ambitions, but nothing with which to meet her romantic inclinations. But just before it's too late the course of true love runs true and the boy and girl are brought together through the beneficence of the elderly swain.

The yarn is adapted from an original story by Vina Delmar, whose contributions to the screen and current fiction constitute a definite showmanship asset. The screen play is by Norman Krasna and Jack Kirkland, with direction by Mitchell Leisen.

Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray are in the leading roles, with Ralph Bellamy the principal featured character. Supporting players include Marie Prevost, attempting a screen comeback; Ruth Donnelly, currently in "Red Salute," William Demarest and Katherine DeMille, now appearing in "The Crusades."

As it is being filmed, the production seems to be one that will lend itself readily to a wide variety of commercial contacts. The meaning that is read into the title should make valuable those tieups both to exhibitors and those who cooperate in exploiting the attraction.

IN PERSON

Tentative Title

(Radio)

In theme this yarn seems to be of the stuff that makes for amusing entertainment. Its showmanship value, no matter what the final title may be, also appears to be more than ordinary. That advantage assumes a greater strength when the audience appeal of its leading character is considered. Ginger Rogers, who in her successive musicals with Fred Astaire, plus the recent "Romance in Manhattan," has won a fan following rivaled only by that of a very few newly created stars. This public favor, in addition to the fact that this vehicle is being planned to show her off in a most attractive way, is worthy of more than usual commercial consideration.

The show is a comedy romance in character. It deals with a popular motion picture star who, to escape the hectic onslaughts of her admirers while en tour effects a disguise. In Washington, rescued by a young man who himself is being harassed by government investigators, she prevails upon him to take her into hiding. Fleeing to the mountains where the man discovers her true identity, she is given a reform-discipline treatment. Involved in a moonshining escapade which puts amateur sleuths on the man's trail, they also have the mountaineers who take their "morals" seriously to consider which ends with a shotgun wedding.

George Brent shares the lead with Miss Rogers. The supporting players include Louis Mason, Henry Stephenson, Joan Breslau, Spencer Charters and Shelly Hall. William A. Seiter is directing. Production is based on a published story by Samuel Hopkins Adams with screen play by Allan Scott.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN

(20th-Fox-Lesser)

This is the picturization of Zane Grey's latest novel of the same title. Readers of the author's works number into the millions. It is an action-packed, spectacular outdoor romance localed in an Idaho mining town in the eighties. Semi-historical in character, its characters are colorful and it is being given lavish production.

George O'Brien is starred. A valuable name, such pictures as the recent "Cowboy Millionaire" and "Hard Rock Harrigan" have enhanced its box office appeal. It is being directed by David Howard, who first directed O'Brien in "Rainbow Trail" several years ago and more recently handled "Harrigan."

The supporting cast is of more than ordinary showmanship interest. Barbara Fritchie, seen in several Paramount features, shares the romantic angle with O'Brien. The only other woman in the story, Frances Grant, a former stage and Ziegfeld star, made her screen debut in the now current "Doubting Thomas." Spotted in important roles are Morgan Wallace, who has a long list of popular character parts to his credit; Dean Benton, seen previously with O'Brien in "Harrigan;" Edward LeSaint, William Bailey and George Hayes.

Photographed in the High Sierra Mountains, where a modern gold strike duplicates many of the scenes in the Zane story, the picture promises to feature many natural and beautiful outdoor backgrounds.

Bristling with action and adventure, it will feature such thrilling sequences as the avalanche of Thunder Mountain down on a mining camp; battles of the claim jumpers, the gold stampede, a series of physical conflicts and a thrilling chase leading to a suspense-laden court scene in the Miners' Court as history-making decisions are handed down.

THE MURDER OF DR. HARRIGAN

Warner

As is graphically conveyed by the title, this is a mystery story. Based on a strange idea, in which there is the tense conflict of human ambitions and greed, it establishes a complicated motive for its crime and develops an equally baffling method of solution which conclude a long series of thrilling and nerve-tingling adventures.

The production is adapted from a story by Mignon G. Eberhart, with screen play by Peter Milne and Sy Bartlett. Direction is by Frank McDonald, former Warner dialogue director, making his first attempt at handling a picture of his own.

An important feature of the production, from a showmanship viewpoint, is that it will serve to introduce Lynn Acker to the screen public. As Kay Linacker, the potential screen find has been a success in a number of New York legitimate stage shows. In this picture she will be seen as a capable but rather flippant nurse, sharing the story's romantic and dramatic interest with Ricardo Cortez. The remainder of the supporting cast, though lengthy, is composed of many favorably known players.

Essentially a crime mystery story, the locale is principally a hospital, but it is not a hospital picture. In it, Frank Reicher claims to be the inventor of a new anesthetic, which several others maintain is theirs. To prove his right, Reicher would submit to an operation to be performed by his bitterest enemy, Eldredge. About to perform the operation, Eldredge is killed and Reicher disappears. Thus enters the crime solution in which Miss Acker and Cortez combine their talents.

THE PERFECT GENTLEMAN

MGM

Comedy, the kind that is expected and usually delivered when Frank Morgan occupies the feature role, is the showmanship and entertainment essence of this production. In this he's a lovable liar and a perfect gentleman with a patch in his pants. A boresome braggart to his associates, a terrible trial to his clergyman son, the milk of human kindness that permeates his being leads him to become associated with an actress' rise to stardom on the stage. He eventually gets into a jam with his partner due to his fatherly consideration for his son, but comes back again to save the girl whom the audiences are shouting down and eventually marry her, at the same time taking care of his son's romantic future.

The picture is an adaptation of a stage play, successfully presented in New York, by Edward Childs Carpenter, who also prepared it for the screen. It is directed by Tim Whelan, recent maker of "The Murder Man."

Morgan, in the top role, was seen recently in "Good Fairy" and "Naughty Marietta" and is well remembered for "Affairs of Cellini." The production also introdcues two newcomers. In Cecily Courtneidge it presents one of the foremost personalities of the English stage and screen. She is a comedienne with a forte for impersonations. Also to be seen is Richard Waring, who has been appearing on the stage with Jane Cowl for several seasons and makes his screen debut here.

The locale of the production is London and the time the present. While much of the action takes place on the stage, it is not a theatre or back-stage show. Rather, it is a comedy romance, dealing in new and refreshing situations.

Cohn Sells Certificates

Harry Cohn, president of Columbia Pictures, has sold 8,000 voting trust certificates for Columbia common since March, it has been revealed in Washington. He reported a sale of 3,000 during March, 3,800 in May and 1,200 in June. At the end of June he was owner of 995 shares and certificates for 46,301 shares. The reason for the sales of such holdings is not required under the law.

Going Into Print

The annals of twenty years of motion picture activity as reflected in the work of one man—the chronicle of a big business as it developed simultaneously with a great art—the story of the rise and growth of the individuals who created the great institutions of the screen.

The Martin Quigley Twentieth Anniversary Edition of Motion Picture Herald will reveal also a magnificent array of new productions destined for theatres throughout the world.

Advertising Forms close September 21st.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Ambassador

WILDERNESS MAIL: Kermit Maynard, Fred Kohler—Pretty good Northern picture. Running time, 57 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

First National

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—I do not know how to report this picture. A stark, realistic story of life in a coal mining district with the tragedy of a strike. Paul Muni gives a wonderful performance but the picture did not please. It is too depressing. The only favorable criticism was from a teacher of expression who says Paul Muni is, in her opinion, the best movie star of today. A good production that will not click in the small town. Running time, 97 minutes. Played August 21-22.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—A fast moving action picture with a timely story that will please any audience. Good cast and good acting. Robert Armstrong is especially good. Pleased my patrons. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 14-15.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Another outstanding picture. 100 per cent entertainment value. Played August 29-30.—Frank A. Finger, New Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

Fox

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—People liked it but business very poor on this picture. Second night was our record low crowd.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Rochelle Hudson—Her best and finest presentation, far surpassing any of her previous performances. She drew them in from all walks of life and all ages, ranging from three years to 85. Played to above average business. Running time, eight reels. Played August 22-24.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Very good musical but no drawing card. It seems as if patrons don't care much for musicals anymore. Running time, 83 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—Very good picture that we are forced to play after all Fox West Coast houses used it at any admission price they chose. Failed to make money owing to spot played on. Played August 18.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien—Not as good in story or action as his other pictures. Would rate this about 25 per cent of anything the star has made in two years. Played August 27.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

ORCHIDS TO YOU: John Boles, Jean Muir—A good comedy drama packed with fun and surprises. Played to average business. Running time, eight reels. Played August 16-17.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Don't worry, it might not be her best, but it still is a top picture in the box. Don't pass her up.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Best attendance since "Bright Eyes." Not quite as good as "Bright Eyes," but any Shirley Temple picture will draw the crowd, even if the showing is late. Played August 10.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SILK HAT KID, THE: Lew Ayres, Mae Clarke—One of the finest pictures of its kind. Could be shown any night of the week and would do business. Played to average business. Running time, seven reels. Played August 18-19.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

SILK HAT KID: Lew Ayres, Mae Clarke—Went over good enough on Bank Nights but I would like to see Lew Ayres cast in a real good picture for a change; give him a chance. Would like to see him cast in a snappy college picture. Out of fifty pictures. Fox, can't you give us some college stuff?—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton—Just a weak, silly picture that did not stand up on Bargain Night. Played August 27-28.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter—Good from beginning to end. Probably will be best liked in small towns. Not a big picture, but above the average. Played August 24.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

GB

IRON DUKE, THE: George Arliss—Fifth Arliss picture that flopped. We thought it great, but our patrons stayed away from Arliss. Too bad. Played August 29-30.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

LITTLE FRIEND: Nova Pilbeam—Can this one. About the limit for a poor picture. It is impossible for us to do anything with these British pictures. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 27-29.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

PRINCESS CHARMING: Evelyn Laye—About as poor a picture as I ever screened. Will hurt your theatre if many come to see it. We can't run foreign pictures as their ideas are not for an American audience. Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 16-18.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

MGM

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This picture is not their best. I would advise those who haven't played it to play it Christmas Day. We played it to below average business on a weekend.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald—A very, very good musical. Drew above average business and pleased everyone. Played August 10-11.—Harriett A. Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery—Very good picture but too much idle rich for my people. Acting very good and comedy lines fine but just too much blah. Played August 25.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Lionel Barrymore, Jean Arthur, Chester Morris—Another of the "G Men" type of pictures that is very good. Considerable battle, murder and sudden death, but it has quite a lot of comedy. Lionel Barrymore, as usual, gives an outstanding performance. This one pleased. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 24-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur—The real inside of the Government war on crime. Dramatic dynamite, educational, thrilling and entertaining. Well liked. Played to average business. Running time, nine reels. Played August 20-21.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—Real picture for the kids. They liked it very much, our second night way down, but did above average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda—Terrible. Nothing to it. Trailer killed picture and drove away many who would have come if they had not seen trailer. Played July 20-21.—Harriett A. Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Joel McCrea, Maureen O'Sullivan—A lawyer carries on an across-the-light-well flirtation with a girl. Gangsters wreck a police car. Romance is born and the girl and the lawyer set out to find the real killer. Maureen O'Sullivan, as the woman wanted both by law and its enemies, and Joel McCrea make one of the finest teams seen in many a month. Entertaining, thrilling and well liked. Average business. Played August 11-13.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

Paramount

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Arline Judge, Kent Taylor—A nice program. Running time, 79 minutes. Played August 23-25.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Arline Judge, Kent Taylor—Give me a picture that has a college title or anything pertaining to a college and we will make money on it. This was no exception. For such pictures Elliott Nugent is my favorite director.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

DEVIL IS A WOMAN, THE: Marlene Dietrich—Such a title. Direction disconnected. Dietrich gradually losing ground in these foreign plays. Give her American stories like "The Blonde Venus" and she might come back. Would say to fellow small town theatres, cancel this one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 9-11.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—A swell picture. Patsy Kelly nearly steals the picture. This one is above the ordinary run of features and has plenty of entertainment value. Played August 22-23.—Frank A. Finger, New Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns, Gracie Allen—Gracie is absolutely the dumbest person ever created. Had the audience in an uproar all the time. George Barbier also excellent. The trap drummer had them staying for the second show. Play it up and it will bring you some extra money. Running time, 63 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Paul H. Figg, Lyric Theatre, Bladenboro, N. C. General patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY: William Boyd, Paula Stone—Nothing extra, but is a little different from the general run of horse operas. Will appeal to those who ordinarily would not go for westerns. Bill Boyd very good as big bad good man. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 24.—Paul H. Figg, Lyric Theatre, Bladenboro, N. C. General patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—The kind of a picture that will not please more than about half of the patrons of a small town. Certainly a fine, well produced picture that somehow seems to drag until the closing reels. The lack of feminine characters also keeps the show from going over with the feminine fans. No particular draw.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields—A good program and pleased 90 per cent. Fields a real star and a good card for us. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 30-31-September 1.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields—Fair business on first day. Absolute flop on second. Very silly. Played September 1-2.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott—Better than I expected after some of the rather unfavorable reports I have read. Not a real western but has most of the cowboy flavor and will easily get by in that class.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—Good title, good stars make this a nice program. Running time, 74 minutes. Played July 26-28.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—Good picture. Pleased everyone. It has romance, action, music, girls, comedy, everything. Business above average. Played August 25-26.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—Believe this to be the best picture from this star. A lot of credit should be given to MacMurray. Full of comedy and should get money if Katie is not too far gone in your town. Running time, 80 minutes.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix—Good picture that drew extra business on Sunday-Monday and pleased. Dix always a good bet here in this type picture. Played August 11-12.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix—Drew normal business but several of our customers remarked about the poor marksmanship of the various sharpshooters in the cast. It seemed to take about a thousand shots to kill two or three men. Played August 24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer—Picture just fair. Subject matter not appealing. Foreign accent not liked. Why a sensible producer will use foreign accent as a lead in a picture is beyond me. We want understandable, plain old American talk. Boyer may go big in some places but he will be a drag here. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 2-4.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

CHASING YESTERDAY: Anne Shirley—Title kills this picture to start with and does Anne Shirley no good. Very poor entertainment. Subject matter bad. Looks like the same party that titled "Village Tale" showed his hand in this title. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 6-8.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

DOG OF FLANDERS: Frankie Thomas—Star means nothing. Kids of this size should not be in the lead of a picture and dog stuff is all shot. Just another flop for us. May appeal to a few kids and that's all. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 13-15.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

DOG OF FLANDERS: Frankie Thomas, Helen Parrish—Fine picture for any small town. Certainly does not have to be double featured. Had many fine comments on this.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Fair enough programmer but in a pinch we played on Sunday; not quite suitable or big enough for such a date.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Fair picture. Never had a Wheeler-Woolsey picture ever get us excited yet.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart, Virginia Weidler—Excellent production and liked by everyone. Little Virginia Weidler did some excellent work. All cast was good. A family picture one hundred per cent. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—This seemed to go over on Bargain Night but to me was the poorest thing to come from RKO this year. However, if the fans are satisfied, the exhibitor's opinion is of no account.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is sure the correct title for the show. This drew very well and everyone seemed to enjoy it. Wheeler and Woolsey always make money for us. Running time, 78 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—A fair program of the slapstick variety. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 19-21.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Did a good Saturday business and pleased all who saw it. These boys are now making comedies. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 17.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—From reports of the patrons, this is the best of the efforts of these two comedians. Did not see it myself, but what pleases the ones who bring in the money pleases me. I still hear reports about the dice game at the cigar counter. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 19-20.—Paul H. Figg, Lyric Theatre, Bladenboro, N. C. General patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne—So few reports in the last two or three numbers of Motion Picture Herald that I though I'd better get busy. This "Roberta" is great entertainment, far ahead of "The Gay Divorcee." Randolph Scott, the cowboy hero of millions, plays the part of Ladies' Dressmaker to perfection. Scott has the most lines in the picture and should have had equal billing with Rogers and Freddie.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Ginger Rogers, Francis Lederer—We deem this very clever, but were disappointed in the attendance. Played August 21-22.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Close this as a good picture. Good story, well directed. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 12-14.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

VILLAGE TALE: Randolph Scott—Picture not so bad, but title means nothing. A title is a big asset to a picture. Don't see how an experienced producer would select a title that means so little. Might get by on a double program with a good strong western subject. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 23-25.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Edward Arnold, Karen Morley—Not a bad picture. Personally thought it good, but did not draw. Did the poorest business of the year. Played as a double feature with "Champagne for Breakfast" but could not get them in. Played August 17-18.—Harriett A. Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

United Artists

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Sothern, Merle Oberon—Never grossed film rental and failed to please. Believe these foreign stars are through in this country. Played August 7.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

Universal

BORDER BRIGANDS: Buck Jones—Only fair Northern picture. It seems as if Buck Jones is slipping. His pictures don't draw well anymore for us Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BORDER BRIGANDS: Buck Jones—Drew average Saturday night attendance and seemed to please. We still believe the westerns should have more comedy. Played August 17.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert—One of the finest pictures of the year and easily Universal's best for 1935. Highly praised by the older people. A few "near" morons said they didn't care for it. Played this right after the county fair and probably for that reason didn't draw as much as it should have.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Lyle Talbot, Heather Angel, Gertrude Michael—Our people were well pleased with this clean offering. For some reason, unknown, business was off about twenty-five per cent. Played August 31.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones—Just an average western that pleased the young people, and a few of the older ones. Played August 17.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones—Better than "Rocky Rhodes" and "Crimson Trail" but too bad Universal is killing Jones with poor story material.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

DINKY: Jackie Cooper, Mary Astor—Just one of those little pictures that everyone liked. Played August 31.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

DON'T BET ON BLONDES: Warren William, Claire Dodd—If your customers don't like Warren William and his slurring brogue you had better steer clear of this one. Not so hot. Played August 28.—Paul H. Figg, Lyric Theatre, Bladenboro, N. C. General patronage.

DON'T BET ON BLONDES: Warren William, Claire Dodd—Don't bet on this one to pay off the mortgage. Pass it up if you can. No cast! No story! No patrons! Played August 17-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts—Got by on one day Saturday run. Played August 24.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts—A very funny picture. Great comedy. Story funny and actors best in their line, and made by the company that knows how to make comedies that are entertaining and clean. They don't make them any better than this.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Inc., Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

State Right

COME ON, TARZAN: Ken Maynard—A pretty good western. Better than most and drew better than "Border Brigands." Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Short Features

Educational

NIFTY NURSES: Musical Comedies—Very good comedy with plenty of laughs. —Harriett A. Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PALOOKA FROM PADUCAH: Buster Keaton—Good slapstick comedy.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

PAUL TERRY-TOONS SERIES: All these cartoons seem to lack the punch or a certain something that many others have.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

FIXER-UPPERS: Laurel & Hardy—The usual Laurel and Hardy comedy that always pleases my patrons. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MENU: Oddities—Very interesting picture. Ladies liked it, and it had new idea for the cooks.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MIDSUMMER MUSH: Charley Chase—Real good comedy. Charley Chase always pleases.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE ME: Happy Harmonies Series—Another colored cartoon that some said was the best one yet. I think the adults enjoy these cartoons as much as the kiddies. They are all good. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RASSLIN' ROUND: Willie Whopper—These cartoons are awful.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

DIZZY DIVERS: Popeye the Sailor—Paramount has good shorts. This one extra good.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

FEMININE RHYTHM: Ina Ray Hutton and Her Melodears—Good musical short.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

KIDS IN THE SHOE, THE: Color Classics—Excellent. Good music and color.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

United Artists

WISE LITTLE HEN, THE: Silly Symphonies—Very good cartoon that drew no extra business. Silly Symphonies are very artistic and beautiful but with not enough drawing power for us to pay difference between them and other comedies. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

DO A GOOD DEED: Oswald Cartoons—Very clever cartoon comedy. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner-Vitaphone

BUDDY OF THE LEGION: Looney Tunes—Average cartoon.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

HEAR YE! HEAR YE! Vera Van and the Yacht Club Boys—Boys, throw this one in the can. How they can call this a short is more than I can see. Customers wanted to know when that agony would be over.—Paul H. Figg, Lyric Theatre, Bladenboro, N. C. General patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE: Pepper Pot—Extra good one-reeler. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MORMON TRAIL, THE: See America First Series, E. M. Newman—A very interesting number of this always interesting series. Views of Salt Lake City are very good. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SO YOU WON'T T-T-T-TALK: Roscoe Ates—Fair two-reel comedy. Several laughs.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN HOLLAND: Dorothy Dare, Felix Knight—An excellent musical in technicolor. First reel is a little slow but the second reel is great. Dorothy Dare and Felix Knight are very good and the dance numbers clever. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VAUDEVILLE REEL NO. 4: Pepper Pot Series—These vaudeville reels are all good. They add a pleasing bit of novelty to any program. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

MYSTERY MOUNTAIN: Ken Maynard, Verna Hillie—Have run two episodes of this serial and it seems to be off to a good start. Maynard is much better than the average serial star and Tarzan is a whole show by himself. Running time, 2 reels each.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

CALL OF THE SAVAGE: Noah Beery, Jr.—A little too noisy but since they have dressed the leading lady in a leopard skin it is going over better.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

Radio Is Not Helping Musicians, Says Mills

"America, thanks to the radio, is becoming a nation of listeners to music who do nothing about music themselves," Edwin C. Mills, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, said recently while in New Orleans on his tour of inspection to the various attorneys for the organization. "Better a hundred poor musicians playing in a town than one perfect orchestra on the radio," he continued. Mr. Mills also deplored the lack of musicians playing in New Orleans theatres, but managers there took issue with him, pointing to the demands of members of his organization.

Netherlands Theatre Attendance Falls Off

Scattered returns from the first six months of the current year reveal that theatre attendance in the Netherlands has fallen off slightly in comparison with the same period of 1934, Consul General K. S. Patton of Amsterdam said in his latest report to the Department of Commerce. Decline of interest in locally made pictures was called a factor. Consul Patton also said that a recent survey revealed 291 houses newly equipped for sound pictures and several theatres under construction.

Sherman Succeeds Mayer

Ben Sherman is now buying for Belle Theatres, Inc., operating 15 houses on the east side of Manhattan, in place of Elias Mayer, who formerly bought all the film for the circuit but resigned to take over the Majestic in Jersey City. Charles Steiner, who assisted Mr. Mayer, has remained with the circuit, however, in his same capacity.

Film Festival in Brussels

An international motion picture festival with the United States participating will be held in Brussels from September 26 to October 17, under the patronage of the Belgian king, who will offer a prize to the best picture exhibited.

Theatre Construction In China at Standstill

Theatre construction in the Tientsin district of China is at a standstill because of the economic uncertainty of China and because of the marked lack of attendance during the past year or so, Consul John B. Ketcham, Tientsin, said this week in a report to the Department of Commerce. Twenty-three houses wired for sound are now in operation in his district, the consul said; of these, 14 are in Tientsin, seven in Peiping and two in Taiyuanfu, the capital of the Shansi Province.

Although the production of native films in North China never has been important before, two companies have been established in Tientsin with plans to produce Chinese pictures, but no finished product has been turned out as yet, the consul said.

German Film Imports Drop in Switzerland

Popularity of German motion pictures has been declining steadily in Switzerland and exhibitors there have been turning more and more toward America for their films during the current year, it was revealed in a recent report from Consul General A. C. Frost of Zurich to the Department of Commerce. The report also showed that Italian and French film imports into Switzerland were lower than in previous years. The proposed establishment of a national Swiss producing organization, about which much discussion has taken place, now appears scarcely likely, in the opinion of the consul general, because of opposition in too many quarters.

Two Egyptian Shorts

Two short subjects of historical importance have just been completed by an Egyptian producing company under the supervision of Egyptian University, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from acting commercial attache L. A. France of Cairo. One reel shows in detail the unwrapping of a mummy princess who lived about 2000 B.C.; the other pictures excavations and recent discoveries of the university at the Pyramids.

Andy Deitz Distributing

Andy Deitz, formerly with Majestic Pictures, is now distributing independent pictures through his own offices located in St. Louis. He has the Louis-Levinsky fight film and "Idol of Millions," a three-reel biography of Jack Dempsey.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Sioux Falls, S. D.

Dear Herald:

Doggone the doggone luck anyhow, but then outside of that, and a few things we are not responsible for, everything seems to be about as usual except that our family cat has rustled up four kittens from somewhere and brought them home as her addition to the family.

We are occasionally reminded of pleasures which we can only contemplate but seldom experience. This was brought forcibly to our mind by an editorial we have just read in the HERALD setting forth a conversation between the editor of this household companion and a Cree Indian buck as they were seated on a log on the bank of a trout pool near Lake Nipissing, fishing for bullheads probably and imagining that they were catching trout.

From the drift of the conversation between the two we were led to believe that the Indian preferred fishing to laying up a winter's supply of dried berries and fish, and packing away some pemmican for the indolent and improvident relatives of his squaw to live on during a hard winter. The philosophy of that old buck has our unqualified endorsement, but the report doesn't say that the editor expressed any particular pleasure at his philosophy, but we will venture to say that his relatives are not expecting that his pantry will be overburdened with the delicacies of the season for their especial benefit.

We wouldn't mention this only because it calls to our mind the sound reasoning and philosophy of the Cree Indian, and gives us an opportunity to tell the editor and this buck that in fishing for trout they should use periwinkles for bait rather than angleworms. Of course, for bullheads, that's different.

Then again this Indian philosophy calls to mind a gilt-edge edict emanating from the wigwam down on the bank of the Potomac addressed to the council of chiefs and demanding the passage of a measure that will "Soak-the-Rich" as a penalty for laying up beans and sowbelly for the coming winter. As contemplate this mandate we are inclined to grab a can of angleworms and our fishpole and start for Lake Nipissing. Wish we had a few Cree bucks down in Washington.

A Word from the Young

We were sitting in our car on the street, down home the other day, with our two little grandchildren from Powder River, Wyoming. Bennie is 12 years old and Katheryn 10. A young lady came tripping down the street clothed just sufficiently to come within the law and the city ordinance, and Ben spoke up and said, "What's that girl got on?" and Katheryn said, "Nothing," and Ben said, "Oh yes, I know it, but she took that off."

Their grandmother has a Mexican dog named "Dardy," and presently a dog came down the street and Katheryn said, "Say, that pup looks like one of Dardy's," and Ben said "Yeah, but it isn't, but it might be one of Dardy's grandpups."

THREE MORE JOIN REPORTING ARMY

Three exhibitors, from widely scattered areas in the near Northwest, New England and the lower Atlantic seaboard, join the contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me." They are:

O. INGMAR OLESON, Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D.

GEORGE OSBORNE, Opera House, Westminster, Md.

PAUL H. FIGG, Lyric Theatre, Bladenboro, N. C.

Read the reports of these showmen appearing in the department in this issue.

We haven't been in South Dakota long enough to form a very intelligent opinion of conditions, but from what we have observed in this section of the state we are expressing the opinion that corn husking this fall will take a lot of people off the relief rolls unless they are like those down in Nebraska, afraid to get off of relief for fear they can't get back on.

When we get the rich thoroughly "soaked" we will then kill off a few million pigs and plow up several sections of cotton, after which we can all go fishing.

Shelterbelt and Blue Pelicans

We wish they would hurry up and get that "Shelterbelt" built in time for the nesting season. If they don't we are going to be short of blue pelicans. Doggone the doggone luck, anyhow.

The Pathfinder says that a spinster died and left her entire estate of $25,000 to her Spitz dog. It didn't say whether she lived in New York or Brooklyn, but we'll betcha she lived in Hollywood. Out there a poodle comes ahead of everything, except Reno.

When the Government gets well established in the free show business—as we are told it intends to do—you boys who are operating a theatre for a living—as some of you are—will then have something else to keep you awake of nights besides basketball, tent shows, home talent shows, etc., etc., etc., and several other things.

You should remember, however, and be thankful that the Government intends recruiting its talent mainly from the relief rolls of the country, since this would operate to reduce your taxes. We are told that 50,000 persons will be given employment, 17,000 of whom are supposed to be actors, and the balance press agents. We are also told that the cost of this enterprise will be borne chiefly by a levy on your admission tickets, which ought to have the effect of keeping you boys aware that you are in the exhibition business. This savors somewhat of a "Soak-the-rich" policy.

Jerry's Safe Now

The other day we drove down to see Jerry Vehrage, who operates one of Nebraska's prize theatres at St. Edwards. Jerry has been trying to struggle along without the HERALD and was about to throw in the sponge when we called, but he is safe now, and so is St. Edwards.

We have just received a letter from C. M. Lay of Dodge, Nebraska, advising us that he has opened a theatre at that place and asking us to send him the HERALD. It is remarkable what foresight some people have. We have met a great many exhibitors in our wanderings, the most of whom feel the need of all the information they can get, but some are not blessed with the vision of Mr. Lay. We predict that Dodge will not find it necessary to go elsewhere for its amusement.

Rodeos and Rodaos

We wouldn't presume to criticize the pronunciation of a word by an eminent gentleman like Edwin C. Hill, but in a broadcast recently he referred to a rodeo and called it "Ro-dao" with an emphasis on the "dao."

We are accepting his pronunciation as being correct, and we are admitting that our long familiarity with the range and cactus plains and shorthorns and cowpunchers, etc., etc., has led us away from the correct English and inclined us to use the common, and accepted term of Ro-deo, with emphasis on the "Ro." However, since Webster and our friend Edwin seem to agree on the pronunciation of the word we are going to acknowledge our ignorance and beg our eminent friend's pardon for still saying "Ro-deo."

And then there's another thing, as Andy said to Min that time. You exhibitors of late have shown a very prominent trait of indifference (or laziness) in not reporting to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department. It seems to have become a case of "Let George Do It" with most of you, and George has gone on relief. If you are suffering from that tired feeling you should join some one of the alphabetical bureaus. There is nothing that will buoy up one's depressed spirits like that.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

Poor Old Battle-Scarred "Colossal"

In last week's issue of Motion Picture Herald appeared coincidentally two presentations, editorial and advertising, that have to do with the current barrage against poor, old "Colossal," again the object of a sustained artillery attack from various quarters.

The first presentation referred to appears on pages 13 and 14, wherein is detailed the reported success in Fox Midwest Theatres' territories of "The Screen Reporter," which, according to headman Elmer C. Rhoden, aims for a different technique than usual in copy and layout and is pointed to putting the personal touch to motion picture advertising.

"The Screen Reporter" takes the form of one, two and three-column ads of varying depths, tending to the chatter column idea. Included are star cuts, listings of local Fox houses and pictures, intimate bits of information not usually found in theatre display advertising. It is Mr. Rhoden's intention that his managers shall adapt the idea locally and in a number of situations it has already been inaugurated successfully. Reports from various theatremen of the circuit indicate that this form of advertising besides cutting down newspaper expenditures, has attracted more notice than the usual displays. There is evidence of enthusiasm from showmen who in the beginning were inclined to be a bit skittish about the newly proffered ad form.

Says Mr. Rhoden in introducing "The Screen Reporter" to his managers:

"Out of our dissatisfaction with the 'colossal' traditions of motion picture advertising . . . has come an experiment in newspaper advertising which is decidedly original and revolutionary in its application to the theatre. . . ."

A reproduction of a two-column Rhoden ad appears on the following page.

On pages 46 and 47 of last week's issue, there is set down the second presentation referred to—a spread by United Artists for the picture "Red Salute." One page displays a reproduction of what might be termed an ad from the "Colossal" school, based, according to the copy, on the reactions of a preview audience. The other page shows an advertisement that "makes no claims for the picture."

Monroe Greenthal, United Artists' ad head, offers $100 to the exhibitor giving the soundest answer to the question on whether or not a "great production" needs "the support of superlatives in advertising or can it sustain itself at the box office on the basis of merit alone with the aid of simple announcement advertising."

Mr. Rhoden is to be credited with many laudable endeavors in getting his theatres out of the rut of run-of-the-mill exhibition. We recall his launching of a "back-to-Barnum" movement which featured a circuitwide effort to bring back to exhibition a color, an atmosphere of forceful and pungent showmanship allowed in the past decade to become dissipated. The current year's campaign was a complete about-face from the Barnum-impetus because Mr. Rhoden said he felt that his advertising had to be in keeping with the new product.

The Fox Midwest chief has undoubtedly struck upon an effective departure from the conventional advertising display which, while often adequate and more, by its sameness tends to defeat its own ends. That by actual proof it has reduced advertising expenditures without affecting grosses is a mark in favor of the new plan which cannot be discounted. That it is aimed to make advertising conform with the higher standard of pictures is also gratifying.

But that the new ad form will immediately or eventually retire old battle-scarred "Colossal" to green pastures, is a point to be argued, as is whether or not old "Colossal" is really ready for retirement.

It all simmers down to the plain statement of fact Mr. Rhoden is credited with in the article, to wit:

"The real problem lies in its widespread application and this depends almost entirely upon the intelligence, even cleverness of manpower." Which might also be offered as an answer to Mr. Greenthal's query.

The application of "colossal" advertising may readily be likened to the use of dynamite. On certain projects and in skillful hands, the explosive does a most excellent job of work. By the same token, in willing but unknowing fingers, the stuff is just apt to blow the whole outfit plumb to hell.

Mr. Rhoden, it sure do depend upon manpower.

Identify Stars Idea Tops Omaha Contests

The most successful contest ever staged in those parts, says Charley Schlaifer, Tri-States ad head in Omaha, Neb., referring to the newspaper identification contest sold and followed through by Charley on a suggestion of Evert Cummings, district manager.

Actual contest ran 10 days, but got a heap of publicity ahead and after the windup. It was worked as follows: Each day paper ran cut of two different stars, caption mentioning their names and coming pictures. With these also were run two cuts but unidentified of other stars, photos taken years ago. For instance, on first day cut of Shirley Temple at 18 months of age was run with some slight information to aid contestants in the caption underneath. Early photo of Janet Gaynor was given same treatment. Every day thereafter other star cuts were run, of players of course who were slated for appearance in pictures booked for the new season.

Cash prizes of $60 were given and 50 pairs of tickets to the winners. Over 5,000 entries were received with paper running a four-column shot of the entries, picture including Miss Ethel Good, secretary to Evert Cummings, with her arms loaded with some of the answers.

Schlaifer has been hitting the dailies with other smart topical stuff such as seven column break with photos of and quoting different Omaha children on what they would do if they had the muchly publicized $4.25 to spend weekly available to Shirley Temple. Tieins with the local Ripley believe-it-or-not contest and shots of Omaha girls wearing new fur models in fashion show at the Orpheum were other angles.

Manager Bill Miskell aided in the latter, outstanding being promotion of icicle lobby display made of papier mache. Models promenaded atop icebergs to accompaniment of orchestra and show was called "City of Ice—Polar Fur Parade." Store mentioned display prominently in all ads and papers broke stories.

Fifth Avenue area was well covered on tieups with Merle Oberon landing fashion shots in department store windows and their newspaper advertising. Chain stocking stores, book and cigar spots and travel offices also came in with displays.

Tribute to Rogers Arranged by Kunze

Though the campaign was put on for his date on "County Chairman" some time before the death of Will Rogers, Paul Kunze, of the Old Colony and Plymouth Theatres, in Plymouth, Mass., reports a Will Rogers Tribute idea that secured over 2,000 signatures and forwarded to the star in book form landed stories in the Boston papers as well as the local dailies.

To express to Rogers appreciation for the fine standard of his pictures, a local Tribute Committee was formed through the agency of the Plymouth Board of Selectmen, with Kunze appointed chairman. Other members included newspaper editors and similar prominents.

In programs, on screen and in newspapers, announcements were made that signatures would be gathered in the lobbies of both theatres during the run of "County Chairman." Girls in booths secured the signatures of incoming patrons which were taken on the same size stock as was later contained in the bound book.

Similar sheets were distributed at regular meetings of civic and social organizations; police, firemen, members of the clergy and teachers invited to sign, with local paper building up the plan during its execution.

The signatures made up 100 pages bound with leather covers and embossed with gold lettering, front page carrying the message of tribute. Additional pages were devoted to historic points of interest and the book forwarded to the star brought a characteristically Rogers reply.

Paul does not of course recommend the idea for exploitation on the Rogers pictures now being released, but stresses its value as being adaptable to any star whose popularity and importance warrants the effort.

Other Rogers Advertising

Dignity and good judgment mark other ads forwarded on "Steamboat Round the Bend." For instance, on a following page of this section, is reproduced the two-column type ad conceived by George Tyson, at the Harris-Alvin, Pittsburgh, topped by a head of the star from the picture and the line in old-English, "Long Live the King," copy tying in that he was a king among men.

A. Milo De Haven, for the opening of the picture at the State, Greenville, Ohio, ran a page ad headed—"No American Would Think of Missing It," illustrated by two cuts of Rogers, one straight and the other in character.

Jack Arthur's newspaper copy at the Imperial, Toronto, Can., labeled it "more than just a laugh picture," and W. C. Ormond, of the Princess, Ayden, N. C., topped his weekly mimeographed bulletin with a memorial tribute to both Rogers and Wiley Post.

At the Paramount, Lynchburg, Va., Frank Boucher, figured the advent of "Steamboat Round the Bend" enough of a civic happening to rate a splash. Therefore, the Dominion Theatres executive arranged to have the front page of local paper imprinted in red.

Harry Brown, Bob Sternberg's district M and P ad chief promoted one his dailies to run the life story of Rogers, each instalment finishing with note of the current "Steamboat" date at the Paramount and Fenway Theatres in Boston.

AUGUST JUDGES VOTE HOLDEN AND SHANNON

Atlanta Manager Takes Quigley August Silver; Pittsburgher Repeats June Bronze Winning

by A-MIKE VOGEL

The State of Georgia, and the Lucas and Jenkins circuit for the first time in the history of the Competitions take the Award spotlight with the announcement of the decisions reached by a majority vote of the August judges, John D. Clark, Fox Films; E. A. Alperson, National Theatres, and Monroe Greenthal, United Artists' ad head.

Earl M. Holden, manager, Capitol Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., wins the August Silver on RKO Radio's "A Dog of Flanders." Chuck Shannon, manager, Hollywood Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., is awarded the August Bronze on Fox's "Doubting Thomas."

Holden thus goes on record as being the first Georgian to click for a plaque and is another theatreman to be considered for the free air trips to Hollywood where the presentations are to be held for the 1935 Grand Awards.

Shannon makes the enviable record of being the first manager to repeat for an Award plaque within a two month period, having first hit for the same recognition in June of this year.

First Mentions are voted to two entrants, Fuzzy Knight, manager, Warner's Fairmont, Fairmont, W. Va., on Warner Brothers' "Irish In Us," and Seymour L. Morris, manager, Schine's Colonia, Norwich, N. Y., on Fox's "Farmer Takes a Wife."

Knight, as readers are aware, has been a lusty smiter in the Competitions, having already taken down two Silver plaques and has been otherwise prominently mentioned. Morris has also been listed in the winning columns.

Newcomers Win Honorables

Thirteen entries in August are ticketed with Honorable Mentions, these certificates going to 14 theatremen, the extra including Milt Harris, Cleveland Loew's State publicity chief who shared honors with Ed Steinbuch. Some of the entrants have generously included names of their assistants.

Included among the Honorables are five newcomers to the Quigley winning lists, Joe Floyd, of Sioux Falls, S. D.; L. O. Daniel, of Houston, Texas; Rus Hardwick, of Clovis, New Mexico; H. H. Harman, St. Louis; and Lloyd A. Hellman, of Newport, Vt. Full listing will be found in column to right with those who have clicked in previous months.

Engraved sheepskin certificates go forward to all the First and Honorable Mention winners.

Four months remain to get in on those Quigley Award free air trips to Hollywood. More on this in next week's issue.

In the meantime there are three big weeks to the September deadline, time enough to put over that campaign and send it in.

First Mention

R. E. "Fuzzy" Knight, Manager, Warner's Fairmont, Fairmont, W. Va. "Irish In Us"

Seymour L. Morris, Manager, Schine's Colonia, Norwich, N. Y. "Farmer Takes a Wife"

Tie New York Daily To "Top Hat" Drive

Fred Astaire being in New York for the debut of "Top Hat," the Radio City Music Hall crew promoted the star to present a special silver trophy named after him to the winning couple at the finals held in Madison Square Garden of the Daily News dancing contest played up by the sheet for weeks ahead. Shots of Astaire with the final prizes were run ahead and after there were other shots of star making presentation to the winners, run on opening day of the film. Winners attended the picture as his guests.

Paper further extended cooperation with editorial lauding the production and followed that with two-page roto spread of Astaire and Rogers doing their new dance smash in the picture, "The Piccolino."

Steinbuch-Harris Auto Service for Patrons

For "Public Hero," Ev Steinbuch, manager, and Milt Harris, publicist, Loew's State, Cleveland, effected a tieup with local auto dealer whereby those desiring free transportation from their homes to theatre, called up dealer and were picked up and delivered in state, to the State. Car equipped with loud speaker and radio carrying sign about the free "ride" toured streets prior to opening.

Police cooperation brought the posting of ransom serial numbers on prominent street corners, attractive front was built (see photo) and by special arrangement with telephone company, operator called private homes and advised them to watch for missing ransom money, report to State and receive money reward.

Skeleton Announces Trailer Of "Mad Love" for Nowitsky

Capitalizing on the voice at the opening of "Mad Love" that warns audience of horrors about to be witnessed in the film, Al Nowitsky, Colonial Theatre, Richmond, Va., acquired a skeleton from the local medical college, which he seated in a large throne chair at side of screen, spotted with green light, thus giving effect of the skeleton warning the folks.

Al, with his ready sensahumor, had special cards made up for prominent barber shops in city, playing up Lorre's bald head and the fact that occasional visits to the barber would aid in saving hair. For bally, man dressed as ghost with grotesque mask paraded streets and girl pulled fake faint in theatre during performance while ambulance with motor cycle police escort carried her away. Ushers handed out bottled nerve sedative with tagged copy advising its use during or after performance.

FIRE AND EMERGENCY DRILL

Duties of Every Member of His Theatre Staff Are Reviewed in Detail by Cleveland Round Tabler

by JULIUS LAMM

Manager, Uptown, Cleveland, Ohio

At a recent meeting of the house personnel devoted to fire and emergency drill, one important detail was stressed and all ushers warned, under penalty of instant dismissal, never to mention the words "I smell smoke," "fire," etc., within the hearing of the audience. A new usher may casually mention "I smell smoke," and immediately it will be transmitted throughout the whole auditorium. In such cases uneasiness among the audience is discernible.

Every usher was instructed how to handle the fire extinguisher and hose, and all were shown the locations of each and everyone in the auditorium. A list of the locations were made up and one posted in the ushers' room and one kept in the manager's office.

It was further explained that this drill is divided into three sections, Local Emergency, Emergency No. 1, Emergency No. 2.

Local Emergency

A Local Emergency is handled by the usher in the section where the local emergency occurs (for instance, an epileptic has an attack). The usher is instructed how to reach him, the best way of carrying him from the seat (which is a locked-grip under the arms, allowing his feet to drag). In the case of a woman fainting or in a fit he is required to obtain assistance, as it is necessary to carry her; dragging a woman along the floor, not being the proper thing.

In handling maniacs, fighting drunkards, degenerates, morons, and disturbers of this class the usher is instructed to obtain assistance under the instructions from the manager, who may find it necessary to call police assistance. If these cases are not properly handled the excitement caused may spread throughout the house.

Emergency No. 1

This is used in cases where the audience has been thrown into an uneasy state or panicky condition through various causes such as smoke being drawn into the house by fans, a woman's scream caused by a local emergency, the cry of "Fire," etc.

In cases of this kind the ushers enter their aisles starting from the rear, speaking very firmly and calmly and in a moderate tone so it may be heard only six seats in from the aisle and two rows down, using the following words: "Keep your seats, please; there is no danger. The performance will go on as usual."

Managers should be very careful in cases of smoke or fire in their immediate vicinity that suction fans, which will draw in smoke, should be immediately shut down. Sometimes the fans will pull in a large amount of smoke before the manager realizes that there is a fire or smoke near the theatre. In this case, in addition to the ushers' instructions, it may be well for the manager to make a calm explanation from the stage, telling the audience of the cause and that there is no danger.

This is only in cases where the audience is in actual danger and has not started making a general exodus. Ushers and doorman, in this case, upon receipt of the alarm immediately open all means of exit as quietly and calmly as possible, and then proceed to exit the audience as quietly and calmly as possible. Upon opening all exit doors near their posts, the ushers return to their posts or sections starting from the rear of the section and working towards the front of the auditorium, using the following words: "Make your exit, please, and walk slowly."

This should be spoken very slowly and calmly in a moderate tone of voice so it may be heard only six seats in from the aisle and two rows at a time. Ushers outside of aisles will attempt to stop any signs of confusion and direct the patrons to the nearest exits. Should it be a case where patrons have been aroused and already started to make their exit, ushers will attempt to make them walk slowly and avoid a panic, by giving special attention to people who have lost their self-control.

After the house has been cleared, ushers will make a complete patrol of the house to make sure that everyone is out, as in many cases of a general exodus some of the patrons have been found to remain crumpled up in an aisle, having fainted. The ushers will then continue under the direction of the manager.

Roy Builds New Front For "Frankenstein"

A special front was created by Andy Roy at the Strand in Albany for "Bride of Frankenstein" for which he used two 24 sheet cutout heads of Karloff with eyes flashing atop marquee (see photo). Operating table with dummy was rolled through main streets and city parks. Special letters were mailed to doctors and medical students and cards "beware he's on the loose" were distributed.

FRANK BRYAN hails from High Point, N. C., where he manages the Carolina Theatre. Frank started in showbusiness at Warners' Broadway in Charlotte, leaving there to go to Washington for Fox. He has been with his present employer, L. C. Sipe, for the past two years, having started as doorman and working his way up to his present managerial position.

W. LEVY is no stranger to our pages, having already published many accounts of this member's activities as director and manager of the Cameo Cinema in Durban, South Africa. We don't have to tell him to be sure to keep us informed, because he started his membership off by sending along an account of his recent activities and has been very good in writing us frequently.

TED MINSKY is the assistant manager of the Grange Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa. Well, Ted, you've doubtless been reading our pages often enough to know how active the boys around your territory are, so you're one more to join from there that we can depend on to keep us informed of what's going on down your way.

MAURICE REMER manages the Alan Theatre in Toledo, Ohio. How about a little lively competition in our pages between you and Wally Caldwell at the Valentine, Maurie? He's a pretty active member and good friend of ours and here's hoping this will start you off in the same direction. Are you with us?

WILLIAM C. GREGG up in Dover-Foxcroft, Maine, manages the New Star Theatre. Bill acted as stage manager of the Harvard Dramatic Club and, as he humorously puts it, was attacked by the showbusiness germ and spent a summer acting as part of the stage crew of a barnstorming company at Tamworth, N. H. Just got a letter from Bill and he tells us he's coming into New York to pay us a visit. We're looking forward to meeting you and wish more of our members to come in.

R. A. FITZSIMONS manages the Simons Theatre in Las Animas, Colo., the first member to join from that sector, and so a lot of responsibility rests on Fitz's shoulders. It's up to him to let the rest of the membership know how they put their shows on in Las Animas. We're waiting to hear from you, don't forget that.

KENNETH MEAD is the assistant manager of the Main Theatre in Pueblo, Colo., aiding W. B. Shuttee, an ace showman if ever there was one. Ken served a three-year apprenticeship in a sign shop and then started as theatre artist. Since working at the Main Ken adds that he has become extremely interested in publicity and exploitation and from what we can gather there's plenty of it being put over at that house.

AL SCHWARTZ is the managing director of the Fountain Square, Granada, and Sanders Theatres in Indianapolis, Ind. Al started off his membership properly, by sending along his contribution with the application blank. Thanks for the nice things you say about the paper, and may you continue to benefit by the items contained therein.

BEN PESKAY a brother of "Hi," is out in Los Angeles, Cal., operating the Banner, Daly and Norwalk Theatres. His publicity manager, Jack Kleinman, at the Banner Theatre, joins at the same time and between them we certainly ought to hear things from that fair city. You're learning the business under the direction of an able showman, Jack.

JEROME GORDON is the owner-manager of the New Lyric Theatre in Hampton, Va. Jerry started at the Palace, Newport News, as usher, then doorman and assistant, and resigned that job for his present assignment. Gordon left showbusiness for a brief period to work for a theatre decorating company, but the lure of operating a house recalled him and he says he intends to stick at it for a year.

HAL J. GILBERT is no stranger to our pages, having contributed numerous times from Bluefield, West Va., where he manages the Granada Theatre. Hal has sent along some interesting accounts of his activities there and here's hoping this little formal welcome will remind him that it's time we heard from him again. Right, Hal?

NAT GOLDBERG at Worcester, Mass., is managing the Family Theatre, at which spot he started as a member of the orchestra. Nat has been in various houses in Boston, having been connected formerly with Gordon Bros., Publix, Fox and now with E. M. Loew's. The Family is the first house Nat has managed and we are sure if he takes advantage of the many stunts publicized in our pages he won't go wrong.

A. C. HARTSHORN is the assistant manager of the Tivoli Theatre in Toronto, Canada, where he aids and abets Dan Krendel. It was our pleasure to meet Hartshorn when he was vacationing here in New York and it's small wonder with that team at the Tivoli that things go along smoothly. Let's hear from you, Hartshorn, and remember us to Dan.

JACK FIELDS managing the Embassy in Baltimore, Md., started at the Aladdin Theatre in 1918 as rewind boy, then usher and assistant and later manager. In 1925 Jack left to sell film for Universal and Tiffany Stahl for five years and went back to theatre managing at the Rivoli. Jack's brother Joe owns the Rivoli and Embassy Theatres, both of which houses our new member has managed.

B. E. PERDUE is the owner-manager of the Queen Theatre in Aspermont, Texas, and he started as an usher at the age of fourteen, soon went to the booth, where he spent five years as operator, later assumed assistant's job and when Perdue was nineteen he was managing his first theatre. The last five years were spent managing several houses he had leased in Texas and in 1935 bought his own equipment and building at his present location.

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HERE AND THERE

SOME SMART LOBBY DISPLAYS AND OTHER EFFECTIVE SLANTS

(Above) 'Taint so, says Manager Russ Bovim, of Loew's Ohio, Columbus, in denying regretfully that Joan Crawford and Bob Montgomery were in town as the shot above seems to suggest. The stars, although they certainly seem life-like, are clever cutouts used by Russ about town to bally "No More Ladies." Local daily ran shot of the "stars" with Russ saying hello.

Atmospheric "Cleopatra" Front In Milan

(Right) RAY SIMMONDS, of the London Fox publicity office is credited with this very smart window at Selfridge's on "Bright Eyes" at the Regal Theatre. Blowup of scene still in screen setting and simulated film with regular size stills as frames made for an out of the ordinary display.

(Right) CHEN HUA TAO, manager of the Orion Theatre, Amoy, China, engaged a 30-piece brass band to parade the main streets on "One Night of Love." The title translated into four Chinese characters was sold via the one-sheet boards carried by four men in the procession.

(Right) BILL LYONS, Australian United Artists' publicity director, secured this well-executed window for the date on "Funny Little Bunnies" at the Regent, in Adelaide. Various Silly Symphony characters were added in the tieup to plug the sale of Easter eggs.

(Right) J. C. CARRICO, manager of the Cine Popular, Juiz de Fora, Brazil, designed this fortress-on-wheels for a bally on "Bengal Lancer." In addition to adopting American exploitation methods, it is to be noted that Senor Carrico also used an American-made car to put over his stunt.

Ben Friedman Feted On Silver Anniversary

Managers and executives of the Randforce circuit together with other well-wishers gathered at the Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., at midnight Sept. 7 to honor Ben Friedman, Marboro manager, on the completion of his twenty-fifth year in show business. The occasion was in the nature of a surprise and from all accounts, Ben was properly thrilled to the gratification of his brother managers.

Friedman in his theatre career has served with Loew, Small Strausberg and Schine Theatres before making his present connection with the Randforce circuit with which he has been for the last eighteen years.

Movie Club Display At Steel Pier

E. M. Orowitz, old-time Paramounteer and pioneer Hollywood chatter broacaster, has arranged a sizable display at the Steel Pier in Atlantic City for his "Emo Movie Club," listing stations using this program.

Interest builder to listeners-in to this hour on various stations is series of 8 by 10 star photos which angle also is plugged in newspaper ads by accounts sponsoring broadcast.

Boy Scouts Parade For Noble on "Call of Wild"

The highlight of Ralph Noble's "Call of the Wild" campaign at the Pulaski Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., was tieup with Boy Scouts which resulted in street parade and special matinee showing. Two boys dressed as Gable and Oakie and girl as Young with a huge St. Bernard dog pulling a 10-foot bannered sled led the parade.

Hotel operators called guests announcing picture opening and large department store displayed portable sound projector in one of their windows and played "Call of the Wild" trailer continuously. Front of theatre was built with log slabs covered with bark and box-office was converted into trading post.

Five and Ten Cooperates With McDowell on "Nitwits"

Col. Walter McDowell, Palace Theatre, Jamestown, N. Y., secured cooperation of five and ten for his "Nit Wits" date. Special luncheons and sundaes bearing picture title were featured and window was devoted to display of peanuts with prizes offered to those coming closest to guessing correct number. In order to make their guess they had to enter store and place their "guesses" in ballot box placed in back of store.

Paper Ties in With Pollock On "Public Hero" Contests

Tying in with classified section of newspaper, Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., put on a slogan contest in which entrants were asked to clip any five ads and write a slogan for that particular product. Winners were awarded tickets to see "Public Hero."

Another contest was the cartoon clues run in daily, tickets offered for best cartoons submitted in which facial outlines spelled some star's name.

BECKY SHARP
See the Private life of history's most glamorous Adventuress!

One of the most colorful lobby setpieces seen hereabouts was used some weeks back at the RKO Keith Memorial, in Boston, in advance of "Becky Sharp." Jack Goldstein, former ad chief, and now exploitation head of United Artists, forwarded photo illustrated above and following description, before pushing off to his new duties.

The background of this display is covered with black duvetyne as is the base. The letters are the same as those used on a previous Hepburn display backed with flame colored rayon taffeta. The large palette is cut out of wall board and treated with Texton to simulate paint smears. This was painted in different colors and shellacked. The brushes were cut out of lumber and cut to shape and painted in natural colors.

The head of Miriam Hopkins was done in oils in natural colors. The reel of film was made by using stills to simulate the frames in film. These were tinted in increasing degrees of strength of color up to the point where the film disappears behind the palette and on the far side emerging from the palette the stills are in full color.

This display may also be broken up into sections and so stored or reassembled into a new design. In photographing it, the photographer failed to use pancromatic film or a color filter, consequently some of the full values of the display are not shown in their true value. Cyl-Champlain, artist, created the display.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 282—(A) Suppose in an equipment using "A" or "B" eliminators, either one of them fail during a show, what emergency could be taken that would keep the show running? (B) Why is it important that ground connections on all equipments in the projection room be carefully made, the ground wire being connected to a cold water pipe?

Answer to Question No. 276

Bluebook School Question No. 276 was: (A) Suppose during the operation of sound equipment, a motor-boating noise suddenly developed. Where would you first look for its cause, and what remedy would you apply? (B) Suppose during a changeover, the switch controlling a fader relay is depressed and no sound is obtained from the incoming projector. Where would you first look for the trouble? What usually can be done in such an emergency to keep the show running?

The engineers who prepared this question answer:

"(A) This fault most likely would be due to lateral shifting of the position of the film, so that the frame lines or sprocket holes would be modulating the sound. The remedy, of course, would be to set the guide rollers properly.

"(B) Such a condition would probably be due to some defect in the circuit controlling the energizing coils of the relay. If the trouble cannot be immediately located and remedied, sound may be obtained by manual operation of the relay, which of course would be the logical procedure. When the day's performance was over, the source of the trouble could be located, and whatever was wrong made right."

The following made good on Question No. 276: C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; D. Danielson; C. Oldham; T. Van Vaulkenburg; R. J. Arntson; H. Edwards; B. DeVietti; P. and L. Felt; D. N. Alsbrook; J. Wentworth; O. Allbright; F. H. S. and P. Dalbey; M. and J. DeVoy; D. U. Granger; H. R. Baldwin; N. L. Haynes and A. Richardson; D. Howard and J. Hurst; M. Walker and B. R. Walker; R. and K. Wells; P. Itt; F. L. Savlor and G. N. Guidetti; P. F. Michaelson; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; B. and S. True; M. F. Fallon; B. R. Mills and N. Prane; L. Grant and R. Geddings; G. R. Squires; J. Hendershot; K. Y. Spencer, B. H. Sanders, J. Gensen and D. L. Lode; Nic Granby; M. Spencer and D. Arlen; F. H. Klar, L. Klar and T. H. Morton; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; M. Henderson and K. L. Knight; D. H. and L. B. Palmer; S. Spooner and B. H. Thaller; D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant; L. A. Dodson and F. L. Benton; T. T. Golley; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; G. Lathrope; B. L. Donald and F. Y. Gradley; L. M. Richards; A. L. Bannitt; B. Samuels and G. J. Donlas; G. Howard and T. K. Aldridge; L. R. O'Leary; M. and S. T. Gibson.

Danielson says, "I would look first for a possible maladjustment of the guide rollers or some obstruction causing misalignment of the film, or some fault in the film itself. The remedy is in each case apparent—namely, readjust the guide rollers, remove the obstruction. There is of course no remedy for faults in the film itself—and they do occur! The fault can also be caused by maladjustment of the exciter lamp [I can't quite see that.—F. H. R.], a short in the amplifier, or a by-pass condenser. Another possible cause is an open input, in which case no other sound will be heard. Defective or dirty contacts also can set up such a trouble."

R. J. Arntson says, "I would immediately inspect the film gate to see if the film was riding in perfect alignment. I would press inward on the guides to ascertain whether or not that would remove or decrease the trouble. If all were as should be there, its cause might be unbalanced amplifier tubes, or frame lines abnormally extended into the sound tracks. That has occurred. Also, I have myself had motor-boating caused by unbalanced amplifier tubes."

From all of which I think we may agree that out-of-alignment of the film itself is, as the engineers say, the first thing to look for when motorboating occurs, though naming the other possible seats of such trouble is good.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

(B) Danielson says, "Faulty fader switch contacts, faulty relay, faulty relay and fader contacts, open circuit. [Mean intermittently open, don't you?—F. H. R.]. A quick remedy is to short past the faulty contacts. Or the relay may be manually operated until a hurried inspection discloses the seat of trouble, which nine times out of ten will be next to a soldered switch or relay contact. The trouble may of course be due to bent switch springs failing to make contact."

We may assume projectionists' answers to such questions to be based to a considerable extent upon the equipments they are handling, or have handled. This should be taken into consideration and does not at all condemn an answer that might not "fit" for some other equipment.

To Section B J. Wyman answers thus: "The most common cause for such a happening is a burned-out exciter lamp. If the exciter is o. k. in every way, the next step is to examine the sound gate aperture and make sure the light beam is not obstructed. If a quick inspection shows the optical end of things to be all right, inspect the relay points of the incoming projector. They may be open by a few thousandths of an inch, due to either decreased spring tension, or dirty points, which latter may open the circuit. If so, they may be quickly cleaned by passing an ordinary visiting card or its equivalent between them; or No. 00 sandpaper may be used, but only very carefully.

"I assume both projectors operate through one amplifier. If it be a double channel system (two amplifiers, one for each projector) and the incoming amplifier is defective, the projectionist may switch to the other amplifier by means of jacks or cords usually provided for use in such emergencies. In this last I assume the incoming system to have been found to be o.k. in the things already named.

"In locating sound trouble, the projectionist must be methodical, starting with the exciter lamp and following through to the amplifier. It is not well to make changes or do things without definite reasons. If one twists knobs, snips wires, pulls out tubes, changes adjustments or does other thing without very definite reason, then it is not only possible, but quite likely a very simple fault may be magnified into an all-night job. If you don't know what the matter is, and feel unable to make intelligent search for it, let things alone, call a service man, make proper announcement to the audience and run on one projector until the trouble is located and remedied by the service engineer."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

Mickey's Birthday Plans Go Merrily Forward

In addition to the Loew Theatre circuit and leading independent circuits, many theatres in the RKO circuit also will celebrate the seventh birthday of Mickey Mouse by featuring a group of Walt Disney cartoons for several days starting September 28th.

Definite plans have been completed whereby all RKO houses featuring a Mickey Mouse revue will usher in the celebration with extra publicity and exploitation.

Europe will follow America's lead by running all-Disney programs and special Mickey Mouse matinees the week of September 28 at leading theatres in leading cities. Several magazines and newspapers in England have made arrangements to run special pages and colored supplements.

United Artists, distributors of the Disney product, and King Features, have completed arrangements whereby 114 newspapers in this country and 9 in Canada will celebrate the birthday by devoting a special comic strip exclusively to Mickey Mouse and other Disney characters on September 28th.

Stop Selling America Short, Says H. M. Warner

After spending three months in Hollywood, during which time he authorized and inaugurated an extensive expansion building program at the Warner Brothers Burbank studios, Harry M. Warner, president of the company, before leaving for New York, expressed the hope that business leaders would launch immediately whatever building and expansion plans they may have.

"Now is the time to go forward, to abandon the marking-time policy and advance toward prosperity," Mr. Warner said. "Heads of industry, by proper expansion, can provide employment to many now on relief rolls who would much prefer to earn their livelihood rather than subsist on doles. To the nation's business leaders, I say, 'Let's stop selling America short.'"

Eddie Dowling Forms Producing Company

The Eddie Dowling Producing Corporation has been incorporated at Wilmington, Del., to carry on the business of theatrical proprietors, producers, etc., listing a capital of $100,000 and 1,000 shares of non par value stock. The incorporators were C. S. Peabbles, Walter Lenz and W. T. Hobson of Wilmington.

CHANCE GAMES 'WAR' LOOMS IN CALIFORNIA

Fox West Coast Threatens to Retaliate on "Unprecedented Scale" Against Independents

"Chance game" cash giveaways as a problem of theatre practice threaten to bring a competitive war to southern California. The games are growing to such an extent that in Chicago they are now awarded seven nights a week in one form or another, they are spreading on the southern Atlantic seaboard, New England and New York, and continue in many sectors to be the subject of court controversy.

Disturbed over the widespread adoption in southern California, where 65 per cent of all independents are awarding cash through chance games, Fox West Coast, dominant circuit, has issued an ultimatum that further spread of the practice will compel the management to compete with the independents in a like manner, but "on an unprecedented scale." The Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California, apparently disturbed over Fox's threat, is warning its membership to be cautious, suggesting that if the use of the games "could be modified to an extent that they would not cause Fox West Coast to start them on a large scale, it would naturally benefit the independent owners."

A "kick-back" was felt this week in Willimantic, Conn., by the owners of the Willimantic theatre, who were sued for $350 by a patron who said that she had not received the sum she asks for in a superior court suit, even though, it was alleged, she held the "lucky number."

The idea was spreading on a wholesale scale to Florida, where Guy F. Kenimer, distributor of "Screeno" in that state, closed with the Sparks Circuit of 64 houses for rights to the game.

And in Chicago—a hotbed of chance games—the idea was spreading even further. Several local exhibitors now are using one game or another every night in the week.

Des Moines theatres, however, were dropping the games, following a ruling by the state attorney general, pending an injunction suit in district court at Des Moines, brought by the state against A. H. Blank's Tri-State Theatres.

"Bank Night" crept into Maine exhibition practices with adoption of the system by Mullin and Pinanski-Publix at the State theatre at Portland.

Meanwhile, certification of copyright from Washington is holding up the decision of federal court at Boston on the infringement suit brought by the "Bank Night" copyright owners against the sponsors of "Gold Mine."

On the other hand, Judge Christopher E. Stein, of records court, at Detroit, dismissed a complaint against Jacob Schreiber's Colonial theatre, ruling that the practice is not a lottery, as no charge is made for the chance to win.

Bank Night is a lottery under Ohio law even if no cash consideration is involved, former judge John A. Clive charged in court of appeals in Cleveland in representing Mountain Theatres.

Another territory-wide court battle over the plan is pending in New York, where the Independent Theatre Owners Association indicated it will make court tests of every chance game on the market, in order to enlighten members on their legality locally.

Loew's and Consolidated, two of the largest circuits in the New York territory, affiliated and independent, respectively, are considering reinstating chance games.

"Bingo" is the subject of a Rhode Island court controversy between authorities and users, while in Philadelphia Dave Barrist and his Quality Premium Company were preparing to sponsor a test to establish the legality in that territory of "Movie Sweepstakes.

With Walgreen's 260 Cook County, Illinois, drug stores starting on a "daily dividend" giveway, it is understood that "Bank Night" officials for that territory are investigating infringements possibilities.

A REAL FIND

LITERALLY, the news about Eastman Super X spread like wildfire. Never has a film "caught on" faster, or been more widely adopted in so short a time. The reason: Super X is a real find for the cinema world. Introducing new standards of speed and photographic quality, coupled with rare versatility, it represents a major advance in raw-film research . . . a true contribution to the art of the motion picture. ANOTHER "GEM"

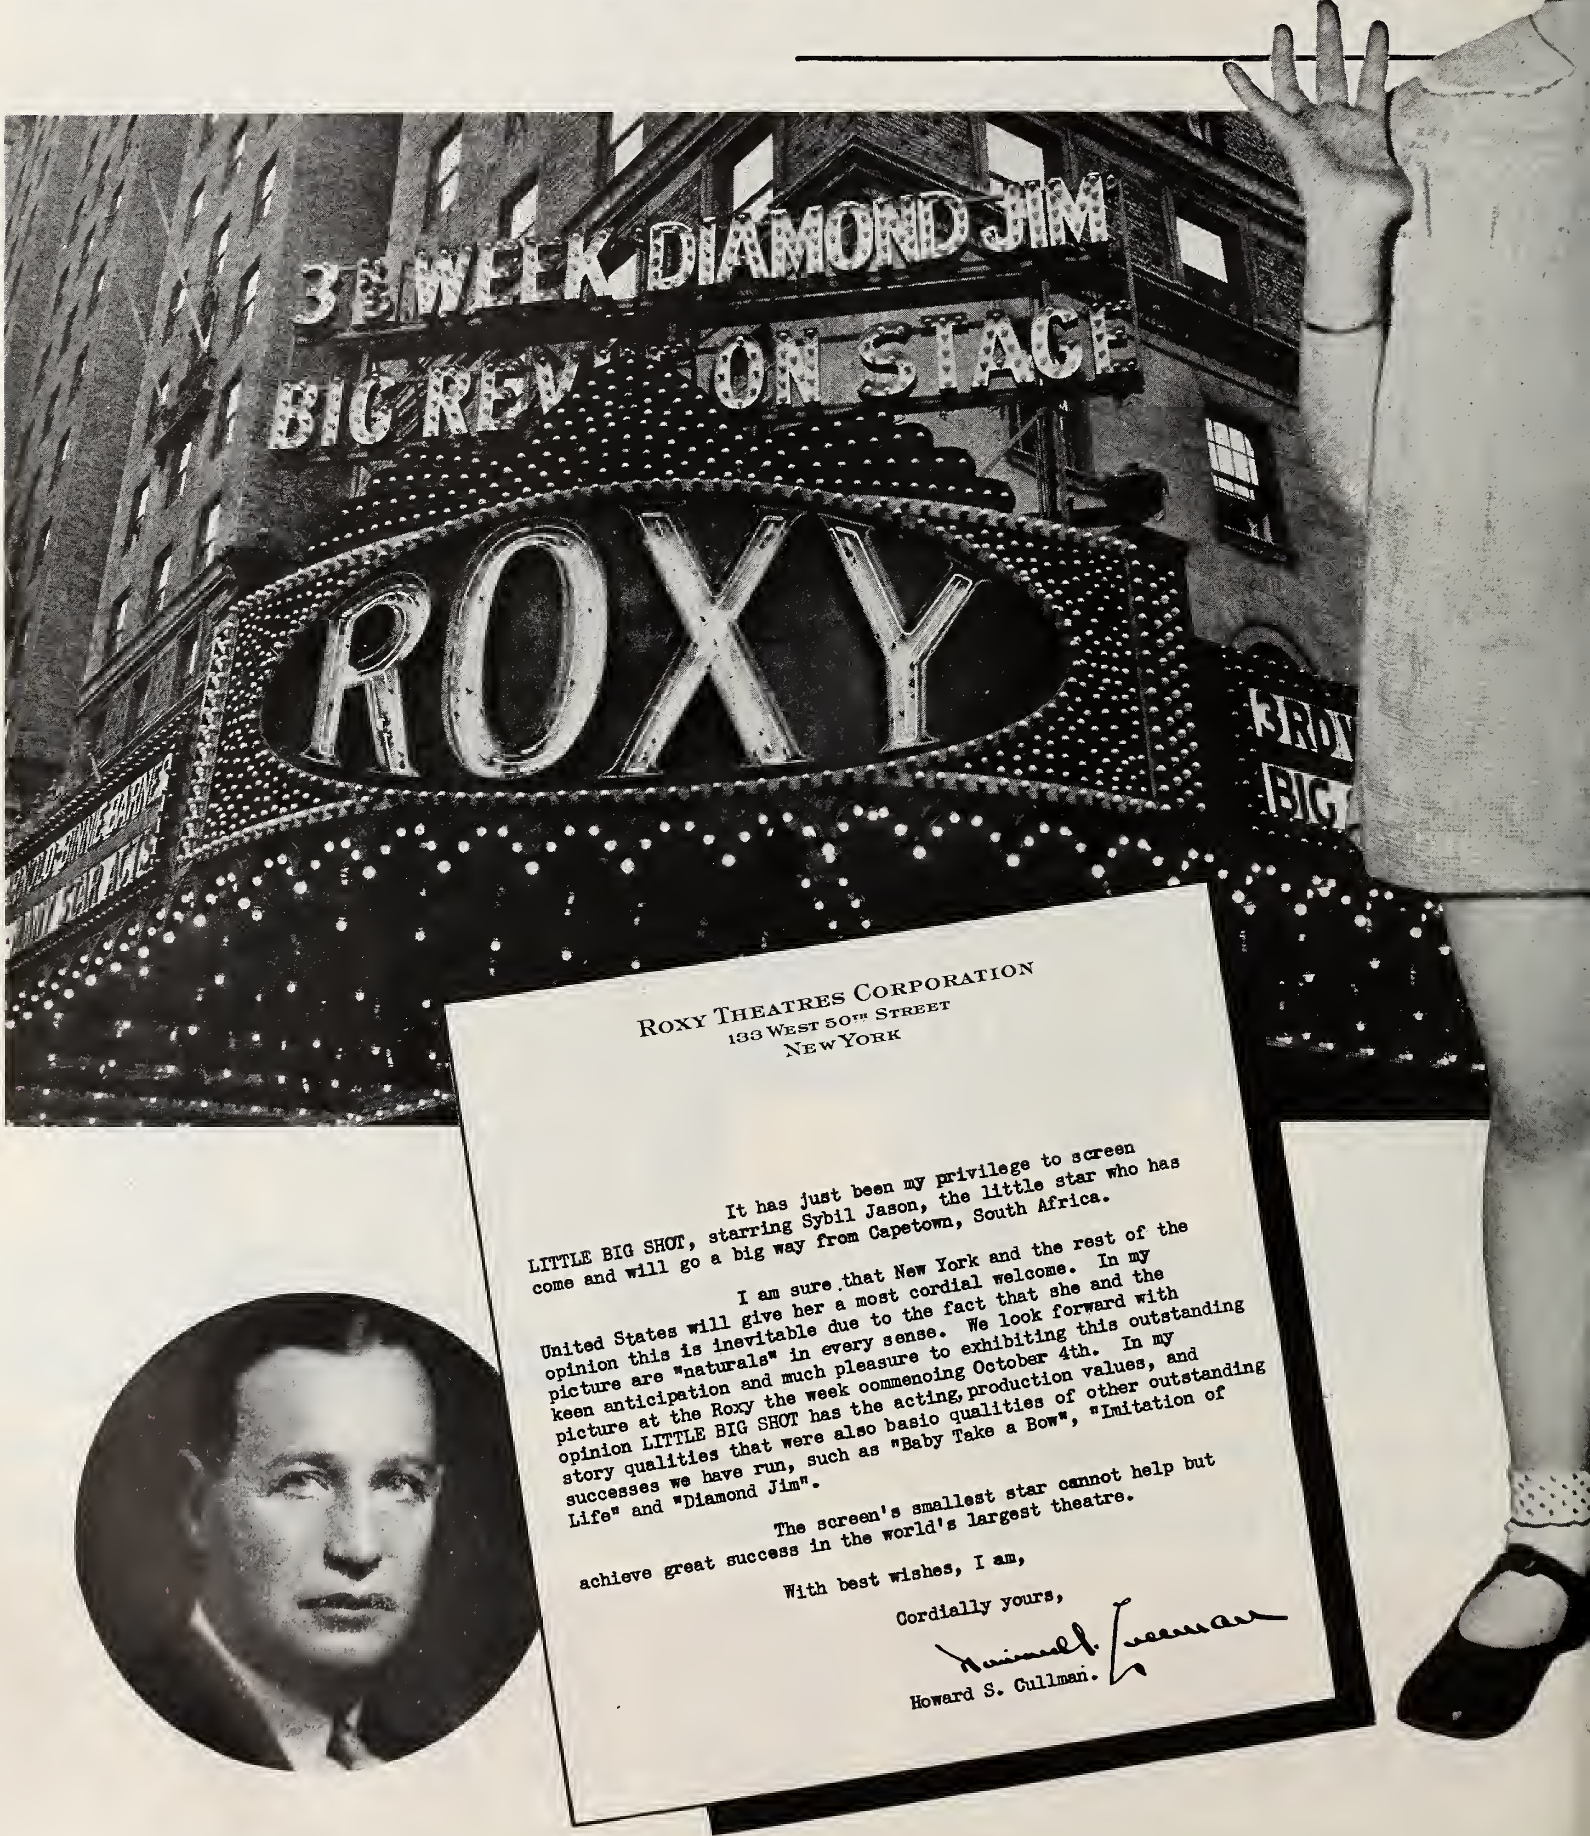
Littlest Star to Make N. Y. Debut



Roxy Theatres Corporation
133 West 50th Street
New York

It has just been my privilege to screen LITTLE BIG SHOT, starring Sybil Jason, the little star who has come and will go a big way from Capetown, South Africa.

I am sure that New York and the rest of the United States will give her a most cordial welcome. In my opinion this is inevitable due to the fact that she and the picture are "naturals" in every sense. We look forward with keen anticipation and much pleasure to exhibiting this outstanding picture at the Roxy the week commencing October 4th. In my opinion LITTLE BIG SHOT has the acting, production values, and story qualities that were also basic qualities of other outstanding successes we have run, such as "Baby Take a Bow", "Imitation of Life" and "Diamond Jim".

The screen's smallest star cannot help but achieve great success in the world's largest theatre.

With best wishes, I am,

Cordially yours,

Howard S. Cullman.

Pink Bud

WERE it not for a certain conveyance of a truculent attitude toward society as it is now organized, one might view with considerable approbation the announcement of The New Film Alliance, Inc., as a motion picture development.

The Alliance, it says, is interested in "the formation of production, distribution and exhibition groups throughout the country which will unite on a non-profit making basis and show films which deal honestly and in an adult manner with the problems of everyday life, and which will serve to combat the dangers of war, fascism and censorship." "Closed subscription showings of new foreign and domestic pictures not yet commercially released, censored films, and frequent revivals of film classics at popular prices" are also contemplated.

Several of the names identified with the movement present persons of marked capacity and attainment, while others, in seemingly the more active relation, suggest an enthusiasm based on long standing maladjustment to the contemporary world with attendant unemployment.

It is entirely proper for persons who are not pleased with books, newspapers, motion pictures, painting, sculpture or other products of the media of expression to go into production for themselves on their own account. This is much better from the point of view of the established screen of the people than having them try to make over the whole industry. A lot of speeches, for instance, are more fittingly delivered from soap boxes in Trafalgar Square or Columbus Circle than from the United States Senate or other officially high places. A soap box department may afford an effective but unimportant outlet for pressures by belligerent minorities which would otherwise be a pestiferation in the career of the industry.

Movements of the sort are, to be sure, not in any reality motion picture matters, representing rather a reaching for the screen as a tool in the furtherance of external purposes of sorts. The motion picture with which these young men seem so dissatisfied chances to have evolved in the service of the box office millions and may fairly be taken to represent them to the best ability of the best picture makers the world has evolved in pursuit of serving mass demand.

It is evident enough to calm, detached observers that if anything remarkably different is to be done about the nature of motion pictures it will first be necessary to make over the audiences of the millions.

Once again it must be recorded that the motion picture did not make its audience and has been in existence but a few of the years of the ages in which the race and its faint cultures have evolved. He who would deal "in an adult manner with the problems of everyday life" on the screen or elsewhere will presently find how scarce adults are. That, happily, is not a concern or problem of the motion picture in the amusement industry.

Propaganda of any sort for any special purpose has no place on the amusement screen. That, however, does not justify the reds, pinks and variegated leftists in charging the screen with propaganda in the making and presentation of pictures that are attuned to the status quo. The status quo is where the people live and how they live and represents the best they have been able to do so far in attaining a civilization.

It is to be observed in passing as, perhaps, illuminating the motivations of the New Film Alliance, that its president has said that it is planning to make "worker's films." The workers of the land have by their combined buying power long controlled the nature of the pabulum of the screen. If it is not "adult" it is because they have sought from the theatre something else.

Among the members of the board of the Alliance is Mr. Andre Sennwald of the New York Times motion picture section, a facile critic and commentator who does not always know his art from his politics, and who shares with his able fellow board member, Mr. Richard Watts, Russian traveler and critic for the New York Herald-Tribune, the distinction of supplying our favorite sources of disagreement. Writing in The Times of Sunday last Mr. Sennwald, incidental to a discussion of the metropolitan progress of double billing, says:

"This phenomena is a tribute to the screen as the great mass narcotic. Standards of taste can be improved only by brutally inflicting intelligent films on the amorphous millions for whom Hollywood is the artistic and intellectual center of the universe."

Sometime, if he persists in his eager observations, Mr. Sennwald will find that the millions are "amorphous" because they are millions and that they insist on staying that way—and why quarrel with Creation, on the screen? The ancient art of the printed word is still big enough to take care of the intellectual minorities.

It is just as well that the New Film Alliance, Inc., should straightway announce itself on a "non-profit making basis." That is likely to prove exceedingly correct in all dimensions.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Music Fight

The ramifications of the government's prosecution of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are expected to develop a first-class investigation of score charges made by film distributors to exhibitors, when the trial is resumed in the federal court in New York in November.

The music publishers and copyright owners this week indicated they are confident such a turn will develop when exhibitors are placed on the stand and they testify to the huge sums collected by the producer-distributors since the birth of sound in the name of score charge.

Meanwhile there is a growing complexity of worries for the music interests, and for the producer-distributors, because of the eventuality that ASCAP might be dissolved in the face of their recording contractual obligations. The story is on page 13.

Korda Party Honored

A luncheon in compliment to Alexander Korda and his British associates, Sir Connop Guthrie and Etienne Pallos, was tendered by Martin Quigley at the Rockefeller Center Luncheon Club yesterday.

Those present were: Mr. Korda, Sir Connop, Mr. Pallos, Will H. Hays, Nicholas M. Schenck, Dr. A. H. Giannini, Robert H. Cochrane, W. G. Van Schmus, Harry D. Buckley, Ned Depinet, Al Lichtman, Arthur Kelly, Maurice Silverstone, Carl E. Milliken, Colvin Brown and Mr. Quigley.

Amusement Census

Determined not to repeat the fiasco of the 1933 census of amusement and other service industries, the United States Census Bureau last week began the establishment of offices in Philadelphia which will serve as headquarters for the 1935 census of business.

The coming three months will be devoted to preparing for the canvass of theatres and business establishments of all kinds which will begin January 2, next. The study was made possible by a grant of $8,000,000 from the works fund.

Philadelphia was selected as headquarters for the census because it will be conducted chiefly by people from relief rolls, the total employment in that city and throughout the country being expected to reach a figure of 35,000 during the actual canvassing of places of business, which will require from three to four months to complete.

"Basic information will be gathered relating to the number of operating units, employment, payrolls, receipts and other pertinent data," it was said at the bureau in announcing the initiation of work. "With this source information, together with the data compiled in other censuses, there will be permanent statistical records embracing all segments of business activities.

"It is expected that the data made available in this census will be of particular value for administrative purposes by Federal, state and local agencies and by financial, industrial and commercial organizations. The information will be of great value to private industry," the Bureau continued, "in developing plans for business recovery and expansion."

$13,000,000 to Chance

The American motion picture industry, through 10,000 exhibitors, is contributing $13,000,000 a year to the premium and chance game distributors and copyright owners, it is learned in a survey among informed film and premium circles in New York. This breaks down to $250,000 weekly—a small fortune diverted from the normal channels of the industry to outside interests. The giveaways range from a 10-cent dish to a $16,000 home and a $3,000 accumulated cash Bank Night award.

From many key cities come reports of the continued wide sweep of the practice, with prosecutions, court battles and infringement actions piling up in its wake. The story of the "giveaway industry" is told on page 23.

Stock Values Up

The upswinging stock market has increased the value of motion picture stocks some $203,000,000 in one year, ending Monday.

Wall Street bankers, brokers and traders, almost trigger-like in their quickness to observe a good stock performer, for weeks have been eyeing the motion picture issues on the New York Stock Exchange. As a group these stocks have been leading many in the "blue chip" divisions as consistent risers on the "big board," and today some 14 film and equipment issues are worth $518,463,679, compared to their valuation of $314,733,983 one year ago.

This remarkable performance of film stocks is analyzed statistically and otherwise, on pages 15 and 16.

Gaumont's Net

Word of a $3,600,000 net Gaumont-British profit in England arrived on these shores during the week at about the same hour as Arthur Jarratt, in charge of constructing the programs for the company's 400 to 450 United Kingdom theatres.

Mr. Jarratt has come both for a holiday and for study. He has some suggestions, too, for Hollywood—but he will not "spill a lot of hot air" about the progress of British pictures.

As Europe's largest film buyer, Mr. Jarratt, who serves the tastes of 4,000,000 British cinema patrons every week, will be listened to when he tells Hollywood that: (1) More attention must be paid to American accents in pictures marketed by Hollywood in England; (2) Shirley Temple is England's best liked box office attraction, while Greta Garbo's appeal is limited; (3) Clean films still make the most money; (4) Public intelligence is under-rated; (5) The story is the most important film item; and, (6) Cheery films make more money than gloomy ones. See page 40.

Clearance Suit

Clearance and zoning became an issue before the supreme court of New York this week when Skouras Theatres Corporation brought action against Twentieth Century-Fox and the RKO circuit alleging breach of a franchise agreement whereby Skouras theatres enjoyed seven days' protection over nearby RKO houses.

George Skouras alleged he had been damaged by the RKO contract and sought an injunction. See page 26.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Still in the News

William Fox, former tycoon of the film and theatre companies bearing his name, continues to be very much in the news as the principal in litigations growing out of his activity in connection with his one-time holdings.

He scored a point when Federal Judge Robert P. Patterson in New York voided a subpoena served on him for examination in a case involving a San Francisco theatre deal, but lost one when Justice Meier Steinbrink in New York supreme court ruled he must submit to questioning on all details in another action.

These and other developments in the Fox companies are related in the story on page 29.

Pioneer Is Dead

Herbert L. Rothchild, leading San Francisco attorney and an early motion picture exhibitor on the West Coast, died suddenly at his home early this week. He was 54 years old.

Mr. Rothchild was a pioneer in advancing pictures from the nickleodeons to the large theatres of today and he built San Francisco's first de luxe picture theatre, the California. His widow and three children survive.

AT&T 1st Target

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company will be the subject of the first hearings of the House committee which is inquiring into patent manipulations, according to Dr. William I. Sirovich, chairman of the House Committee on Patents. The hearings will be held late this month at the Fifth Avenue hotel, New York.

The investigation, which is authorized by a resolution adopted at the last session of Congress, is designed to investigate the effect on public welfare of patent pooling, cross-licensing or patent manipulation, and to study conditions in which competition is believed to be restrained or stifled by owners of underlying patents.

Dr. Sirovich said the first hearing will take place immediately after the report of the committee's staff of investigators, accountants, engineers and statisticians now engaged in collecting data on various industries is completed.

"It is significant that on the eve of the hearing, the AT&T modified its policy by offering to allow newspapers to use their own equipment in transmitting telephoto pictures," the Congressman said. "The lifting of the exorbitant tax exacted in the transmission of telephoto pictures would be a great victory for newspapers. For example, instead of a newspaper paying about $1,000 in charges for transmitting pictures of the grounded liner Dixie from Florida to a newspaper in New York, if the tax were lifted, it would only entail the cost of paying for a long-distance telephone call from one point to the other."

Television's Future

The extent to which international opinion is divided over the future of television in the motion picture theatre ranges from the decision of London television and film interests to install the medium in the Dominion theatre there, as a test, to the observation of Andrew C. Cruse, chief of the electrical division of the United States Department of Commerce, that there is little or no future ahead for television in the theatre.

The week brought forth many television developments, from New York, Paris, California, London and Berlin. These, together with expressions about the new entertainment medium, are reported on page 33.

May Drop Censors

It is believed in New Orleans that the Louisiana film censor board's lease on life will be terminated shortly at a special session of the legislature that is expected to be called by the enemies of the late Senator Huey P. Long to repeal the laws he had drafted.

Several New Orleans exhibitors who desire that their names be kept secret are said to be preparing a bill for introduction into the coming session, when it is called, to repeal Senator Long's measure establishing the board, inasmuch as all films now released have been carefully scrutinized by the exchanges and exhibitors.

Experiment

Will H. Hays, president, reporting to directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., at their quarterly meeting in New York Wednesday, said that production plans for the new season will launch "the greatest experiment in public taste ever conducted by the American motion picture industry," topped by Shakespearean films which will disclose the vast possibilities of the screen for the expression of the highest forms of art and drama, and by music from the operas sung by the great living singers of the world.

Mr. Hays, returning from the Coast, where he studied production and amplified the work of the Production Code Administration, advised the directors that their advertising budgets be made commensurate with the greater entertainment features of the new season.

"Possibly the most significant fact at this time," he said, "is that the industry is engaged in a great experiment wherein producers on the whole are more concerned with inviting the widest possible public support for higher types of entertainment than they are with attempts to discover the theoretical common denominator of the public's appreciation."

Walsh Resigns

William T. Walsh, for fifteen years managing editor of Photoplay Magazine, has resigned, effective September 25. His resignation follows upon that of Kathryn Dougherty, editor and publisher, the week prior. Mr. Walsh, before his association with Photoplay, was for some years editor of the Technical World, which became Illustrated World in Chicago. He has also written a number of novels including "The Mirage of the Many," in which he presented a fictional state of affairs and the attainments of the radicals by 1952. Developments by 1935 indicate that he was conservative.

Mitchell Explains

Further discussion of factors involved in proposed adoption of a standard 2,000-foot reel occupied representatives of all national distributors and of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, meeting early this week at the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., headquarters in New York.

Gordon S. Mitchell, chairman of the technical branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which is recommending adoption of the new length reel, submitted figures on costs and savings involved in the new reel.

Booking Rumpus

Following through on its announced opposition to booking circuits, the Kinematograph Renters' Society in London now comes out with a demand of definite proof of ownership from anyone desiring to book for a theatre.

Exhibitors are hinting at legal action and possible Government legislation to protect their interests. See page 39

SAILING. Alexander Korda, London Films producer and partner in United Artists, was to sail Thursday for England following visits in New York and Hollywood and consummation of negotiations. (l. to r.) Arthur W. Kelly, Sir Connop Guthrie. Mr. Korda, Al Lichtman and Etienne Pallos.

DIRECTOR - STAR. Lew Ayres has been signed to direct for Republic. He also will star in "The Leathernecks Have Landed."

CARTOONIST. (Below) Hal Forrest and Mrs. Forrest visit Noah Beery, Jr., who plays "Skeeter" in Universal's "Tailspin Tommy in the Great Air Mystery." Mr. Forrest created the newspaper strip.

LEADING LADY. Into Hal Roach's Our Gang, youngster funsters, comes Darla Hood of Oklahoma City, to be the new leading lady for the makers of the comedies distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Her first is "Our Gang Follies of 1936." She is three years old.

AT PREMIERE. Herbert Wilcox, producer, and Anna Neagle, star of "Peg of Old Drury," British and Dominions production which recently had its premiere at the Leicester Square theatre in London. The story is set in London of the 18th Century.

RADIO TO SCREEN. James Melton, whose voice is familiar to radio listeners the world over, makes his Warner Brothers' film feature debut in "Stars Over Broadway," now in work on the Coast. Here he is chatting between scenes with Mrs. Edsel Ford.

Famous Players Annual Convention
King Edward Hotel. August 30th 1935

CANADA THEATREMEN. In Toronto recently gathered more than 100 managers of the Eastern Division of Famous Players-Canadian circuit for their annual convention, featured by a banquet at the King Edward hotel, where bonus checks amounting to $25,000 were distributed by N. L. Nathanson, president. Other executives present included J. J. Fitzgibbons, director of theatre operations; Clarence Robson, Eastern Division supervisor; R. W. Bolstad, comptroller; T. J. Bragg, secretary-treasurer; Morris Stein, Toronto supervisor; J. R. Nairn, director of advertising. Among visitors were E. C. Grainger, of Fox Films; Jules Levy of RKO Radio, and A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table of Motion Picture Herald.

SCORE CHARGE PROBE SEEN AS CLIMAX OF MUSIC FIGHT

Defendants in ASCAP Suit Say Exhibitors' Testimony Will Show Department of Justice Inquiry Will Be Warranted

A sweeping governmental investigation of score charges, by which exhibitors have paid film distributors millions of dollars since the advent of sound, is expected by members of the Music Publishers Protective Association and other music interests as an outgrowth of the Government's monopoly suit against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and other organizations, which is scheduled to be resumed November 4 in the United States district court in New York.

Spokesmen for the defendants in the Government action this week expressed confidence that when exhibitors called as Government witnesses are placed on the stand sufficient information will be developed to warrant an inquiry by the Department of Justice.

The specific basis for the prediction could not be learned, but it was pointed out that the federal government in Canada became "extremely interested" in disclosures during an inquiry in Toronto last June by Judge James Parker into the activities of the Canadian Performing Rights Society when exhibitor organization representatives testified that in 1934 "$2,000,000 was paid by exhibitors in Canada to the music publishers." A representative of the Music Publishers Protective Association subsequently explained to the investigating committee that the organization received only $5,000 in that year, and the difference between the two widely variant figures went to film distributors in the form of score charge, supposedly to cover the additional cost incurred by the studios in producing pictures with sound.

Call Fee Undeserved

A possible ground on which an investigation, for which exhibitors have been clamoring for several years, could be based is indicated in the charge that whereas the score fee presumably is to defray the added expense imposed on the producers, including the cost of music recordings, that actually it is collected on films in which very little music is used, or public domain music on which there is no copyright recording fee, and that the amounts collected exceed many times the actual total cost.

It is pointed out in important distributor home office circles, however, that before the Government would attempt such an inquiry some semblance of illegality would have to be shown.

At the same time, anticipating possible extinction of the powerful American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers by virtue of the Government's suit on monopoly charges, serious internal dissension and drastic legislation, the motion picture producers are attempting to devise means of continuing unimpaired the rights to reproduce copyrighted music in films in event the Society is eliminated.

This is apparent in the present negotiations between film company attorneys and the Music Publishers Protective Association, which grants the synchronization rights, for a blanket license covering the performing rights in theatres as well.

The new development gives emphasis to the direction in which the recent trend of events has been moving—an accumulation of threats and worries for ASCAP from various sources, outstanding of which are these:

1. Resumption after a summer recess of the federal anti-trust action in which dissolution of the Society is sought.

2. The threat of Warner Bros. to withdraw its music companies from the ASCAP fold and set up its own performing rights bureau.

3. The injunction in Washington enjoining ASCAP from doing business in the state.

4. Recent legislation, including the Duffy bill, which passed the Senate, and taking and licensing enactments in several states.

Motion picture producers, foreseeing the possibility that the society beginning with the new year may no longer be the agency through which performing licenses will issue, are considerably disturbed by the possibility that exhibition of their completed product would be prevented because of their contracts with the Music Publishers Protective Association.

Subject to Licenses

These contracts provide that the right of recording music on film is granted subject to performances in only those theatres having licenses from the Society. How, ask the producers, will performances be possible when ASCAP is no longer in existence or when the Society is prohibited from doing business, as happened in the state of Washington?

To guard against such a contingency, the producers have asked the publishers' group to draw up a contract granting, along with recording rights, a license to reproduce in any theatre whether subscribing to ASCAP or not, with the provision that if ASCAP were vindicated all performing grants would revert to it.

Paine Defends Stand

Everyone concerned, and especially the producers and heads of the large circuits, realize that the situation as it looms at present is fraught with potentialities of confusion. For one thing, it is a serious matter for a film company to turn out a picture under a publishers' license without the assurance that the entire market will be open for its distribution.

An agreement such as the producers are seeking hinges entirely on their willingness to pay for the performing privilege or work out some method of collection of a music tax from the theatres, said John G. Paine, agent and trustee of the Music Publishers Protective Association. The producers have not indicated that they are willing to meet these terms and, in fact, have intimated that they would not expect to pay anything additional above the recording fee, he said.

Music Publishers' Representative Says Association Got $5,000 of $2,000,000 Canadian Exhibitors Said They Paid

"Certainly," observed Mr. Paine, "the producers are justified in asking the right to perform the music, but they are not justified in expecting the copyright owner to give them this right for nothing."

The producers' representatives informed Mr. Paine that an alternative would be to assume the performance fees now paid by the theatres to ASCAP. This might be a simplification of the problem, they said, if they had a chance to get this back from the theatres. But, they pointed out, there is no such opportunity, and to assume the performance fee would increase the cost of production.

Cites Alternative

Mr. Paine informed the producers that should they assume the performing royalties, the pro rata cost per picture or per rental "would not be large," but on the other hand if they failed to make some arrangement to assure reproduction, the inability to exhibit their film would mark up against their earnings a loss greater than would be entailed in the cost of a license.

Mr. Paine is of the opinion that the approximate $2,000,000 that would cover the cost of all music used in pictures under a blanket contract could be absorbed by the producing-distributing companies since, he estimated, it would figure but a small amount per reel.

He said a blanket agreement would also provide for such contingencies as have arisen in the past when groups of exhibitors have refused to pay the seat tax and thus were ineligible to exhibit films under the publishers' contract, as was the case in Texas in 1929 when 168 exhibitors resisted the payments.

Await Producers' Reply

The publishers are now awaiting the producers' reply submitting an offer or counterproposal.

In recent months there has been a decided trend on the part of some of the large film companies to extend their music holdings, building up their own catalogues with a corresponding decrease in the use of the organized publishers' sources. In music publishing circles on Broadway this is taken as an arming against the time when the Society will be dissolved and the various lists will be thrown on the open market. On this phase, Mr. Paine commented:

PRODUCERS ASK PUBLISHERS' LICENSE

"It has proved more costly to the motion picture industry to develop an independent position in music than to pay the licenses required by the music industry. Then, too, the film industry, by its attempt to build up an independent position, has separated itself from an enormously valuable catalogue and substituted for it a catalogue that has been hastily gotten together, the largest part of which has been composed by 'ghost writers.' "

Points to Increased Costs

Mr. Paine gave it as his opinion that except for compositions by skilled writers of outstanding reputation, the musical uses made by pictures today are "very inferior" to the films of 1929, 1930 and 1931, when all producers obtained their music through the publishers' association. Mr. Paine said that in the days when Fox Film enjoyed a blanket license from the publishers—indirectly through Erpi and RCA Photophone—the maximum charge in any one year in that period did not exceed $225,000 for all uses. Today, Mr. Paine said it had been reported to him, the musical costs of Fox Film are "considerably over $500,000."

The direct music sources of Twentieth Century-Fox are the Movietone Music Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary, and Sam Fox Publishing Company, neither affiliated with the publishers' association.

"To operate as the motion picture companies are now is economically unsound and it is certainly definitely artistically unsound," continued Mr. Paine, referring to the large companies which have acquired music organizations of their own. He deprecated the quality of the independent lists as against his catalogue of "the exquisite orchestral works of the world's foremost musicians."

Declares Costs Doubled

In the days when the producers obtained recording rights under a blanket license from the publishing companies, the total bill to the industry was about $600,000 a year, said Mr. Paine. Today it costs the industry some $1,400,000 to tap its music resources, he claimed, explaining that writers and composers under contract draw $1,000,000 a year, $125,000 goes for licenses to the MPPA, $100,000 to publishers not affiliated with the association, and maintenance of the film companies' own music organizations involves a further expenditure of $200,000.

He said a survey made by the association in the old days showed that on the basis of the $600,000 figure, the cost for each individual use of a composition approximatch $90.

Some of these figures are challenged, however, by the independent publishers, who say that the revenue to them is nearer $200,000 or $250,000 than $100,000 yearly, one important company alone grossing $120,000 in synchronization rights last year. Furthermore, it is cited that most of the film companies having musical subsidiaries are showing a profit, for example Robbins Music Corporation, which has earned $550,000 for MGM in the last five years. The Warner music companies are also considerably in the black.

ORGANIST REFUSES TO PLAY "INTERNATIONALE"

Reds were given a lesson in patriotism by G. Howard Scott, organist at Convention Hall, Asbury Park, N. J., recently, when he refused to play a number for the first time since he inaugurated request programs several years ago.

The number asked for was the "Internationale," rallying song of the Communists. Mr. Scott said: "We don't play that song here, but in place of this request I'm going to play a tune we much prefer."

With that he played a part of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

The audience broke out into applause.

The producers' acquisitions pointed a trend away from the organized publishers to escape the heavy recording fees, which they considered unjustified. These royalties, said Mr. Paine, are arbitrary and vary according to the nature of the composition and its use, ranging from $50 to $150 for background music to $1,000 or more for more extensive use of an important number. He insists, however, that the cost of specially written compositions is much greater.

World Copyright Problem

Leading music publishers, even those affiliated with film companies, question the advisability of extensive purchases of catalogues for studio use because the world rights are involved, with their attendant pitfalls as to the copyright laws of various foreign countries. It was pointed out the publishers themselves frequently do not know the ramifications of underlying copyright ownerships, and that the situation is made more difficult by the fact that rights are retained in foreign countries for as long as 50 years after the composer's death, as compared with expiration of copyrights 28 years after issuance in this country.

Mr. Paine claimed the publishers' association performs a service for the producer in this respect, since his office maintains a card index file of practically all compositions used in the last five years and is able to tell at a glance the status of all copyrights.

Despite these drawbacks, motion picture companies are currently bargaining for music properties, with Warner and MGM as the chief contenders and Paramount, Fox, RKO and Columbia also in the bidding. Mills Music, Inc., is reported offering its catalogue at an asking price of $1,500,000 and is negotiating with Twentieth Century-Fox.

One of the most serious threats to the organized music industry as represented by ASCAP is the preparation being made by Warner to secede when its contract expires December 31, this year. With four music subsidiaries contributing 25 to 30 per cent of the Society's compositions, Warner's revenue is placed in the neighborhood of $350,000 a year from all performing rights. The company feels its share should be much larger, and sets $1,000,000 as an arbitrary figure for its compensation yearly.

Point System Considered

Warner's objections may be met by the adoption of a point system, which is under consideration by ASCAP, whereby publishers would be compensated on the basis of use of compositions instead of the present arbitrary classification system. Herman Starr, treasurer of Warner, is to succeed Edwin H. Morris, vice-president and general manager of the Warner music interests, on the ASCAP board, but Warner denies this will have any effect on its announced intention to withdraw from the organization in event the royalty setup is not revamped so as to increase its payments.

Broadcasters Protest

Meanwhile the broadcasters are protesting to ASCAP over this development, since a new performing bureau would increase their fees, and the Society has advised them that it will, under any circumstances, license the Warner catalogues in behalf of the writers.

Informed music publishing circles hold that the Warner threat to withdraw is a well designed bluff intended to force ASCAP to meet its terms. Warner, however, has warned broadcasters that use of its music after the expiration of the ASCAP contract will be subject to infringement.

There are other disturbances within the Society's ranks, chiefly over the classification of the members in the publishers' division under which revenue is distributed, and long standing objections to the self-perpetuating board of directors and officers.

Must Remain Defendant

The Music Publishers Protective Association lost its plea for dismissal of the action brought against it by S. Theodore Hodgman, as assignee for the Royal Amplitone Corporation, when Federal Judge Bondy in New York ruled it must remain a defendant with the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, Western Electric, Erpi and ASCAP. The action is a conspiracy and anti-trust suit involving patents, and is for $5,000,000.

The association contended it had never entered into any contracts that might be involved in the dispute and therefore could not have been a party to the alleged conspiracy to keep Amplitone out of the sound equipment field.

$203,729,000 GAIN IN VALUE OF FILM STOCKS

Fourteen Stocks Show Increase of 65 Per Cent Over $518,463,679 of Year Ago; Lead All Groups Days at a Time

"The amusement industry is unique in its ability to make a rapid recovery from financial difficulties."—Dr. A. H. Giannini, international banker.

Fourteen motion picture stocks of leading corporations in this and closely related fields gained $203,729,696 in value during the year ended Monday, an increase of 65 per cent, from $314,733,983 to $518,463,679.

This market performance is considered remarkable in Wall Street and on many occasions, especially in recent weeks, has drawn the attention of both bankers and traders. For days at a time the motion picture stocks, as a unit, led all other groups in the rising market.

Broadway's new record theatre crowds and long queues of filmgoers on the Main Streets of the country today are being mirrored in activity in staid old Wall Street and the surrounding canyons of New York's financial district—the trading heart of the world.

Far downtown, off from the bright lights of the Gay White Way, bankers, brokers and alert stock market traders are sitting up and taking a participating interest in the rejuvenation of the amusement world as represented largely by the motion picture. Daily the trend is the cause of complimentary comment in the financial pages of the news press.

The reaction is a steadily growing bustle around the posts where motion picture issues change hands on the teaming floor of the New York Stock Exchange in the shadows of the towers at Broad and Wall.

Up One to Forty Points

Interest in the stocks of the creators of the new-day record-breaking box office attractions has reached a particularly high pitch in the last few days, although it has been growing with noticeable consistency for a year, stimulated by a general business recovery, a better quality product, and, the expanded market resulting from the adoption by the industry last year of a higher production standard.

In cold statistics, these stocks, representing virtually all of the socalled "major" producer-distributors and the larger companies affiliated with the screen, are up from one to 40 points over their quoted prices of this time last year. Not a single issue of the 14 had lost ground at the end of the year.

A statistical study of the rise in motion picture stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, which, on Monday, sent their valuation up to $518,000,000 from their September, 1934, value of $314,000,000, appears on the following page.

Taking a lusty part in the general market upswing that is following bigger industrial earnings and fatter pay envelopes, motion picture stocks, as reflected in the accompanying compilation on the next page, spurted $157,146,292 in market value in the nine months from September 15, 1934, to June 15, 1935.

And the dusting off of the "Standing Room Only" signs in the three months from June 15 to the past Monday added no less than $46,785,734, which is even more rapid advancement than that which marked the first nine months.

The extent to which improvement in every branch of the motion picture business was stimulated is illustrated in the compilation, which has all but three of the film stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange. The exceptions, Fox, Paramount and Pathe, were omitted because of corporate and capital changes that make year-old comparisons irrelevant, these changes having taken place during reorganization.

Giannini Sees Expansion

Even further expansion financially is predicted for the industry, by Dr. A. H. Giannini, chairman of the general executive committee of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, which has long been known as the "moving picture bank."

Dr. Giannini, who for years has been backing many film producers, this week told the financial reporting service of Dow, Jones and Company that the motion picture industry in this country and abroad is at the beginning of another period of growth and prosperity.

"Bankers in the past have gone into the industry in the wrong way and have lost money in its securities," he explained, adding: "They did not perform a straight banking service of lending on films as they would lend on steel, cotton, dry goods or any other commodity, at regular interest rates.

"We lent millions through the depression (to motion pictures) at regular interest rates and kept the studios open when other banks all over the country refused to lend on productions. During the last five years we never lost a dollar on film loans. We believe the amusement industry should be recognized as a legitimate business and should be entitled to the same banking consideration as any other enterprise."

Explaining his belief that "the amusement industry is unique in its ability to make a rapid recovery from financial difficulties," Dr. Giannini gave as the reason "the enormous steady cash income that is available."

Time Has Come for Bankers to Give Amusements Same Consideration as Given to Other Businesses, Says Giannini

"Roughly speaking," he continued, "in the United States 50,000,000 people weekly (a low estimate) pay cash admissions in 14,000 theatres, and around 5,000,000 weekly pay at the box offices in New York alone. Taking average admissions at 25 to 30 cents, this is an average weekly gross income of $12,500,000 to $15,000,000 in the nation paid by customers before they see the goods they buy." (Based on prevailing industry estimates of 75,000,000 attendance weekly, the average week's gross would run from $18,750,000 to $22,500,000, at admissions of from 25 to 30 cents.)

Increases by Companies

In the field of motion picture production and distribution, Columbia Pictures (voting trust certificates) advanced 38 and three-quarter points for a $6,803,260 increase in valuation. Warner Brothers preferred gained 24 and three-quarter points for a $2,551,898 gain in value. Loew's, Inc., common and preferred were notable stock performers, gaining 18 and 16 points, and $26,821,710 and $2,187,552, respectively.

Universal Pictures preferred gained eight and seven-eighth points ($159,750); Warner Brothers common netted a three-point gain ($11,404,032). RKO gained one and seven-eighth points ($2,356,670), and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer preferred one and one-half points for a $220,036 gain.

The largest gain made by any corporation in the industry was that reported by Keith-Albee-Orpheum preferred, an RKO affiliate, which netted 40 and one-eighth points during the year, for a stock increase in total valuation of some $2,580,198.

Equipment Field Gains

In the equipment and allied fields, Eastman Kodak common gained 63 and one-quarter points, a $143,144,238 increase in valuation; Eastman Kodak preferred, 12 points, $739,884; American Seating Corporation, 10 and one-quarter points, $2,357,387; Consolidated Film Industries preferred, three and seven-eighth points, $1,550,000; and, Consolidated Film common, one and five-eighth points for a total valuation increase of $853,081.

This week's valuation of leading motion picture stock issues, based on the number of shares listed on the New York Stock Exchange, is as follows: Loew's, Inc., 1,490,095 common shares, $66,309,227; Warner Brothers, 3,801,344 shares of common, $26,609,408; Loew's, 136,722 shares of preferred, $14,560,893; Columbia Pictures, 175,568 voting trust certificates, $12,070,300; Keith-Albee-Orpheum, 64,304 shares of preferred, $4,830,838; RKO, 1,256,891 shares of common, $4,870,452; Warner Brothers, 103,107 shares of preferred, $4,304,717; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 146,691 shares of preferred, $4,034,002; and Universal Pictures, 18,000 shares of preferred, $648,000.

FILM ISSUES NOW WORTH $518,463,000

The $203,729,000 appreciation in the valuation of 14 leading motion picture stock and equipment issues during the past year, as listed on the New York Stock Exchange, is traced in the compilation below, first through the nine months from September 15, 1934 to June 15, 1935, and then through the last quarter, from June 15 to September 15, concluding with a recapitulation of the gains in points and in valuation for the whole year:

SPECIAL FEDERAL COURT THREATENED TO SPEED ST. LOUIS CONSPIRACY CASE

Justice Department Men Reported Bitter at Alleged 'Backstage' Moves of Distributors Outwitting the Government

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

The United States Department of Justice, Homer S. Cummings, attorney-general, is considerably irked at the successful efforts attributed to the defendant distributors, Warner Bros., RKO and Paramount, to defeat the Government's attempts to obtain speedy disposition of its St. Louis conspiracy case against these companies, and this week took under advisement the naming of a special federal court, to consist of one district and two circuit judges, to expedite the prosecution.

Faced with the probability that a hearing cannot be obtained before next month, and with the 1935-36 booking season drawing to a close in the large situations, Justice Department officials at Washington on Monday began to study proposals to name the special court to take care of what is termed in Capital circles as "the most important antitrust suit in recent years."

Refusing to discuss the matter in detail officially, men at the Department appeared bitter over alleged "backstage" moves by which it was said the distributors had outwitted the Government in the fight for a quick trial.

The naming of a special court, it was agreed, would be an unusual procedure, but was declared at Washington to be justified by the importance of the case, which, it was hinted, might be but the forerunner of other similar prosecutions against distributors elsewhere.

The Department, it was said, has been flooded with complaints from exhibitors not only in St. Louis but in other booking areas, and is anxious to proceed with the St. Louis prosecution. Efforts to get the case heard before summer recess were ineffectual, and present indications are that the opening of the St. Louis court for the fall term will find other cases ahead of the motion picture suit on the calendar.

While the Department was said to be considering the special court seriously, there were indications that, if satisfactory arrangements could be made for prompt hearing the plan would be abandoned. The Department, however, is determined not to let the case lie on the calendar indefinitely and will make every possible move to have it called for trial in the near future, Washington expressions indicated.

Blame Delays by Reed

Further explanation of the Justice Department's attitude was made in a special Washington dispatch to the New York Herald-Tribune, on Wednesday, which said, in part:

"It would be incumbent upon Kimborough Stone, presiding judge for that (St. Louis) circuit, to designate these (special court) judges if Attorney-General Cummings were to file a request. The request of the Department of Justice is not reviewable and operates automatically to bring the special court into action, with orders to give precedence to the case in question and bring it to trial at the earliest possible moment.

"Officials of the Department said today that the procedure was justified, in their opinion, because defense counsel James A. Reed, Democrat, former Senator from Missouri, had brought about a series of postponements and delays which operated to defeat the Government's purpose to break up combinations in restraint of trade. They were quite prepared to meet the statutory requirement for the convening of such a court, which is that the Department of Justice certify that, in its opinion, a decision in the case is of 'general public importance.' "

"The Department," continued the press dispatch, "takes the position . . . that the motion picture industry is second only to the church and the school in its influence on American life. It contends that the status of independent motion picture exhibitors throughout the United States depends on the test case in Missouri and that, 'if the Government fails, it will be the most tragic disaster that ever occurred to the small man in the motion picture business.' "

Indicted Months Ago

The complaint charges Warners, RKO and Paramount, and certain of their officers and subsidiaries with operating a conspiracy in restraint of trade against the independent St. Louis theatres known as the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central. The Justice Department obtained a federal grand jury criminal indictment months ago, and during the summer has been fighting in court at St. Louis to get a hearing on equity proceedings in which the defendants must show cause why the court should not issue a temporary injunction restraining them from continuing to refuse to provide films to the three theatres. The temporary injunction, of course, is to restrain the defendants until a decision is handed down later in the case itself.

"The situation has been intensified in the last few days," continued the dispatch to the Herald-Tribune, "by the fact that a score or more of independents from various states have telegraphed pleas to the Department to 'bring about an immediate adjudication of the case.' Since the chief defense counsel, former United States Senator Reed, is a bitter enemy of the Roosevelt Administration and of Attorney-General Cummings in particular, the situation is not without irony.

"The Government, in a temporary maneuver to protect the independent exhibitor during the booking season, had readjusted its procedure. It would have preferred to go to the criminal trial first, rather than risk showing its evidence in the injunction case. In anticipation of just such a situation, it is explained, the Government had made a terrific struggle to get the criminal trial under way some months ago."

Bill of Particulars Filed

• ST. LOUIS BUREAU

In the St. Louis case, Russell Hardy, special assistant United States Attorney General, who is in charge of the Department of Justice criminal and equity actions, filed bills of particulars in federal court late last week, covering the alleged participation of RKO and its president, Ned E. Depinet, in the alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Mr. Hardy is said to feel that the bills of particulars fully comply with the request of defense counsel for additional information on the charges against RKO and its president. But, it appears the bills of particulars shed little additional light on the operaiton of the alleged conspiracy.

Call U. S. Answer Insufficient

Last week it was thought probable that when the case comes to trial on September 30 defense counsel will seek a postponement on the ground that the bills of particulars have failed to furnish sufficient information on which to prepare a proper defense, but early this week the distributors returned to the court and charged that the Department of Justice bills of particulars were not responsive and failed to comply with an order of Federal Judge George H. Moore to advise those defendants in the case as to when, where and through whom they have participated in the alleged conspiracy to withhold first-run films from the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres there. Jacob M. Lashly, local attorney for the defendants, filed a motion with the court, asking that the government supply further particulars as to the charges. Mr. Lashly charged that the bills of particulars already furnished were defective, indefinite and insufficient, stating in his motion "the bills furnished also are evasive, frivolous and contradictory."

The specific case selected by the Government as typical revolves around the reopening of three St. Louis theatres which Warner Bros. had vacated allegedly in protest against a landlord's refusal to lower the rent. It is alleged that Allen L. Snyder, an independent, sought to operate the same three theatres but was frustrated by an inability to buy a suitable supply of pictures from any source.

Thalberg of MGM Denies Differences

Denying reports of difficulties with MGM, Irving Thalberg, production executive, interviewed Tuesday in Chicago en route to the West Coast, said "everything is fine." He said his old contract still has several years to run and there has been no new agreement.

Mr. Thalberg's trip to New York was on production matters, said Nicholas M. Schenck, president of MGM, at the same time denying that MGM had voted Mr. Thalberg a substantial cash bonus.

Reports had it that Mr. Thalberg had been dissatisfied with his status at the MGM studio and presumably had come East to adjust matters.

Mexican Producers Subject to Censors

Producers in Mexico are now subject to censorship with the recent establishment of a special bureau by the Ministry of the Interior, but this censorship is friendly, the Government explains. It is intended to aid native producers abroad by making certain that pictures they export are real in authentic Mexican atmosphere, history, customs and the like.

On the other hand, Mexican exhibitors have appealed to President Cardenas in an effort to obtain a reversal of the decision taken by American film distributors to withdraw at the end of September from the Mexican field. Motion picture employes union officials assert that the distributors are "unreasonable" in their requests for modifications of recent tax measures but the distributors claim they cannot remain in the country if the measures stand.

Foreign interests also claim that a steady loss of from 50,000 pesos to 100,000 pesos have been sustained by most of the companies yearly for some time but that they have hung on to Mexican business in the hope that the present tax requirement would be modified.

Announcements have already been made by the companies to their workers taht the decision to withdraw at the end of the month stands and the men have been paid off in accordance with labor law requisites.

The withdrawal of foreign distributors from Mexico would deal a severe blow to the industry, as Mexican producers are unable to meet demands for product.

Korda's Film Plans Stay at Six to Eight

Alexander Korda has not changed his production plans since he was made a fifth producer-partner in United Artists, he said upon his return to New York from Hollywood.

Mr. Korda said production details are still to be settled and he may decide to bring several American stars to London for his pictures. He was to sail for home Thursday on the Berengaria.

Independent Producers Organization on Coast

A new independent producers' organization is being launched on the West Coast, preliminary plans having been laid at a dinner Tuesday night at which William Berke, Fred Futter and Charles C. Burr were named as committee to get the organization started. The meeting was called by I. E. Chadwick.

The group's principal purpose will be to compel state rights distributors to maintain contractual obligations. Other producers attending were Sig Neufeld, Ray Kirkwood, A. W. Hackle, William Smith, Maurice Conn and Lester Simmons.

Independents Plan Own Negotiations

Irked by the delay in arriving at a new basic wage scale with Local 306, the Skouras and Randforce circuits were reported on Wednesday as ready to draw away from the other circuits negotiating with the operators' union in New York and to start discussions of their own.

Negotiations in the field were more fruitful of results, with several additional contracts reported having been signed with the crafts in key cities.

The New York negotiations are in their sixth week, and are no further ahead than when they started. The independent circuits feel that by dealing with the unions separately they could obtain quicker action.

Annoyed by the procedure by which the operators' committee took each proposal of the circuits to the membership for approval, circuit representatives refused to deal further with the union unless the committee was given the power to close a contract, and the necessary authority was voted by the union.

Holding up consummation of a contract is a reclassification of houses in five groups, according to location, seating capacity and run. An agreement has virtually been reached, however, on 10 years as the term of the new pact, with arbitration to be held every two years.

Under a temporary arrangement since September 6, all Broadway houses with the exception of two-a-day runs are paying $1.80 an hour, while neighborhood first runs pay $1.60, Skouras theatres $1.28, and Randforce is abiding by its original contract. New terms will be retroactive.

A Local 306 committee which conferred with George E. Browne, president of the IATSE, in Washington, reported he refused to rescind his order banning a strike by the local.

Meanwhile discussions are continuing on a merger between Local 306 and the Allied union, and the local is reported sponsoring a plan to absorb Allied and Empire State in a move to make the organization citywide.

Allied went to court to restrain Estate Operators, Inc., operating three theatres, from using operators other than Allied, in conformance with an alleged agreement, and Supreme Court Justice McCooey in Brooklyn issued a show-cause order against the owners. In another suit seeking to restrain Terminal Associates, operators of two theatres, from employing none but Allied men, the court refused to issue an injunction before trial.

The IATSE is launching a drive to obtain unionization of theatres in Oklahoma, according to a decision of Mr. Browne, John P. Nick, IATSE vice-president, and Felix Snow, divisional representative, at an IATSE regional convention in Muskogee, Okla. The Griffith circuit in Oklahoma is largely non-union.

English Theatres Booming: Feist

Returning from a five-weeks vacation in Europe, Felix F. Feist, general sales manager of MGM, said on Tuesday that "all cinemas in England are doing a terrific business and those in London are very prosperous."

Wallace Beery, also returning on the Ile de France, said he was slated to make a picture for Twentieth Century-Fox, after first appearing in an MGM vehicle. His contract with MGM does not expire for 14 months.

Vocafilm to Protest Court Expense Denial

Judge T. Blake Kennedy of the United States district court of New York has denied a motion made by counsel of Vocafilm Corporation of America for traveling expenses, counsel fees and other expenses for the purpose of cross-examination of Roy J. Pomeroy and Louis E. Swartz in Los Angeles.

Louis Karasik, counsel for Vocafilm, however, has indicated he will contest the court's ruling on the grounds that Federal Judge Coxe, who assigned Judge Kennedy to hear the motion after disqualifying himself because he owned American Telephone and Telegraph Company stock, pre-empted the authority of the senior federal judge in making the assignment. Mr. Karasik further asserts that Judge Kennedy, who is an out-of-town judge, was brought to New York only to hear criminal cases.

The entire action concerns the suit brought by Vocafilm against A. T. and T., Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Incorporated, for $65,000,000 for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws.

Carriers to Discuss Law At Convention October 7th

A uniform system of tariff and other new problems that will have to be met under the Motor Carrier's Act passed at the last session of Congress will be one of the important topics at the annual convention of National Film Carriers, Inc., to be held in New York October 7-9. Under the terms of the act all interstate shipments come under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

On October 8, Charles C. Pettijohn, counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and Tedd Rogers, president of the American Trucking Association, will be the principal speakers. A special committee will be named to attend the American Trucking convention in Washington a week following the New York meet.

INTERNATIONAL ROAD-SHOW PREMIERES IN LONDON, PARIS, VIENNA, SYDNEY, AND IN NEW YORK AT THE HOLLYWOOD THEATRE

October 9th

Approval of applications for road-show contracts only in other situations will depend primarily upon proper guarantees of a presentation in keeping with the quality of this production, and must conform to Warner Bros.' stipulations as to limitation of run and of daily performances, admission scale, advance ticket sale, and clearance.

EXHIBITORS SPEND $13,000,000 YEARLY ON CHANCE GAME AWARDS

Ten Thousand Theatres Average $250,000 a Week Expenditure on Drawing and Gift Devices; Premium's Usage Growing

Theatremen Divided in Opinions on Net Results, But Continued Spread of Practice Is Indicated; More Suits Are Filed

A grand total of $250,000 a week—$13,000,000 a year—is poured in a golden stream into the coffers of chance game promoters and giveaway distributors by approximately 10,000 theatres in the United States.

This is more than was spent in theatre construction in the 16 months from January, 1933, to April, 1934—a sizable fortune diverted away from the industry into outside channels benefitting from the current vogue.

The estimate is given by motion picture distributors in New York and premium distributors, and is figured on the basis of 3,000 theatres using "Bank Nights," another 1,000 to 2,000 using other types of chance games, and as many as 5,000 which have adopted outright giveaways with no lottery element involved.

$25 a Week Average

Each theatre employing a business stimulator of this type spends an average of $25 a week, it is estimated. This is a low estimate, according to New York opinion, because while a large majority of the chance promotions consists of $25 or $50 in cash awards weekly, there are some ranging as high as $500 in a single week. The licensing fee for the use of the copyright plan also must be considered in computing the total, and this runs from $15 a week up per theatre, with a median of $50, depending on the theatre and the type of contract.

That chance games have proved a lucrative enterprise for their distributors is indicated in the reported earnings of Claude C. Ezell, former film executive, now general sales manager for "Bank Night," perhaps the most widespread of the promotions. Mr. Ezell, according to reliable reports, is netting $8,000 weekly as his share of the profits, and the other copyright holders and promoters are participating proportionately.

Licensed for Period

All of the promotions—Bank Night, Screeno, Lucky, jack-pot and whatnot—provide the exhibitor with little but a contract licensing him to use the copyrights for a period of time. The expense to the company distributing the game is limited to the printing of license forms, circulars for exhibitors, banners and similar advertising material. There is also the matter of salesmen's commissions, and these are liberal.

The development of the "Bank Night" promotion is one of the amazing stories of present-day enterprise. An old form of business stimulator, it was revived near Denver by a small theatre operator, and taken over, improved and copyrighted by a group of film and theatre men. The original copyright was registered in Mexico and re-registered under the copyright treaty in the United States in order, it is said, to circumvent legal objections and hazards, since governments and states have a high respect for treaty rights.

While exhibitors have found that chance promotions increase attendance materially, the wide spread of the games and their long use fail to have the desired effect, according to reports from the field. John Boettiger, assistant to Will H. Hays, who was recently in Chicago, reports that exhibitors there, who have been using games for many months, are experiencing a reduction in their weekly net. Giveaways in Chicago have ranged from dishes costing a few cents to a $3,000 accumulated bank night award.

Premium dealers in New York say the use of outright giveaways has increased by 1,000 situations in the last year. In Chicago, however, it is found that since the inception of prize giveaways, free chinaware to patrons has fallen off sharply, more than 60 per cent of the houses using the plan have abandoned it for the cash award idea, and the percentage is growing.

$12,000 a Week at Park

Probably the most extensive use of cash giveaway is in effect at Riverview Park in Chicago where $12,000 is offered weekly, with an award every night, according to word from that city. In Denver, the home of Bank Night, that policy is not extensively in vogue, and the giveaway situation is controlled by two exhibitor factions, one of which is the Harry Huffman circuit. That operator has been giving away cars, and now is sponsoring the offering of a $16,000 home in conjunction with real estate interests and merchants, in a promotion extending until January 1.

The situation has reached a stage in Los Angeles where Fox West Coast recently served warning on the independents that it would outdo anything the unaffiliated house had ever done in the form of giveaways if the practice was not stopped. It is reported the circuit is preparing to fight the opposition with an appropriation of $500,000 for cars and other valuable prizes. The giveaway craze has reached a new high on the West Coast, with the practice largely confined to the independents.

Minneapolis recently was the scene of considerable excitement when the Northtown, operated by Harry Dickerman, was bombed. Exhibitors have been protesting what they termed Mr. Dickerman's "unethical" practices in giveaways, and it is understood he has agreed to discontinue a combined gift night plan at three of his houses.

Four Cases Dismissed

The bars to chance games in New York are considered to have been let down by the dismissal in the courts of four cases in which charges of violating the lottery laws were not proved. Convinced that the promotions do not infringe the penal code, the Independent Theatre Owners' Association is advising its members to proceed with them despite warnings from the police, and exhibitors believe the authorities are finding it useless to attempt further arrests or prosecutions.

It is planned by the ITOA in New York to test every type of game to determine its status under the law. The latest case was that of the Century circuit's Patio in Brooklyn, where Currency Award was declared not illegal by Magistrate Malbin, who held there was no consideration involved. In only one instance has a defendant been held for Special Sessions.

Cleveland Decision Awaited

Decision is awaited from the court of appeals in Cleveland which is expected to settle the question of legality of bank night and similar games in Ohio. When the case was heard by the full bench of three judges, Justice Virgil Terrell questioned the right of the court to hear the case on the ground that if it is a lottery it belongs in a criminal court. Both sides anticipate, however, that the court will render a decision.

Bert Nathan, operator of the Hollywood in Milwaukee, lost an appeal to the municipal court in his bank night case when a jury found him guilty. Mr. Nathan appealed from the district court where he was fined $15 on a charge of operating a gambling device.

Scattered reports this week indicated the vogue was gaining both in intensity and in the new types of giveaways and chance devices. Sparks circuit theatres throughout Florida have added Screeno, and at some theatres Bank Night also is put on. Skouras-operated Jackson and Boulevard theatres in Jackson Heights, L. I., jointly are giving away a Ford car with the cooperation of local merchants. Race Nights are due to make their debut in New York about October 1.

Three Circuits Face Suits

Three Illinois circuits using Cash Night will be the object of suits by the Bank Night distributors charging infringement, it is reported from Chicago, and counsel is also looking to the Daily Dividend plan used in the 360 Walgreen stores. Many other types of businesses are planning something similar.

Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., filed suit in U. S. district court in Atlanta against Lucas & Jenkins and Wilby Theatres, Inc., for infringement on Bank Night.

More than 100 manufacturers are scheduled to have displays at the Atlantic Coast Premium Buyers' Exposition to be held at the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York, September 23 to 27, in conjunction with the Premium Advertising Association of America. Premiums have been on the increase since the removal of code restrictions, according to the Association.

Bischoff with Warner

Samuel Bischoff has signed a new one-year term associated producer contract with Warner and will remain in Hollywood.

[This advertisement is addressed to those hundreds of theatres that will play "TOP HAT" within the next few weeks]

DON'T PULL YOUR ADVERTISING PUNCHES!

THERE SEEMS TO BE NO LIMIT TO WHAT "TOP HAT" CAN DO!

It has upset every preconceived notion of how much money can be crowded into a theatre! We know of no theatre that has not broken its attendance record with "Top Hat." It is making and is going to make more money for theatres than any picture in show business history!

PERMIT US TWO PIECES OF ADVICE:

First: Extend your playing time; open your doors earlier; close them later; give extra shows; have plenty of ushers and doormen to insure rapid turnover, and police assistance to keep your outside lines moving.

Second: Don't pull your advertising punches! Naturally, you are going to give "Top Hat" the biggest advance campaign you ever gave any picture. You're going to whet the public's appetite days — weeks — in advance. You're going to advertise so big that they'll be standing in line hours before the box-office opens. But DON'T STOP ADVERTISING after the opening day! Shout your success! Tell them you're running extra shows to accommodate the crowds! Tell them that if they have to bring camp stools and box lunches and stand in line for hours, it's worth it. TELL THEM IN ADVERTISING— even if you can't take care of the crowds — of the wonders of the show. Keep the ball rolling! Keep their interest up! Make 'em hungry for "Top Hat". People love success. They love going to theatres where they can't get in.

We know that if you didn't spend a dime on advertising, "Top Hat" would do wonderful business. But with big, enthusiastic advertising, there is no limit to what you can do. You can't measure advertising costs or pinch pennies when you've got a sensation like this! Don't depend on word of mouth. Spread the good news yourself, in advance and while playing, with advertising. WHEN YOU'VE GOT A WINNER, RIDE IT WITH EVERYTHING YOU'VE GOT!

There are people in your city, your neighborhood, your surrounding country, with money to spend. They've got Astaire-Rogers-"Top Hat" money in their pockets waiting for you. Get ALL of it! Where you usually play a picture a week, play "Top Hat" two or three or four. Where you play three days, play a week, ten days or two weeks.

Look at Radio City Music Hall. They've had record weeks! They've hung 'em on the rafters. They've had two-block-long lines . . . yet "Top Hat" the first week played to 40,000 more people than it seemed possible. In Hershey, Pa., population 2,500, they played to three times the population of the town in the first three days. They came from 100 miles around! At the Downtown Theatre, Detroit, a house closed for 18 months, two blocks off the main section, against the stiffest competition of the season, "Top Hat" topped the town. Look in your own zone, no matter where you are, and you'll find similar almost unbelievable performances!

DON'T PULL YOUR ADVERTISING PUNCHES! DON'T LAY BACK IN ANY MANNER ON THIS, THE BIGGEST GROSSING OPPORTUNITY YOU EVER HAD IN YOUR ENTIRE EXHIBITING CAREER!

SKOURAS STARTS SUIT OVER PROTECTION PACT

Charges Violation by 20th Century-Fox and RKO; B & K Insists on An Extra Week

Clearance and zoning, which for several months has been gaining the attention of distributors and exhibitors over differences in the field, this week became an issue in New York City with the filing of an injunction suit by Skouras Theatre Corporation in the supreme court against Twentieth Century-Fox and the RKO circuit on the ground that a protection agreement had been violated.

George Skouras, operating head of the complainant circuit, seeks to restrain the RKO 81st Street theatre from playing Twentieth Century-Fox product day and date with the Skouras Riverside and Nemo. Mr. Skouras alleges he has a seven-day protection agreement over RKO under a Fox product franchise.

The circuits are reported attempting to iron out the dispute before it reaches a court hearing, but in the meantime on Tuesday both sides filed additional papers and on Wednesday briefs were filed on order of Justice Hofstadter. Co-defendants in the action are F. E. Thompson, RKO theatre head; Leon Goldberg, treasurer; I. E. Lambert, RKO official, and the 81st Street Theatre Corporation.

Centers on "Inferno" Booking

RKO's 81st Street opened Saturday with "Dante's Inferno," the booking which initiated the dispute. As officials of the distributing company see it, "it is just a matter of who gets the pictures first."

Mr. Skouras says in his affidavit that E. C. Grainger of Twentieth Century-Fox admitted to him that by permitting RKO to date his company's product at the same time as Skouras theatres, the distributor could profit by $1,100 additionally per picture, or a total of about $60,000 from the 81st Street for this season's 50 films.

The alleged breach of contract with the Skouras circuit, it is alleged, means "millions in losses" to Skouras' Riverside, Nemo, Japanese Garden and the Riviera.

Charges Interference

Mr. Skouras charged there was "malicious interference" with the Skouras contract and that "pressure and inducement" was brought to bear on the distributor to break the agreement.

The issue involved, as observers see it, is one of clearance, and raises the question whether the 81st Street is in the same zone as the Riverside and Nemo. RKO maintains they are in different zones.

From Chicago comes word that there is little chance that a majority of the distributors will acquiesce in the demands of Balaban & Katz to give their houses in the "C" classification seven days' additional protection, if for no other reason than the arrangement would tie up prints.

B & K, however, has decided to take the extra week of clearance whether distributors agree or not, it is understood, putting its new schedule into effect on November 1.

Exhibitor support in the dispute is divided along lines of conflicting interest, with those in the "C" classification favoring the B. & K. proposal. However, not until the major circuits decide what will work out best will the matter be settled completely. There was reported a possibility that the existing schedule, in force for the last eight years, may be discarded.

Kansas City independents still were awaiting action on their demands for a new clearance schedule. It was learned that local managers had received word from their home offices that the matter would have to be settled locally. The independents now are reported disposed to wait until selling begins.

Briskin Quits Post Sooner Than Planned

Samuel J. Briskin, general manager of the Columbia studio, left his post on the Hollywood lot last Friday instead of October 15 as he had planned at the time he tendered his resignation. The earlier date was agreed on in order to allow Mr. Briskin to take a vacation before making another connection.

"Reports of a disagreement are unfounded," Mr. Briskin said. "I am leaving Columbia with the kindliest feeling toward each and every one of my associates. Other opportunities, however, make it advantageous for me at this time to retire from Columbia and after a rest I will announce my new connections."

William Perlberg, casting director, has been made assistant to Harry Cohn, and will take over a part of Mr. Briskin's former duties, including the physical handling of the studio. Robert North, associate producer, will take over the production supervision of the program pictures and of the "B" product.

Mr. Perlberg will probably continue to supervise the casting department, although some of his former duties will be handled by Robert Mayo, assistant casting director.

It is understood Mr. Cohn plans further changes to fill the gap caused by Mr. Briskin's resignation.

Reinhardt Film to Open as Scheduled

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Bros., announced this week on his return to New York from Hollywood that the Max Reinhardt production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" would open definitely at the Hollywood on Broadway on October 9th.

"We feel that 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' is our most important contribution to pictures in the history of our studio," said Mr. Warner, "and we therefore decided that it should have its world premiere and New York showing in the finest and newest Warner theatre there."

Pathe Film Declares 87 1-2 Cents Dividend

Pathe Film Corporation has declared a dividend of $.87½ per share on its $7 cumulative convertible preferred stock, payable October 1 to stockholders of record September 23.

This is the initial dividend of the new company and covers the period from the date of incorporation in August up to the present time and is on the basis of a dividend of $7 per share per annum.

Novelties Ready for Mickey Mouse Birthday

The seventh birthday celebration of Mickey Mouse, which gets under way the week of September 28th, will be ushered in with a full array of exploitation novelties now being prepared for exhibitors everywhere.

In addition to the special two-color stickers, special buttons, masks, balloons, 40 x 60's, as well as a full array of 8 x 10 scene stills along with a special set of birthday stills are now ready at the United Artists exchanges.

In the meantime the exchanges are busy re-routing prints of all the Walt Disney cartoons in order to take care of circuit and independent bookings during the birthday week.

New License Test Case Up Monday

A new test case has been instituted by License Commissioner Paul Moss to determine whether actors' agents shall be licensed by the city of New York, which necessitates bonding and fingerprinting. A hearing is set for next Monday in the magistrate's court, central term, when William Schilling will be arranged. A previous test case started by the commissioner to require licensing of all agents was dismissed recently in the special sessions court of New York.

Lincoln Short Ready

"The Perfect Tribute," a special short subject produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and commemorating Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, has been completed and will have a simultaneous release throughout the country on September 22, the day on which President Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation. Charles "Chic" Sales has the title role in the film, which was directed by Edward Sloman, and the cast includes William V. Mong, Oscar Apfel, Leila McIntyre, William Henry and Walter Brennan.

Tom Mix Resuming Air Series

Tom Mix Adventures, taken from the life and screen career of the cowboy, will return to the air for the third successive season starting September 30 under the sponsorship of the Ralston Purina Co. The program will be heard each Monday, Wednesday and Friday evening over the National Broadcasting Co. network.

Fight Pictures Set

The official fight pictures of the coming Max Baer-Joe Louis fight, September 24, at the Yankee Stadium, will be shown at the majority of the RKO theatres in New York the day after the fight.

MPTOA to Name Convention City

A date for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America's next convention as well as one for the next meeting of its board of directors is included among the organization matters expected to be cleared up by president Ed Kuykendall during his present short stay in New York.

Mr. Kuykendall had little to say for publication pending conferences at the group's headquarters, but he did mention that a number of ideas had accumulated from the field relative to a voluntary industry code for the exhibition industry. Nothing has been done by way of analyzing these ideas, however, he continued.

On the other hand, Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, said in St. Louis, that he expects the directors of the organization to be called to Chicago shortly by Mr. Kuykendall and that St. Louis will then be named as the scene of the next convention.

Meanwhile, state exhibitor associations in the field continue active. In Massachusetts a new list of officers will be put into nomination at a meeting of the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, Inc., to be held late this month. The election is to take place next month when a new president will be chosen to fill the vacancy caused by the death of George Giles.

In Kansas City A. J. Simmons, Lamar, Mo., exhibitor and member of the Kansas Motion Picture Theatre Association, has revealed that plans are under way for a regional meeting for exhibitors of southwestern Missouri and southeastern Kansas to be held in October. It is expected some thirty men will attend the gathering which will be held at Lamar, Carthage or Joplin.

The purpose of the meeting will be to get small town exhibitors together to discuss contracts, the sales tax and other current issues.

In New York product lineups for 1935-36 were discussed recently at a meeting of the Independent Theatre Owners of America at which John Benas was the principal speaker. Harry Brandt and Maurice Fleischman reported on the operators' situation and Bernard S. Deutsch, president of the Board of Aldermen, spoke on the forthcoming American Jewish Congress.

Radio Net Opens "Big Broadcast"

A coast-to-coast radio hookup over the National Broadcasting Company's network inaugurated the opening of Paramount's "Big Broadcast of 1936" simultaneously in the Paramount theatre in Los Angeles and on Broadway in New York last Saturday.

An array of Hollywood talent was the feature of the program, with Bing Crosby, Joe Penner, Ethel Merman, Frances Langford and Charles Ruggles heading the list, also Willie Howard, Joe Morrison, Benny Baker, Carl Brisson, Mary Boland.

Instrumental music for the program was supplied under the supervision of Nathaniel Finston, who recently resigned from his post of Paramount's music director.

Lucky Strike sponsored the program.

WILLIAM FOX AGAIN IN FILM COURT LIMELIGHT

Ordered to Answer Questions in One Case, Released from Examination in Another

Ordered by one court to answer all questions in connection with litigation instituted by the Fox Film companies, and released by another from questioning in a $300,000 judgment suit of the Capital Company of California, William Fox continued to hold the spotlight as principal in motion picture legal actions this week.

It was learned also that while Fox Theatres Corporation showed a loss of $62,175 for the six months ending June 30th, the balance sheet includes an item of $7,500,000, which is estimated by the receivers as the probable amount they will recover in the suit brought against Mr. Fox by Fox Theatres Corporation.

A development in the action of the William Fox interests seeking to prevent operation of the Twentieth Century-Fox merger was that attorneys planned to make the Chase National Bank and its officers co-defendants in the suit which is pending in the New York supreme court.

Fox Fights Examination

On application of William B. Atkinson, ancillary receiver for the Fox Theatres Corporation, who sued William and Eva Fox and others in an effort to determine what became of the corporation's assets during the time William Fox was head of the Fox companies, Judge Meier Steinbrink in the New York supreme court decided that Mr. Fox must disclose all requested information regardless of complications with other suits pending.

Mr. Fox applied for an order staying Fox Film Corporation and the receivers of Fox Theatres from examining him before trial of actions brought by both complainants. He also asked that if his application for a stay were denied that the court direct the plaintiffs to confine their examination to matters not relevant to the issues involved in a third action brought against him by the Chicago Title & Trust Company, which seeks to recover $1,000,000 as a result of an alleged default in the guaranteed redemption of Roxy Theatre stock. He charged that the plaintiffs were seeking information to use against him in one or the other of the pending cases, and that in any event he be excused from testifying until after the trial of the stock redemption case.

Judge Steinbrink denied all of Mr. Fox's applications and granted the application of Mr. Atkinson, directing Mr. Fox to testify fully.

Testimony Resumed

The examinations to which Mr. Fox objected were begun at Mineola, N. Y., last July, and at that time his counsel refused to permit him to answer questions regarding the Roxy theatre deal. Testimony in that case was resumed this week before Referee Sol M. Stroock with Saul E. Rogers, former general counsel of Fox Film, on the stand for two successive days.

Federal Judge Robert B. Patterson in New York in voiding a subpoena served on Mr. Fox at Atlantic City, N. J., in the Capital Company suit, ruled that the distance between two points for the purpose of serving the order must be the shortest way of travel, and not by airplane. The decision was reached after weighty research in the number of miles between the court house in New York City and the Hotel Claridge in Atlantic City, where Mr. Fox was on his physician's orders.

The Capital Company, of San Francisco, wanted to examine Mr. Fox in supplementary proceedings in connection with a confessed judgment for $297,412.91 on a San Francisco theatre rental. Thus far the Capital Company has collected $477.34 from an account in the Bankers Trust Company.

Attorneys for Mrs. Eva Fox in filing an amended complaint in the action against the Twentieth Century-Fox merger will charge the completed reorganization is in violation of court order, and will include Chase National Bank in the suit and the application to examine the merging interests before trial. Application for that right has been delayed for another week.

Fox Theatres' Half-Year Net

For the six months ending June 30, Fox Theatres Corporation showed a net profit of $20,023 and cash on hand totals $645,410, it is shown in a report filed by Milton C. Weisman, the receiver. Loss after depreciation, amortization, bad debts and other allowances was $62,175. Total assets of $17,325,469 are valued by the receiver at $9,583,737.

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe set October 2 as the date for a hearing on applications for allowances of services by attorneys, creditors' committees, trustees and others who participated in the reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses. Applications are to be filed by September 30. The maximum amount of $500,000 has been set aside for such expenses under the reorganization plan.

Irving Trust Company, as trustee for Fox Metropolitan, filed objections to the claim of the Emblem Holding Corporation for $885,000 on the lease of the Stratford theatre, Brooklyn. The claim is based on a 19-year period at a rental of $45,000 a year. Asking disallowance of the claim, counsel argued that under the bankruptcy laws claims for rent are limited to three years following surrender of the lease.

Final hearing and dismissal from bankruptcy of Fox West Coast was set for Wednesday in Los Angeles before Referee Samuel McNabb.

Fox West Coast has given J. J. Sullivan, chief film buyer, and Charles Buckley, legal department head, new five-year contracts as vice-presidents. Contracts for a similar period are being prepared for Arch Bowles, San Francisco; Elmer Rhoden, Kansas City; H. J. Fitzgerald, Milwaukee; Rick Ricketson, Denver. The new deals are in fulfillment of a promise made several years ago.

Paramount Holds To Decentralized Theatre Operation

Paramount will not discontinue its present policy of decentralized theatre operation, Motion Picture Daily says, quoting "a high official of the company."

The basis for renewal of partnership and management agreements covering the operation of more than 700 of Paramount's 1,000 theatres will be defined by John E. Otterson, Paramount president, in advance of his departure for Hollywood at the end of this week, it was said. The operating agreements expire September 28 and the policy embracing their renewal will not bring about any radical changes in operation. With the policy once having been set by Mr. Otterson, the negotiations for the drafting of the new pacts with partners and operators will be left to the heads of the Paramount theatre department.

Mr. Otterson returns to Hollywood for an indefinite stay to complete the studio reorganization which has been in progress for several months past. Shortly after his return to New York he will leave for Europe to make a complete survey of Paramount operations abroad, and during this trip the company's foreign policies will be decided. The policy on eastern production by Paramount will also be resolved at a later date.

The impression gained from the official statements is that the major policy at the studio, in Europe and in New York, may involve no radical changes. Particularly does this appear to be true of operations which are showing satisfactory results. Changes of policy on other operations, it is indicated, may be made only after careful study by Mr. Otterson.

Official denial was made by this source that Paramount had discussed any deal which would bring into the company Sam Briskin, whose resignation from Columbia became effective Friday. Likewise, denial was made that negotiations of any kind had been opened with Winfield Sheehan, even for release by Paramount of any product that the former Fox production chief might make independently.

Denial that any new duties in Paramount had been designated to S. A. Lynch was also made.

In the meantime, Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe approved a report of special master John E. Joyce settling the claim of the Bijou Amusement Company against Paramount Pictures, Inc., for $5,000. The Bijou Amusement Company originally filed a claim for $40,265 allegedly due on a lease on the Kettler, West Palm Beach, Fla.

Astoria Preview Draws Many Opinion Cards

Following the special preview of "Red Salute" last week at the Triboro Theatre, Astoria, L. I., United Artist home office officials claim an unprecedented number of opinion cards were received. The official count, it is claimed, showed 1528 replies received and since there were but 2,800 patrons present at the preview of the Reliance picture, this was considered a remarkable percentage of returned cards.

BRITISH GET "JITTERS" WHEN THEY HEAR OF TELEVISION THEATRE TESTS

Two More Systems Reported Planning Early Experiments in England; Baird Executive Tries to Reassure Movie Exhibitors

England is moving to be the first country in the world to bring television to the motion picture theatre. And, although the television laboratory of the inventor is one place and the theatre screen is another, plans have already been worked out between British television interests and film interests to install the medium as a test of "great secrecy" in the Dominion theatre, London.

On the other hand, even David Sarnoff, RCA's president, and heretofore one of the country's leading optimists on the proximity of television's practicability, said in New York this week that the research results of the scientists still must be brought out of the laboratory and into the field.

There are, however, new television developments under way in California, where an exhibition was held, and in Paris, London and Berlin.

British on "Ground Floor"

That English exhibitors will be in "on the ground floor" if, when and as television is introduced in that country, was announced this week by the United States Department of Commerce in disclosing a report submitted to Washington by Henry E. Stebbins, assistant Commerce Department trade commissioner at London.

The introduction of television in England, originally scheduled for this fall, is now seen delayed until next March, the report declared.

In the United States, however, television's box office possibilities are seen as being too far in the future to even bring them under discussion.

Under the present plans of the British Broadcasting Company, London, two television transmitters are to be erected in the Alexandra Palace by Baird Television Company, controlled by Gaumont British, and Electrical and Musical Industries, respectively, from which picture programs will be disseminated in a test to determine which, if either, of the two systems should be permanently adopted.

Two Other Systems Near Tests

However, there are at least two other systems nearing public tests in England, both of which are claimed by their backers to be superior to either of those now under test, and indications are that one or both will be offered for comparison against whichever is selected by the B.B.C. Meanwhile, there is some difference of opinion whether a receiver can be produced which will pick up both the Baird and the EMI programs, one of which uses 240 and the other 405 "lines."

Announcement of the proposed introduction of television in England gave the British exhibitors the "jitters," according to U. S. Commissioner Stebbin's report, in which he said: "The motion picture exhibitors, traditionally in a state of nerves over difficulties real or imaginary, had worked themselves into a regular breakdown at the prospect of television."

To combat this, the Baird company sent its technical director to address the exhibitors at a recent meeting, during which he explained that equipment has been developed which will enable the picking up of an event as it occurs to be transmitted on short waves to the main station and there sent out on the television frequency to be picked up by receivers in the theatre "and projected by intermediate projection process to the full-size screen."

"Good television pictures in one form or another will be shown in London cinemas before the end of the year," he said. "They will show results of fair entertainment value, and should attract the public from this point of view rather than from the point of novelty, or from the fact that television is a matter of the moment. I think I am right in saying that within two years from now several London cinemas will be taking regular television items in their programs.

"I am convinced that even if programs for the home were made really attractive the average member of a family will still want to go out to his local cinema or theatre and laugh and cry and enjoy himself in common with many hundreds of others.

"Television in the cinema is in its experimental form now, but it is gradually developing to become a feature on the program. The cinema need have no fear of television in the home as regards reducing box-office receipts."

Program Called Determinant

The whole success of television depends upon the single factor of program, in the opinion of Andrew C. Cruse, chief of the electrical division of the Department of Commerce, who recently made a personal tour of Europe to study television development.

Unless an adequate supply of entertaining features is presented, the most efficient equipment will be valueless, he added. Any regular program service of more than a few minutes' duration will be forced, Mr. Cruse believes, to rely on motion pictures for much of its material, and will have to secure its films from the regular supply since the expense of producing pictures especially for television would be prohibitive.

On the other hand, it is equally certain that difficulties would be encountered in securing enough "events" to make possible a daily presentation of current matters, while the cost and time of rehearsing is seen as a drawback to any program service of "live talent" features.

Thus, according to the chief of the United States electrical division, British television interests have certain important problems to solve and he warns that "we in the United States can learn many valuable lessons, which may later save us many dollars, by patiently watching this development of the British television picture."

But Investigators and Executives in America Say Many Corners Have Yet To Be Turned; Many Obstacles Are Cited

Television, so long "just around the corner," as predicted by experts in this country, is not there any more, according to the findings of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, which this week sent William Engle, New York World-Telegram staff writer, to visit the laboratories and executive offices of the electric and radio interests sponsoring television research.

Television, commercially feasible, and comparable to motion pictures in the reproduction of images in the home, is just around a great many corners, some of them a good trot away, Mr. Engle found.

True, splendid progress has been made in the last few years, David Sarnoff told Mr. Engle, and televised pictures are better than when Helen Morgan's piano sitting was projecting into New York ether, but there are catches, too.

Mr. Engle found: "It costs much. And the pictures are small. And the televisors can not zip the pictures out across the penthouses and through the network of high tension lines more than 25 miles—usually not more than 15 miles.

Still, Mr. Sarnoff said, there is hope of turning that last corner some time, and R. C. A., as announced months ago, has begun a program of endeavor to reach that end. The program is going to cost $1,000,000 and continue for 15 months.

"To say it simply and correctly," Reporter Engle declared, "television still is a laboratory pet or a novelty in your drawing-room, and when it is going to be anything else no one knows."

Said John Mills, author of "Signals and Speech in Electrical Communication," head of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, and, in the opinion of Mr. Engle, one of its best authorities on television:

"The experiments of recent years have produced a greater appreciation of television's problems and a more restrained optimism than was common to public or press in the first part of this decade."

Obstacles Called Great

Said Orestes H. Caldwell, former editor of Electronics:

"I do not foresee television as an entertainment in the home at once. But I do believe that such progress will be made that this cannot long be delayed."

The obstacles, however, are so towering that the engineers have good right to lie awake at night.

"Consider merely this," Mr. Mills suggested. "To send a 240-line image—240 lines up and 240 lines sideways—you must transmit to the squares of the receiving set 57,600 bits of information. Because of the limitation of the permanence of vision you must send 20 images a second, so that it means 152,000 bits of information to be transmitted per second," Mr. Mills added, causing Reporter Engle to observe: "That makes it cost a lot even to get started. That requires installation of elaborate equipment. That also makes the television station obtain facilities for transmitting on a band of frequencies of 576,000 cycles and that is equivalent to the band which would be required by 57 non-interfering broadcasting stations.

"It takes some money to do that, with everyone else in town wanting to start something on the few short waves that are left."

One-Sixtieth of Film Information

When the technicians talk about sending pictorial information through the air, Mr. Mills said, they cannot substitute the words clarity or detail. They mean both, that pictorial information.

"So television today conveys only one-sixtieth of the pictorial information which a good movie conveys."

Mr. Sarnoff, nevertheless, points out:

"Our research and technical progress may be judged by the fact that upon a laboratory basis we have produced a 343-line picture, as against the crude 30-line television picture of several years ago. The picture frequency of the earlier system was about 12 per second. This has now been raised to the equivalent of 60 per second."

California Development

The California development, reported from San Diego by the news press, told how "a tiny dot of light began to move slowly in wide arcs across a square silver screen. It moved faster and faster until the dot became a line, the line became a series of lines, and, finally, the streaks merged into an almost solid field of light. In the darkened room, only the screen and the flashing lights from the television transmitter were visible. Then a face appeared on the screen, at first whirling like a figure on a merry-go-round, then steadying into a firm outline of the face of A. J. Cohen, director of the plant."

Rather than becoming an active competitor with present film companies, Mr. Cohen believes the two related industries will be able to combine profitably, with the motion pictures reaching even more people than is possible at present.

Doubts have been expressed regarding the possibility of collecting the "admission price" on such broadcast movies, but Mr. Cohen was said to have the answer to that, too.

"We'll put on meters, like a gas meter, and the machines will run only for a certain regulated period before they must be restarted with another coin."

The second important division of television which Mr. Cohen demonstrated was the television telephone.

"Expense of these sets at present is prohibitive to private use," Mr. Cohen observed, "but we expect shortly to establish plants which may be used between principal cities much in the manner of a pay telephone."

However, commercial expansion of the television program will be impossible until the Federal Radio Commission grants permission for broadcasts, Mr. Cohen added, but this is expected within the next two years. At present the commission, feeling television still is too much of an infant to be freed commercially, will grant licenses only for experimental broadcasts."

And from Paris came another press dispatch, that the French will start witnessing television performances next month if present television plans of Georges Mandel, radio-sympathizing Communications Minister materialize.

Mr. Mandel was said to have placed four television circuits in phone cable which ties up the new 60-120 kilowatt station at Villebon, Paris suburb, with town studios. This outlet has already been inaugurated and will be the main state broadcasting unit for Paris from now on.

Television plans for immediate future are connected with Eiffel Tower, the first French station to exist and still a pioneer. At present 60 line images are broadcast from Tower once a week, for a few fans, on 200 meter wavelength.

By the end of September, Mr. Mandel was said to have promised this equipment will be changed, and the Tower will be able to send out 180-line wireless flickers on the 7-meter band, which promised infinitely better results.

Disappointment in London

From London, L. Marsland Gander, European newspaper correspondent, reported to the New York Times, that at Europe's outstanding radio exhibition, held in London, great disappointment was expressed because there was no television demonstration, either of pictures or equipment.

On the other hand, at the annual radio exhibition in Berlin, Mr. Gander reported no secret was made of television. A large, darkened hall was entirely filled with working television sets. But it appeared that technically Germany is behind Britain.

Mr. Gander continued:

"The B. B. C. decision to use two separate standards in alternate transmissions is being much criticized in Britain. It is widely maintained that simplification, not complication, is needed at the outset. Germany certainly will not be worried by this particular problem, but her present 180-line pictures cannot be considered satisfactory.

"Moreover, Germany is clinging to the intermediate film method of reproduction. In England recently great success has been achieved by the direct pick-up of the 'electric eye'. This is a great simplification,

"Hitherto the German television service has been received only by laboratories and a few specially privileged persons. Commercial receivers were, however, actually on view at the exhibition, and in future the average householder may, if he wishes, receive television."

Among the firms demonstrating television at Berlin's radio exhibition were Telefunken Loewe, Lorenz, Fernseh and TeKade. Of these organizations only TeKade was showing anything but cathode ray reception, and all the cathode ray pictures were reproduced on the end of the tube itself, the average size of picture being about eight by seven inches. The E. M. I. Co. in London is known to be projecting a picture from a cathode ray tube to a screen.

Flicker Cited

Fernseh were showing a 320-line picture from film and the sharpness of definition was reported by Correspondent Gander to be remarkable. It was generally described as "better than the home cinema." But there was some flicker. On the other hand the Loewe company seemed to have overcome flicker with their interlaced scanning on the 180-line standard at 50 pictures per second against the usual 25. The definition was, however, not comparable to the Fernseh 320-line picture.

Another interesting point described by Mr. Gander was that the TeKade mirror screw receiver appeared to give a higher definition than would be suggested by the number of lines used. For instance, a 90-line picture looked almost like a 180-line picture, but it seemed to lack brilliance.

In large-picture television the most interesting exhibit," in Mr. Gander's opinion, "was the Karolus screen, which consists of 10,000 small electric light bulbs giving a 100-line picture on a screen approximately six and one-half feet square. Close-ups were at a distance extremely effective, but one would not expect the screen to handle great detail; in its present form it is not a competitor of the cinema."

German Postoffice Exhibit

The German postoffice, which has instituted public televiewing rooms throughout Berlin for the popularization of the new science of radio-sight, had an exhibit illustrating the improvement in reception from the 30-line to the 180-line standard. "Germany," continued reporter Gander, "is showing every determination to be first in the television race. The cheapest German television set, by the way, is $330 and the average price appears to be about $600.

New Kind of Output Tube

A new type of output tube, the Harries valve, was shown, which, it is contended, gives twice as much output as the usual pentode amplifier tube. Similar tubes are to be designed for television and microwave reception.

In Berlin it was noticeable that tubes have lost their pins in order to reduce capacity effects for television. There were, however, few short-wave sets and practically no radiogramophones. The most popular receiver is still the two-tube "people's set." It costs $30 and is made to an identical specification at the order of the government by all manufacturers. The object is, of course, to enable the German worker to hear the voices of his rulers. Already 1,900,000 of these sets are in use and Dr. Goebbels has just ordered the manufacturers to make another 1,000,000.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Many and varied, humorous and otherwise, have been the stories and anecdotes about Will Rogers passed on to this department since the "old man" went west. Typical, but until now never disclosed, is the yarn from Hollywood's Julius Klein, formerly special assistant to Carl Laemmle at Universal City, a newspaperman with an exciting career, and now engaged in completing the manuscript of his new book, "Sir Roger Casement."

It was some time in 1933, shortly after Will returned from his trip to England, that the telephone wires at his Beverly Hills homestead went dead. A trouble-shooter was called, and Will interested himself in his work. When the telephone had been set in order Will was suddenly struck with an idea. He scratched his chin meditatively, and, cocking one eye at the wire-puller, asked:

"D'ya think I ken git London on that there contraption?"

"Of course," replied the repair man.

"Would it be askin' too much of the telephone company to let me talk to Buckingham Palace?"

"Why, no, I don't think so."

"Well, if it ain't too much trouble, try and git me King George, and no wrong numbers for a change."

With some trepidation, the repair man put through the call, and shortly Will Rogers was talking to King George. What the King said no one but His Majesty will ever know, but Will spoke perfectly at ease, telling him, in true "Blarney," that since this was his first Trans-Atlantic telephone call, he could think of no better use to put it to, than to call up His Majesty and thank him for his hospitality while Will was in London.

"An' jest think of it, Your Majesty," concluded Will, dropping into his venacular, "here I am in Beverly Hills, California, callin' you up, an' I ain't reversin' the charges, neither."

Civilization triumphs: One by one our modern gadgets have invaded the beautiful and tranquil South Sea island of Papeete. The primeval peace of the place was disturbed, in turn, by the electric light, the automobile, the filling station, telephone, radio and movie. Last week the process reached its logical conclusion: a beauty parlor was started.

Seegar Haevilin, who headquarters in the RCA Building towering above Rockefeller Centre, relates the tale about a railroad incident that happened the other day when he found himself in one of those combination club and dining cars, where from his seat he could see that the white-coated dark-skinned waiter who took the orders removed his coat upon entering the kitchen and doubled in brass as chef.

In the course of culinary events, he delivered some lamb chops to an elderly lady. She called him back and complained that they were not well done, as she had ordered.

"Yessim," said the waiter. "I'll tell de chef." He picked up the plate, walked to the door of the kitchen. "De ordah was for de chops to be well done," he shouted as he disappeared.

A few seconds later out he popped to report that the chops would be cooked some more. Then dogged back to do the cooking. Finally he shouted, "Waitah," slipped into the white coat, and solemnly delivered the dish. "De chef done fix 'em madam," he said.

"Did you call me, sir?" he asked.

"No—Why?" asked Blore.

"Because I thought I heard you call Piccolino."

"I did," said the comedian.

"Well," replied the waiter, "That's my name."

And he probably can't even dance it!

After carefully looking into the matter, Jack Moffitt, of the Kansas City Star, reports that "Little Miss Nuisance," to be made by Metro, isn't a story about a club woman who is out to investigate block booking.

Will some well informed reader please accept a pair of free tickets to the Capitol theatre on Broadway for doing the management the very important favor of being first to inform the theatre just what nation, if any, owns the tiny dot of real estate in the South Pacific Ocean known as "Pitcairn Island."

Does any nation own, or control it?

The management has searched the public library, and has queried the Department of State at Washington, but can get no authoritative answer.

Some 150 years ago the island was an uncharted, unknown spot. Eight mutineers of the British warship "His Majesty's Bounty," found refuge against British laws there after they had scuttled the ship. Today it boasts a population of 52 families, all bearing the names of four ancestors. For the first time in its history, motion picture scenes were made of it, a few months ago, and these were shown the other day as a short subject at the Capitol.

So romantic and strange are the scenes that invariably audience reaction results in the demand to know what nation owns it. Ships seldom pass the island, and only once every few years does one stop there. Local and radio bulletins, posted on a tree trunk, provide the news. Trees, fish and fields, provide food and shelter. The natives are a mixture of English and Polynesian.

Although Richard Boleslawski is one of the most highly paid directors of motion pictures, he limits himself to one dollar a day for spending money and packs his lunch to the studio when he is working.

Rare indeed is the occasion when the motion picture bows to the theatre of the stage.

It was planned to have Metro's "Broadway Melody of 1936" open at New York's Capitol theatre last Thursday evening at exactly the same time as the new stage musical comedy, "At Home Abroad," opened across the street on busy Broadway at the Winter Garden. The dual premiere was to be Broadway's tribute to Eleanor Powell, who stars both in the stage show and in the film.

It was to be an unprecedented bit of Broadway gone sentimental—giving its biggest hand, or both hands, to a little girl who is skyrocketing to fame.

However, the plan had to be changed. Scores of friends of Miss Powell, and many others, complained that they "must' attend both premieres and could not if they were to be simultaneous. Also, the police were afraid that the simultaneous openings opposite each other on Broadway would paralyze traffic. So the Capitol, bowing, advanced its opening to Wednesday evening.

Darryl Zanuck and Alice Brady had never met each other either socially or in business, a rarity for such persons in their high Hollywood positions. Taking advantage of his directorial participation in "Metropolitan," the Lawrence Tibbett picture with Miss Brady which Mr. Zanuck is personally producing for 20th Century-Fox Film, Mr. Boleslawski contrived a novel if not unique method of bringing the two face to face. At the conclusion of a scene, "Boley" ordered the cameras to keep turning and gave Miss Brady a little speech to say. Next morning Boleslawski, Zanuck and other Fox executives gathered in a private studio projection room to witness the previous day's rushes. At the conclusion of these, Miss Brady appeared on the screen and said: "How do you do, Mr. Zanuck. I've wanted to meet you for some time, but it seems our paths never crossed at the right moment. I want to thank you for the nice things you have said about my earlier scenes in the picture. And we really must meet in person some time."

Downtown Houses Show a Decrease

A gradual decline in the number of downtown theatres and an increase in the outlying houses is reflected in figures compiled in the city tax commissioner's office disclosing that Milwaukee's main artery of commerce, Wisconsin avenue, from North Eighth street to Lake Michigan, has shrunk to a $53,000,000 thoroughfare.

Five years ago this street was assessed over the same stretch at more than $75,000,000 and its market value was estimated at the time by the tax commissioner at $100,000,000. During this period only one new house, the Warner, which opened in May, 1931, was erected. The Warner theatre building is assessed this year at $1,279,000.

While the assessed valuation represents a $2,000,000 decline placed on the same area in 1934, most of the drop was sustained by properties east of the Milwaukeee river. All of Milwaukee's theatres, with the exception of the Pabst, are located in the area west of the river up to North Sixth street, indicating that they have had a hand in helping to preserve property values in this section.

In the past ten-year period, Milwaukee has had only two new houses erected in this downtown area—the Warner and the Riverside. The Empire building, housing the latter theatre, has been assessed at $2,050,000. During this same decade four downtown theatres, not including the Butterfly, which was razed to make room for the Warner, have been dissolved. The Garrick, Crystal and Empress sites are parking lots, while the old Merrill and Majestic have been remodeled into store buildings.

Of the remaining thirteen downtown theatres, including the Pabst and Davidson, which are primarily legitimate theatres, six are dark. However, it is quite probable that all will again be operating before snow flies.

Although the last five years has seen little construction of neighborhood houses in Milwaukee, the past six months indicates that expansion is being made in that direction. The Avalon was the last neighborhood house to be erected until the Times made its bow on the city's west side this summer. Slated for fall opening is the Sherman, another new neighborhood house, while the Avenue, on the city's south side, is being completely rebuilt and will emerge as the new Aragon in September.

Writer Finds British Screen Stories Better

British writers are having an unprecedented opportunity for development, in the opinion of W. P. Lipscomb, on his return recently from a vacation in England. Heretofore comparatively little attention has been paid to stories by producers, said Mr. Lipscomb, but during the past two years more and more importance has been attached to scenarios.

"Hollywood will directly benefit from this situation," he said, "in that a healthy competition among writers has grown, and an exchange of ideas and technique will ultimately better the product of both countries."

BRITISH DISTRIBUTORS ISSUE NEW ULTIMATUM ON BOOKING CIRCUITS

Renters' Society Now Demands Proof of Ownership of Majority Control, Financial and Voting, of Theatre Company

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

Rumors were plentiful in Wardour Street a few days ago that the Kinematograph Renters' Society intended to refuse recognition to the recent deal whereby the London super-cinemas of H&G Kinemas, Ltd., passed into the control of Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, Ltd. These stories are neither contradicted nor supported by an official statement since issued by the Society which, omitting all reference to GB-H&G, enunciates in more detailed terms the policy of opposition to booking circuits long since laid down by distributors.

It is thought significant that this statement should be issued at a time when the GB-H & G deal is up for consideration, and that it should indicate a decided increase in the rigor of the KRS attitude. Also wearing the appearance of more than coincidence is the fact that consideration of the G.B.-H & G matter has been adjourned and will be again considered, inevitably, on the basis of policy now enunciated by the KRS.

This policy is new to the extent that, dropping the hallowed phrase about proof of "substantial financial interest" being required of any one wanting to book for a theatre, the KRS now definitely asks for proof of ownership. Its policy is expressed as follows:

"Where an exhibitor (a company or individual) or a booking agent (a company or individual) undertakes the booking of films for another exhibitor, this will be considered a booking combine and in contravention of the Society's policy unless the exhibitor or booking agent has acquired a majority control (financial and voting) of the share capital of the company holding the cinema being booked for."

This is explicit enough, but the official statement also goes on to say that the statement "is intended for general guidance and not as indicating that there may not be other circumstances or conditions which, in the opinion of Renters, would constitute a booking combine."

Society to Decide

It also says:

"The Society expressly reserves to itself the right to examine and decide upon any case in which, though coming within the above definition, it appears that

(a) the share capital of the company controlling the cinema or cinemas being booked is merely nominal;

(b) the management and operation of the cinema is in the hands of one exhibitor and the booking of the films is in the hands of another exhibitor or booking agent;

and in other cases where it appears to the Society that any arrangements are in substance a booking combine."

Inevitably the principles so forcibly enunciated by the KRS will be compared with the facts of the recent Gaumont acquisition of the Hyams theatres.

Absolute Control a Prerequisite

Gaumont-British originally planned an investment in H&G (and also in Union Cinemas) as part of a deal whereby, in a booking sense, these theatres would have become part of the G-B circuit. KRS members refused to trade. G-B next announced acquisition of the H&G halls by a new subsidiary company, Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, Ltd., with a capital of £400,000 ($2,000,000) and controlled by Gaumont-British Picture Corporation, Ltd.

As regards this new company, it is obvious that the KRS will insist on being satisfied that the G-B parent company's control is absolute; if the fifty-fifty split of directors with the old H&G company represents an equal division of control between those interests and G-B, then presumably the KRS again will refuse recognition.

Furthermore, the almost unlimited freedom of further action which the Society reserves to itself may very well be exercised under the clause covering theatres owned by one exhibitor and booked by another. The H&G theatres, it has been announced, will continue under the management of the Hyams brothers.

Sweeping Changes Possible

Altogether, the more closely one examines the KRS pronouncement, the more one's conviction grows that it has been drafted to meet this special case of the acquisition of H&G by G-B and to meet it by all means available.

It is true that Frank Hill, secretary of the KRS, has stressed his intention of instigating proceedings impartially and universally, and it is also probably true that G-B will not be the only ones to feel the strength of the organized distributors, but it means, nevertheless, that the new policy has arisen directly out of the second G-B attempt to collect H&G, and to that extent it is permissible to discount the disquiet which in some quarters is almost panic caused by the KRS statements. It remains a fact that a trade situation has been created containing possibilities of sweeping changes in existing affiliations.

Other Booking Units

Aside from the recognized circuits composed of theatres owned or controlled by a single company, of which G-B and ABC are typical examples, there have developed in the United Kingdom market quite a number of other theatre groups in which unity in booking by no means implies unity of ownership. A notable instance is the Scottish circuit of over 40 theatres booked by A. B. King, the stalwart of the recent anti-tax campaign; here there are various proprietorships. There are also cases of circuits created by enterprising individuals who, raising the money for each enterprise locally, may "control" none of the theatres but act as the expert link between them.

Decision Believed to Have Been Drafted to Meet Gaumont-British-Hyams Situation; Other Booking Units a Complication

Mr. Hill's exact words on this aspect of the problem are significant. As quoted by the Cinema they are: "My inquiries are addressed without discrimination, in every case involving a change of booking arrangements." He also speaks of "dozens of cases now under investigation" and of "much research at Somerset House (where British company records are filed) and elsewhere."

Booking Circuits See Hope

Existing booking circuits may take heart at the word "change," with its suggestion that current booking affiliations will not be disturbed, yet it is difficult to see how the KRS, if it decides that the new GB deal clashes with its ruling, can bar GB as a new offender while allowing old offenders to go free. The logical weakness of declaring a practice irregular but condoning it in anyone who has followed it for a number of years must be obvious to various interests and individuals, including the KRS and GB.

Mr. Hill's statement of investigations in progress will also cause surmise. Various stories have gone 'round the trade identifying certain of these cases. One of them indicates the Reed circuit, which occupies the same offices as Paramount Theatres and has personal links with that concern, but A. H. Reed, managing director of Reed Theatres, Ltd. (which controls 12 establishments), declared in the week that he only booked variety from Paramount—which on its renting side is a member of the KRS.

Exhibitors' Association Alarmed

The Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association is showing signs of alarm despite Mr. Hill's assertion that the KRS investigations "are as much to their benefit as to that of the renters, inasmuch as they are designed to protect the trade from collusive arrangements which, in highly competitive areas, must react detrimentally to the independent exhibitor." The London and Home Counties branch of the CEA has approached the General Council with a request for emergency action, including investigation of possible legal action and, if necessary, application to the Government for legislation.

Exhibitor criticism of the KRS is largely on the assertion that theatre investments have been acquired on the basis of "substantial interest" and are now rendered unremunerative by the demand for "ownership control."

Ralph Bromhead, chairman of the London Branch, went on record with the assertion that "if the criterion were adopted for the past, there would be very few of us entitled to book for any theatres at all," and asserted

$3,600,000 IS GAUMONT NET; JARRATT IN U. S.

Buyer for Gaumont-British Circuit Says "Clean" Films Still Make Most Money in England

Gaumont-British Pictures in England, parent of GB Picture Corporation, distributing 16 features on the American market in the new season, disclosed in London this week that net earnings for the past year approximated $3,600,000. The company declared a 7 per cent dividend.

Nine of the 16 negatives on the 1935-36 schedule of GB here will be in New York by November 1st.

As executive in charge of booking the 400 to 450 Gaumont-British theatres in the United Kingdom, in which position he selects the entertainment for some 4,000,000 British cinema patrons every week, Arthur W. Jarratt arrived the other day from London on the S. S. Majestic, prepared to discuss with Hollywood producers the status of the American motion picture in England.

Jarratt's Credo

Recognizing that the product of Hollywood still forms the major portion of the British motion picture theatre program, Mr. Jarratt, according to intimations made by him to London reporters on the eve of his sailing, will, while in California, be guided by the following:

He will not tell them how to make pictures, nor will he "spill a lot of hot air" about the progress of British pictures.

He will advise Hollywood producers that they must pay careful attention to American accents which creep into the wrong places in pictures sent to England. However, he believes that this problem is more one of idiom than accent.

He will admit that Shirley Temple (Fox) is probably the most universally-liked star in England today—as popular as she is in America, and that Greta Garbo (MGM) is limited in her appeal; that George Arliss (Gaumont, United Artists, et al) maintains a very high position, and that Jack Hulbert (Gaumont), "of whom America hardly knows, is a riot every time," quoting a London Evening News interview with Mr. Jarratt, obtained as he sailed.

Too, he will suggest to Hollywood that:

England has had nearly enough costume films,

Clean films still make the most money in the United Kingdom,

Public intelligence is under-rated in too many films,

The story is the most important part of a picture in most circumstances, and

G.B.'s 400-theatre circuit, America's largest film customer in Europe, can make more money with cheery films than gloomy ones.

"But in none of these things," the London News interview concluded, "will Mr. Jarratt be dogmatic."

Arthur A. Lee, vice president and general manager of the GB Corporation, as American distributor of Gaumont British-made product, made the announcement that the parent company had profited on operations during the year by 700,000 pounds, net (approximately $3,600,000).

The British company, explained Mr. Lee's announcement, "produces, distributes, and exhibits pictures; controls Baird Television; manufactures radio sets; and has its own broadcasting station; manufactures its own sound recording and reproducing apparatus: has large film laboratories; and controls an equipment company specializing in theatre supplies.

Its circuit of theatres, in excess of 400, he continued, is the largest in England. G.B. has two modern studios at Islington and Shepherd's Bush. It produces and distributes 52 pictures a year through its own and allied organizations throughout the world. "The GB newsreel, one of the original pioneers in screen journalism, enjoys equal coverage," he added.

First Organized in 1898

To date, with the American company in business less than a year, its pictures have been shown in every important community in every one of the 48 states, according to Mr. Lee.

While the American company celebrates its first anniversary in October, Mr. Lee pointed out that the parent GB company is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, company in the motion picture business. Its origin, through affiliations and acquisitions, dates back to the original Gaumont Company which was organized in Paris in 1898.

Soskin Productions Formed

Soskin Productions, Ltd., has been formed in London with Paul Soskin as managing director and producer, to make five features during the next 18 months at an average cost of $200,000 per picture. Mr. Soskin formerly headed Transatlantic Films, whose shares have been acquired by the new company. He was the producer of "Ten Minute Alibi," for British Lion, and "While Parents Sleep" for United Artists.

Joe E. Brown Sued

On the charges that his unpublished story, "When Homer Comes Marching Home," had been converted without his permission into the picture "Son of a Sailor," Edward A. Lynch of Philadelphia has filed a suit against Joe E. Brown, star of the film, and First National Pictures, Inc., producers of the picture, asking for an injunction and an accounting. Mr. Lynch claims the picture has realized $1,000,000 in receipts and that he has lost not less than $100,000. He also asserts he sent his manuscript to both Warner Brothers and Brown.

Brandt Takes Inwood

Harry Brandt has taken over the Inwood, Forest Hills, L. I., from Morris Kutinsky, making 43 houses now in his circuit.

British Exhibitors Ask Lower Quota

that the effect of the KRS action would be that of "driving the whole of the exhibiting trade into two groups only." Statements that they will sell theatres probably to circuits—are made by a number of exhibitors.

London exhibitors at the same meeting also formulated a policy regarding the suggested revision of the Films Act, deciding unanimously to approach the Board of Trade with a request for reduction of the exhibitors' quota to 10 per cent. The resolution also declared opposition to the suggestion that a minimum cost clause or a "quality" clause for quota films should be added to the Act.

A prominent exponent of the minimum cost clause, Simon Rowson, this week issued as a pamphlet his paper on "The Future of the Films Act," read at the Cardiff CEA Conference. He has embodied replies to various criticisms made of his suggestions and it is of interest that, regarding the suggestion of a reduced exhibitors' quota, he says: "The renter would still be left with a costly liability for making films without any assurance that a market had been reserved in which these films would be sold." The phrase reflects very accurately the differing attitudes to the Films Act of the British producer and the British exhibitor; one wants a guaranteed market, the other a guaranteed margin of British footage over and above that which he is compelled to show.

Proposes "Tribunal of Reference"

Mr. Rowson makes the interesting suggestion that the Advisory Committee to the Board of Trade, appointed for the purpose of assisting the administration of that measure, should become "a tribunal of reference."

The Advisory Committee is a statutory body and there will be criticism of the suggestion that it should handle trade problems, but the need of some body representative of all sections of the industry was never more acute than now. The advisory committee consists of four exhibitors, two producers, two distributors and five non-trade members.

Twentieth Century-Fox is considering as a possibility the production in London of pictures for distribution on the Continent, according to Robert T. Kane, who will be in charge here.

In the interim British plans are definite at 10 pictures ultimately a year, each to cost $500,000 and each to be penciled in the American releasing schedule. "St. Joan," stage play by George Bernard Shaw, will be the first with Elisabeth Bergner starred.

The Big Broadcast of 1936

Comedy, Drama, Music

In star name and feature personality values alone, this picture should occasion a showman's holiday. If personalities, names representative of every phase of the art of amusement, the scope of which stretches from the sweet singing Vienna Boys' Choir to slap-'em-around comedians and runs a glittering gamut of singing, dancing, romantic, dramatic comic and down through the list of entertainment artists, mean anything, the mere publishing of the list should show what a wealth of entertainment value the exhibitor has at hand.

The names are drawn from every field of entertainment endeavor—screen, stage, both legitimate and vaudeville, radio, the concert platform, night clubs and dance halls. In the list there is some one whom almost everybody in the world that responds to the entertainment urge has either seen or heard. While these are by no means all that the picture offers to inspire both showmanship and patron attention, they are the dominating interest stimulating factors.

"The Big Broadcast" is a big entertainment feature. While it culminates in a super-vaudeville show, it is not an episodic feature. Though it encompasses much, it is motivated by a coherent and well continued comedy premised story. Even without the added feature values, that story could stand on its own feet as novel entertainment. The quality, hokum from start to finish, devotes itself solely to being amusing, using a smart mixture of old and new stuff which the public has demonstrated its appreciation, and doesn't hesitate to ring in a wild and wooly chase together with the U. S. Navy for a flag waving finale.

Jack Oakie and Henry Wadsworth, owners of a wheezy radio station, are going broke fast. Comes George Burns, inventor of a television apparatus that can pick up anyone, anything, anywhere and any time, and project it on a screen. Hilariously abetted by Gracie Allen, the radiolites lose no time in grabbing this gift from heaven. They can neither finance nor market their contraption until they run slambang into Ysobel, countess of a mythical kingdom. Taking a great shine to the quartet and their invention, she lures them to her domain under the pretext that she will provide the necessary dough.

Nobody has counted upon the wily and jealous prime minister, Gordonio, who quickly has the gang on the spot and very much in danger of losing their lives. The only way they can forestall execution is by entertaining the countess with their odd set. Through this appear all the entertainers as listed in the cast, performing their specialties. While entertaining the regal lady, they also manage to broadcast the news of their predicament. Comes the navy to rescue them and when they are safely home, the quartet wins the grand prize for providing the best entertainment program of the year.

No hints should be necessary as to how best to sell the picture. Everything necessary with which to hold high exploitation carnival is right at hand. All that is needed to convince audiences of the attraction's entertainment worth is the proper application of the right kind of showmanship acumen.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Thunder Mountain

(20th Century-Fox-Lesser)

Adventure

An outdoor adventure picture, bristling with action and spectacular thrill, "Thunder Mountain" is the kind of attraction that any exhibitor, particularly those playing especially to thrill fans, can assure his patrons is sound and substantial entertainment. Benefited by class production, the story, prestige of Zane Grey's authorship, star, worth of supporting cast, beauty of scenic locales and the manner in which smart direction continually blends dramatic punches with seething physical action as the sensational climax is developed, are all showmanship assets.

"Thunder Mountain" isn't a brand new story; most of the material of which it is spun has been seen before. Yet it is the kind of entertainment recipe of which the public many times has demonstrated its understanding and appreciation. Familiar as the theme is, there is no lack of ingenious putting together of attention holding ingredients. As such the show moves at a speedy, interesting pace which gives the entire production a refreshingly different atmosphere. Essentially melodramatic, the picture additionally offers a different type of dramatic-romantic conflict. This quality can be of service in stirring up feminine attention, a business necessity as concentration on the straight adventure-action character might prove a handicap in appealing to woman patrons.

The substance of the story is a fight for gold. Kal and Steve, defrauded by claim-jumping Leavitt out of a mining claim that they have been grubstaked to by Blair, the instigation of his daughter, Sydney, endeavor to square matters. Romantic love interest being introduced and building to a menacing situation as it involves Sydney and dance hall girl Nuggett, the yarn builds to a man to man conflict between Kal and Leavitt. In a gun battle, Steve is killed and as one of the heavy's henchmen turns yellow to confess that Leavitt is the killer, the tense excitement of a vigilante court trial leads to a spectacular chase and finale in which the side of Thunder Mountain avalanches down following an explosion, and Kal settles his score with Leavitt, paving the way for romance with Nuggett.

The popularity of the theme, in which the sense of the title is of more than ordinary showmanship significance as well as the popularity of the star, George O'Brien, plus the exploitation opportunities that the prestige of the author, Zane Grey, make available, appear to be the pegs upon which to hang a patron interesting campaign.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

King Solomon of Broadway

Melodrama

Melodramatic gangsterism, romantic conflict, atmosphere of a gaudy night club musical and uniquely contrived situation comedy are blended to make this picture. Revealing a picturesque side of exciting Broadway life and character, it takes wide liberties with theatrical license. Seeking to be entertaining, it has little regard for the ideas of logical formula and as it is aimed at amusing the masses it probably will fail to arouse any great enthusiasm among the sophisticates or those who want their pictures to live strictly up to the letter of practice.

As it embraces so many different factors, it naturally covers a wide range of showmanship and exploitation assets. The gangster element is as dramatic as that entertainment quality is supposed to be. The romantic love interest angle takes several surprising and hard to anticipate twists. The music and dance interludes reveal a potentially pleasing performer in the newcoming Dorothy Page and also show

Pinky Tomlin to favorable advantage. The dance contest promotion which Edmund Lowe conceives is a showmanship feature that lends itself effectively to ballyhoo procedure that under proper guidance can easily become a commercial interest-creating feature. Comedy is almost exclusively in the hands of Charles Grapewin.

Action giving the picture plenty of movement, that quality is accentuated by zippy wise-cracking Broadway slang which gives the picture a popular pitch. In theme, King Solomon, operating a night club for gangster Larsen, who is doing a Sing Sing stretch, loses it gambling with three racketeers. Dangerous as he knows this stunt is, it becomes more so when Larsen is paroled. Trying to keep secret his bit of chicanery, King, who previously has saved socialite Nikki's life, gives her opportunity to gratify her whim for night life excitement by dancing in framed contests with masked marvel Pinky Tomlin. Jealousy aroused on the part of Sheba, the club's prize attraction, who considered the King her sole property, the situation is complicated as Larsen tries to win her. The success of the dance contests is pleasing to all concerned; to King, because he thinks they will be the means of bringing him enough dough to pay off the gamblers; to Larsen, because they indicate the club is making money, and to Nikki's uncle Winchester, who figures that through her connection with King he is in line to recoup the thrills of his lost youth.

Anyway, with the situation so building that King can expect nothing but to be knocked off either by Larsen or the muggs as they get wise to the deal his manager made, the King decides he might just as well battle it out with Larsen first. As they are busily engaged in a hectic melee, old Winchester, listening to the radio, gets the old firehorse urge. Rushing to the club with Nikki they are just in time to save King, and as he buys the place for a wad of dough, King's share is enough to pay off the gamblers and of course he is reunited with Sheba.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Red Salute

(Small-United Artists)

Comedy-Romance

Here is a composite and typical mixture of comedy, romance and drama abounding in showmanship values and what is more, a picture that should sell itself by word of mouth advertising. Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Young are teamed effectively to create an absorbing picture, which, supported by scintillating dialogue, an excellent cast and beautiful scenic expanse, was received with appreciative acclaim by a preview audience. Concerned primarily with the romance of Miss Stanwyck and Mr. Young and their wild transcontinental dash the story contains an angle, that of a patriotic uprising on the part of students against the invasion of "New Thought" ideas, that is provocatively fresh and currently a topic of discussion in newspapers, periodicals and in the minds of America's population.

The picture has the elements of wide appeal to all types of motion picture audiences and the exhibitor should find little trouble in exploiting it. Handsomely produced and excellently photographed the presentation is swift moving and enlivened by its topnotch repartee. In the cast besides Miss Stanwyck and Mr. Young are Hardie Albright, Cliff Edwards, Ruth Donnelly, Gordon Jones and Paul Stanton.

Drue Van Allen (Barbara Stanwyck), while interceding on behalf of a fellow student who is being unceremoniously ejected from the college campus for delivering a radical speech, is herself ejected. In love with the student much to the discomfort of her father, a colonel in the army, Drue, who has radical tendencies of her own, is coerced by her father to leave the country. Accompanied by her aunt she locates in Mexico but Drue, hearing from the radical every day, is determined to escape and rejoin him in the American capital.

Jeff (Robert Young), an American soldier on temporary leave, whose forte seems to be a penchant for getting into trouble, while evading the police winds up at the same bar where Drue is having a cocktail. Striking an acquaintance they spend considerable time and consume several drinks. Both broke and unable to pay the bill they make a break for the street, steal a government car belonging to a member of the border patrol, and head for the border. While successful in crossing the border and in eluding the border patrol, they crack up against a tree and start hoofing it. The lark over, Jeff is all for going back and surrendering but Drue convinces him that to do that would be suicide, as Jeff is now a deserter from the army as well as a thief, having stolen and wrecked the government car.

With the assurance of a gun, Jeff forces Rooney (Cliff Edwards), who is preparing for a trip with Mrs. Rooney in their roadster attached caravan, to include Jeff and Drue. Rooney is only too glad and is especially pleased when it is decided to leave Mrs. Rooney home. There begins a trip to Washington, highlighted by several amusing scenes, their efforts to avoid the ever determined border patrol, some entertaining singing by Rooney, and climaxed by the crackup in a raging storm. Leaving the wrecked caravan they find refuge in a mountain retreat. It is there Drue and Jeff discover their love for each other but Drue, in deciding between Jeff and the radical, chooses the radical and prepares to leave Jeff behind. Drue's plans go astray when the border patrol finally accost them.

Jeff is arrested and sent to military prison and Drue goes ahead with her plan to marry the radical. Seeking deportation of the radical, the colonel is informed the one way would be as a result of inciting a riot. Knowing the radical is to make a May Day speech, the colonel frees Jeff and explains the situation to him.

On May Day Jeff joins the group gathered to hear the radical. Wearing the olive drab of the army, Jeff, in a talk reminiscent of Marc Antony's elegy over Caesar's departed spirit, Jeff arouses patriotic fervor in the group and when the radical attempts to evict Jeff from the platform a free for all riot ensues. Federal men lock up the radical prior to his deportation. Drue and Jeff, reconciled, start on their honeymoon in Rooney's new caravan.—Mooney, New York.

The Case of the Lucky Legs

(Warner)

Comedy Melodrama

Comedy, hilarious and farcical, is the keynote of this dyed-in-the-wool mystery melodrama. The fun scope is so broad, yet so intelligently and logically handled, that while all the necessary elements of a fast paced well grounded mystery thriller are continually and effectively present, they are, from an up to the minute entertainment and consequently showmanship viewpoint, secondary in importance to the spirit of frolicsome mirth and merriment that motivates the show.

As far as the straight story is concerned, it's pretty much the familiar "Case" series formula. There's the full quota of strange and mysterious goings on, with their chain of murders; innocents made suspects and culprit made to appear innocent, baffling incidents to provoke the maximum thrills and chills. But looking at the show through the patrons' eyes, the outstanding selling quality is the surprising comedy in action, dialogue, character performances and situations which repeatedly tossed the preview audience into laughter.

As such a combination of legitimate and squeamish mystery and downright farce hokum, the job of creating patron interest in "The Case of the Lucky Legs" provides a new angle of approach, in the selling. While there's plenty to baffle, there's more to tickle the funny bone—so much so that it's quite possible that ordinary spectators will forget all about trying to figure out the mystery as they are swung along in the spirit of side-splitting fun.

In title, production values and personalities, the show provides the tools with which to work in establishing this as a funfest. In previous pictures, both as the Perry Mason character and others, Warren William has given definite indication that comedy is his forte. He proves it, to sure entertainment and showmanship value here. Oddly a player who ordinarily isn't considered a comedienne—Genevieve Tobin—crops up as a surprising funster in the role of William's secretary. As their antics endow the show with an atmosphere of gleeful foolishness, the straight characters of those involved in the legitimate mystery and melodrama take on a different aspect that gives the show unique color.

Given the benefit of an aggressive campaign that strives to reveal this picture's wide difference from the run-of-the-mill dramatic mystery plays and assures patrons that they'll laugh more than they'll gasp as they're thrilled in a new sort of way, should bring results—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Audio Takes More Space

New space for the cartoon animation department has been taken by Audio Productions, Inc., in the Fox Building at 56th street and 10th avenue, New York. The new addition doubles in size the quarters available for this department which has increased its staff because of added production activities in both the domestic and foreign fields.

CONTINUED prevalence of double bills, the union of Monogram, Mascot and M. H. Hoffman in Republic Pictures, and general market upturn have let to the greatest activity in independent production that Hollywood has seen since the earliest days. "Independent Row" again is seething.

Some thirty or more independent producers have announced programs of from eight to twenty-four pictures for the coming year, with many already in production.

Included in the group are such companies as Beaumont Productions, which will release eight Conway Tearle and eight "Black King" pictures. Excelsior Pictures will make a Tim McCoy series. Darmour Productions will feature Ken Maynard. Regal Productions will make 12 pictures, six in color. Monarch Productions has its own laboratory and will make 24 subjects. Victory Pictures has a program of 16. Academy Pictures has announced eight, but may possibly increase this to 12. C. C. Burr is making six.

$4,500,000 Combined Budget

Puritan Pictures will make six; Chesterfield and Invincible are down for at least eight each; Maurice Conn productions will make a Peter B. Kyne series featuring Frankie Darro and Earl Mason; Walter Futter will contribute eight; Louis Weiss will have six; Stuart Productions have a program of eight, and Cameo Pictures down for eight.

Combined product of all these independents will total approximately 300 features. Average negative cost will be about $15,000, totaling a four and a half million dollar production cost.

Most of these 300 pictures will be of the outdoor type. Stars for the most part will be action stars, such as McCoy, the Maynard brothers, Richard Talmadge, Earl Mason. Some of the companies, such as Monarch, New Century (which is making six to star Charles Ray) will do straight comedies and dramas in an effort to compete with the lower priced product of the majors. From all indications most of the features promised will be delivered. There will be no shortage of product for independent exchange during the coming year.

Intensified interest in radio programs emanating from the west coast, while becoming more apparent to film studios, finds broadcasting stations anticipating the trend for some time. Lavish new quarters of KNX have just been refurbished, and the half million dollar building which will house NBC in Hollywood about November 1 is now going up.

KNX, a 50,000-watt station, reaches all of southern California in the daytime, and covers 11 western states at night. KNX is in direct competition to theatres and newspapers. One of its features consists of six broadcasts of news a day, with half hour news flashes. It features six serials every night, of such diversified appeal as "Orphan Annie," "Watanabe and Archie," "The In-Laws," "Jimmy Allen," "Lum and Abner' and the "King Cowboy" musical program. These serials run five and six days a week, since KNX claims "radio is a matter of habit," and that response to a program running every night is at least double that of a program spotted four times a week.

So far, KNX has made little attempt to capitalize on Hollywood names, in spite of the fact that it has the copyrighted slogan, "The Voice of Hollywood."

The NBC studio, on the other hand, always has been more than casually interested in the affiliation of reels and radio, due to the fact that M. H. Aylesworth is president of both RKO and NBC. The new building touches the RKO-Radio lot on two sides.

NBC now is discussing preview broadcast arrangements with several studios, and has a Hollywood feature for sale by Mollie Merrick, Hollywood correspondent for National American Newspaper Alliance, now in New York.

News Flashes

Three Damon Runyon stories annually have been optioned for Twentieth Century-Fox by Darryl Zanuck. The deal goes for three years and gives the studio first choice of the Runyon output. . . . Fox West Coast accepted the resignation of its treasurer, Fred Metzler, who has joined Twentieth Century-Fox in a similar capacity, succeeding George Bagnall. Fox West Coast's chief accountant, George Topper, succeeds Mr. Metzler. . . . H. B. Franklin quietly slipped out of Hollywood for New York on an important business deal.

Ten Finished, Ten Start

Production schedules balanced evenly the past week, as for the 10 pictures completed 10 started. Both Twentieth Century and Warner starting two pictures, the remainder of the program is distributed among six other studios. Paramount dominates the completed group with four, the remaining six being credited to six companies.

At Twentieth Century-Fox "Buccaneer" started. In this Claire Trevor, Robert Allen, Paul Kelly, Pauline Frederick, Thomas Beck, Charles Locher, Henry Kolker and Frank Dawson will be seen. George Archainbaud is directing. "Paddy O'Day" also went before the cameras. Jane Withers is featured, supported by Pinky Tomlin, Rita Cansino, Michael and Nina Visaroff and George Givot. Lew Seiler is directing.

Warner put in work "The Country Boy," an adaptation of a popular stage play of several years ago. The cast features Barton MacLane, Mary Astor, Craig Reynolds and John Qualen. William McGann is directing. Second feature, "Miss Pacific Fleet," again teams Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell in the leading roles, with Warren Hull, Allen Jenkins and Hugh Herbert composing the important supporting players. Ray Enright is directing.

With work in progress on location, MGM started "Rose Marie." It will feature Jeannette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy with James Stewart, Robert Greig, Lucien Littlefield, George Regas and James Conlan among the support. W. S. Van Dyke is directing.

Paramount started "The Bride Comes Home." Claudette Colbert is starred, supported by Fred MacMurray, Benny Baker, Donald Meek and William Collier, Sr. Wesley Ruggles is directing.

After lengthy preparation, Universal finally gave "The Great Impersonation" the starting gun. With Alan Crosland directing, the picture features Edmund Lowe, Valerie Hobson, Wera Engles, Lumsden Hare, Henry Kolker and Henry Mollison.

Invincible Pictures started "Murder at Glen Athol." The featured cast includes John Miljan, Irene Ware, Barry Norton and Betty Blythe. Frank Strayer is directing.

Spotting Charles Ray in the leading role, New Century put "Just My Luck" into work, Ray Heinz directing. Other players to be seen include Anne Grey, Eddie Nugent, Matthew Betz, Robert Graves, Beth Marion and Snub Pollard.

Four Finished by Paramount

Two of the four completed Paramount productions, "Rose of the Rancho" and "Peter Ibbetson," appear to be in the important picture class. In the first, John Boles, Gladys Swarthout, Charles Bickford and Willie Howard occupy the leading roles. The support lists Herb Williams, H. B. Warner, Grace Bradley, Charlotte Granville, Don Alvarado, Minor Watson, Benny Baker, Louise Carter, Pedro De Cordoba, Harry Woods, Paul Harvey and Arthur Aylesworth. Marion Gering directed.

The second of the pair, "Ibbetson," co-stars Gary Cooper and Ann Harding. The support includes John Halliday, Ida Lupino, Douglas Dumbrille, Virginia Weidler, Dickie Moore, Doris Lloyd, Elsa Buchanan, Christian Rub, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Gilbert Emery and Marcella Corday. Henry Hathaway directed.

"Eagle's Brood," a western, also finished, was directed by Howard Bretherton. William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison, Nana Martinez, Frank Shannon, William Farnum, Al Lydell, George Hayes, Addison Richards and Paul Fix will be seen. Last of the group, "Hands Across the Table," directed by Mitchell Leisen. Featured are Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray and Ralph Bellamy, with Astrid Allwyn, Marie Prevost, Ruth Donnelly, William Demarest, Edward Gargan and Katherine DeMille in support.

Twentieth Century-Fox completed "Metropolitan." The cast includes Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce, Alice Brady, Cesar Romero, Thurston Hall, George Marion, Sr., Luis Alberni, Adrian Rosley, Ruth Donnelly, Franklyn Ardell, Christian Rub, Etienne Girardot and Sam Flint. Richard Boleslawski directed.

Republic finished "Confidential," Mascot production. Directed by Edward L. Cahn, it will present Donald Cook, Evalyn Knapp, Warren Hymer, J. Carroll Naish, Theodore Von Eltz, James Bush, Lynton Brent and Lillian Castle.

"A Perfect Gentleman" is the MGM contribution, directed by Tim Whelan. In this Frank Morgan and Cecily Courtneidge are featured in the principal roles supported by Richard Waring, Heather Angel, Henry Stephenson, Herbert Mundin, Brenda Forbes, Ivan Simpson, Una O'Connor, Forrester Harvey and Elsa Buchanan.

Radio finished "Tamed," in which Ginger Rogers, George Brent, Alan Mowbray, Samuel Hinds, Grant Mitchell, Joan Breslau and Luis Mason will be seen. William A. Seiter directed.

For United Artists release, Reliance completed "The Melody Lingers On," David Burton director. The cast lists Josephine Hutchinson, George Houston, John Halliday, Mona Barrie, Helen Westley, Laura Hope Crews, Walter Kingsford, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Eily Malyon, George Ragas and Adele St. Maur.

Last of the finished group, "His Night Out," a Universal, features Edward Everett Horton, directed by William Nigh and supported by Irene Hervey and Robert McWade.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 283.—(A) What care should be given sound-three head drive belts? (B) What effect will a dirty sound screen have on the quality of sound reproduction? (C) What care should be given sound screens to insure good sound transmission?

Answer to Question No. 277

Bluebook School Question No. 277 was: (A) In equipment where the power supply for the energizing coil of the relay is obtained from a rectified a. c. source, a "hum" may develop. What is its cause and what can be done in an emergency to eliminate it? (B) In equipments employing a separate voltage and power amplifier, provision is usually made for operating the stage loudspeakers from the voltage amplifier in case of failure of the power amplifier. How would you proceed to accomplish this purpose?

The engineers who prepared this question answer:

(A) "Usually such a condition is caused by a breakdown or open circuit in the filter condenser which forms a part of the rectifier circuit. In emergency the show may be kept going by disconnecting the power source from the relay coil and operating the relay manually.

(B) "In case the power amplifier fails, disconnect the link circuit between the voltage amplifier and power amplifier. Next disconnect the stage loudspeaker line from the power amplifier, reconnecting it to the proper impedance tap of the output transformer on the voltage amplifier. It is good practice to go through this procedure after show hours, once a month, in order that the projectionist become thoroughly familiar with all the necessary wiring connections. Manufacturers' representatives will be very willing to supply projectionists all necessary information with regard to such emergency procedure."

Might I butt in right here to suggest that the representatives of sound equipment manufacturers most certainly will be very willing to help projectionists by providing full explanations, coupled with demonstration where practicable, of emergency or other procedures upon request? May I offer a suggestion that projectionists will do well to jot down things they may require information about, so that when a manufacturer's representative calls they may be reminded of the various points?

I was indeed surprised by the few answers received to this question. Of those that came, but very few were within hailing distance of correctness. Therefore, in order to avoid embarrassment to some most excellent students of the "school," I will omit names. Here is the gist of some of the answers to Section A:

1. "Hum may be caused by reverse current relay stuck in open position. I can think of but two causes, (a) accumulation of dirt, weak spring tension, poor contact between the magnet and its corresponding pole piece. Under this condition it is possible there will be sufficient ripple in the power supply, even though rectified, to cause vibration and thus set up a characteristic 120-cycle hum."

2. "In equipments where the power for energizing the relay coil is obtained from rectified a. c. and a hum develops, the usual cause is sticking of the relay switch. In case of emergency, short circuit the switch and operate manually."

And here are two answers to Section B:

1. "In equipments employing separate voltage and power amplifiers, provision is usually made so that in event that the power amplifier goes haywire, the show may be continued by using the voltage amplifier only. In such emergency turn the power amplifier switch to off position and leave it there. Connect the output of the power amplifier to the input of the voltage amplifier, using proper jumpers. Turn the voltage amplifier to operating position and continue the show, with the fader at higher position."

2. "In a sound system where the voltage and power stages are separate it is an easy matter to operate the loudspeakers by using the voltage amplifier only, in case the power amplifier fails. However, to accomplish this requires a rather intimate knowledge of the circuits involved. There are really but two things one can do. The first is to connect the plate terminal of the output transformer in the power amplifier to the terminal of the plate of the last output tube in the voltage amplifier. This serves to feed the output of the voltage amplifier directly to the speakers through the primary of the output transformer, which feeds the voice coils in the speakers.

"The second possibility is to locate the pair of wires that go to the voice coils in the loudspeakers and connect one of them to the plate of the final voltage amplifier tube, the remaining wire going to a B plus terminal of proper voltage and capacity. In this it might be necessary to increase the volume control setting above normal, but it will be found to work out all right."

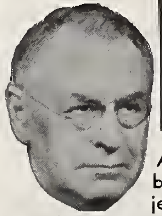
I submitted these answers to the engineers, who have replied as follows:

"Probably the reason for so few answers is because such troubles rarely occur. However, the more important emergency situations often are those that rarely occur, and the projectionist who is on his toes wants to know just what to do when they do.

"While the answers to Section A might be considered as right in some instances, usually symptoms of a sticking relay is that sound is not faded to the proper projector when the fader key is depressed. When some part of the filter circuit in the power supply circuit for the relay becomes defective, there is usually some ripple supplied to the energizing coil in the relay, which, being in close proximity to the signal circuit, is picked up at that point, thus producing hum in the loudspeakers.

"The first answer to Section B is correct, with the exception that the output or speaker connections should be connected to the output transformer of the voltage amplifier.

"Whoever submitted the second answer to Section B apparently had in mind a voltage amplifier, which does not have an output transformer. As he says, when such a condition exists an intimate knowledge of the circuits is required, and this is, I believe, beyond the scope of emergency procedure. The type of amplifier considered in framing the question was one in which an output transformer is used, the same having a proper impedance tap to match the loudspeaker load."



F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW
PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

Publishes Second "Mickey" Issue

"Mickey Mouse Magazine," issue num-two, reached the newsstands this week from Hal Horne, former advertising director of United Artists, in a revised format, the large size having been abandoned in favor of an eight-by-eleven-inch overall. Running some 44 pages, the magazine is published in conjunction with Walt Disney Enterprises and his Mickey Mouse motion picture interests.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Ambassador

CODE OF THE MOUNTED: Kermit Maynard—Our first with this star. Average business on it, but I think he was well liked, the picture was fair and so we think he will build up a good following. The beautiful shots on location were especially good.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Fox

BABOONA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—Very good for an animal picture. Better than "Wild Cargo" in that it has no snakes to scare the ladies. Fair draw. Played August 17-18.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland, "Pat" Paterson—Very good Chan picture that did less than average business. No fault of the picture for it was very interesting. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 1-2.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke Story not good enough for James Dunn. Business slightly below average.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke—Fair picture. Played to average business. Dunn has never been the draw since Sally Eilers left. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 7-8.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Poorest draw of any Rogers picture we ever played. Bill had no part, just a critic of an amateur show his wife was in. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 11-13.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—A very excellent picture. Canal scenes of great historical value. Pleased all and business good.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—I see some exhibitors panned this for having no story, but I'll take them like this and smile. Biggest grosser I've played in over two months. Played September 1.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. General patronage.

GINGER: Jackie Searl, Jane Withers—Pulled the kid trade and adults alike and pleased them all. Jane Withers does a neat job in this and is creating a following that should make her real box office. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 23-24.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—Fair picture but no drawing power. An improbable story did not help it.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—Failed to draw for me. Just a program picture with no pull. Would like to see Spencer Tracy get better stories for he has ability. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 28-30.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Story only fair. Did average business which was the smallest ever done on a Gaynor picture. Unless "Farmer Takes a Wife" is much better, then Gaynor is another dead star.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Drew very well and pleased most all customers, especially the women. Story did not have the "punch" that "Bright Eyes" had.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple, Joel McCrea, Erin O'Brien-Moore—Thanks, Shirley. While this did not do quite as well as "Little Colonel," it came a close second. The story is quite simple, but what of it? As long as Shirley is in it and smiles and wins her way into the hearts of the people everyone seems satisfied. I heard no complaints and no comparisons of this with her last picture.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

OUR LTTTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Not up to previous productions. Did the poorest business on this one of any Temple played to date. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 4-6.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor—A "crazy" story that did not please generally though it did well at box office.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton—Personally I thought it a very good picture but the customers did not turn out for it. Enough said.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter—Did not please so well and was only fair at the box office. Too much dialect and not enough story.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gillian—Very good picture that failed to draw and can't see why. Fair story, good acting, but no good at box office. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 25-27.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp No one could ask for a better western. Good action story, thrills and singing. Business exceptionally good for weekend.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Metro Goldwyn Mayer

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Here is one no exhibitor will go very wrong on. Lots of laughs. There are one or two slow spots which are overcome with what follows. There was much laughter from old and young throughout the show. Played August 28-29.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Excellent comedy. Dance by Laurel worth entire admission. Go after it; everybody likes to laugh. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 1-3.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Better pictures have been made by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. This picture will not break your house record. I do not think it is "The Top," yet a good picture. Played August 30-31.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Extraordinary picture to largest gross of house. Played five days, town 1,600. Advise extra playing time. Did two to three times normal business every day. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 18-22.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer, Frank Morgan, Virginia Bruce—Good program picture, but not the best William Powell by a long ways. Did average business. Played August 21.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce—Good newspaper-murder story, to good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Charlie Ruggles, Franchot Tone, Edna May Oliver—Swell cast, good direction, snappy dialogue and beautiful sets, in fact, everything to make a grade "A" picture, except the story, which is weak. Did less than average weekend business on this one. It's a fair picture, but not a special, in spite of the high-powered cast. Played August 17.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

TIMES SQUARE LADY: Robert Taylor, Virginia Bruce—Just another picture of no great merit. Entertainment value not great and not much of a story. Running time, 7 reels. Played August 27-28.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

TIMES SQUARE LADY: Robert Taylor, Virginia Bruce, Helen Twelvetrees—A thoroughly delightful program picture that pleased my patrons very much. One really couldn't ask for a better program picture than this.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—A dandy picture. Good entertainment. Running time, 73 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable —Good comedy drama without much drawing power.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Monogram

FLIRTING WITH DANGER: Robert Armstrong—Used as a preview, this clicked nicely. Program caliber, but it pleased generally. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 31.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Old but will do quite a bit more than average business. Picture is not so well made.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Eddie Nugent—Fair program picture. Played August 14.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Charlotte Henry, Norman Foster—A little slow in some reels but above average draw. Liked it myself.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. General patronage.

Paramount

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Arline Judge, Kent Taylor—Nice picture that seemed to please all. Business above average each night. Played August 18-20.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye, Patsy Kelly, Frances Langford—This was the best piece of entertainment we have had in a long time. George Raft and Frances Langford and the amateur broadcast very good. Give this one your best dates and step on it hard. Played September 7-8.—F. G. Walker, Community Theatre, Chamois, Mo. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—Good musical based on the amateur hour. Pulled very well and pleased generally. Patsy Kelly provides the comedy and does a swell job of it, too. Some nice musical numbers, but nothing outstanding. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 30-31.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Oregon. Small town and rural patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft, Edward Arnold—Here is one that has me wondering. The only name that I thought would draw is George Raft. Didn't do any extra advertising on it and drew away above average. Yes, it is interesting and Raft brings them in here. Played August 14-15.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft, Edward Arnold—About average programmer for this one. Nothing to write home about. Played September 1.—B. Hollen-

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft—This stands out like a sore thumb as the best mystery picture in a long, long time, and George Raft simply goes to town in it. Besides that you have Edward Arnold to help out. A whale of a picture; also a whale of a box office draw.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West, Paul Cavanagh—This was liked better than "Belle of the Nineties" and drew much better.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Cesar Romero—A cracker-jack entertainment that drew extra business last two days of week. It is a story with a college background. However it is different than the average college picture, and should please all classes.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Cesar Romero, Andy Devine—Just average program fare that failed to draw well or to please the patrons on the whole. Typical Damon Runyon plot and some good dialogue, but on the whole it did not click. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 4-5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—A picture of the "G Men" cycle that drew above average business. Lynne Overman pleased with his comedy. Would have been better had he lived instead of being murdered like he was. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 21-22.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

PARIS IN SPRING: Tullio Carminati, Mary Ellis—Very poor picture, no stars, no draw in small town. About the same draw as "Enter Madame." Very poor. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 28-29.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Good light comedy. The story isn't much but the cash customers, those who came, seemed satisfied. No business on this one. Guess the title doesn't mean much to the average theatregoer. Played August 28.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett, Joel McCrea—Heard several people say this was the best of Miss Colbert's pictures since "It Happened One Night." Did a little better than usual Sunday-Monday business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SHANGHAI: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young—A surprise picture. Drew above average and plesaed the majority. Some came back the second time. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 1-3.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: Ben Bernie, George Raft—Here's a show that brought them in and they liked it. Raft goes big here. Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. General patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—Here is a show that is a show, and Ben Bernie goes to town in film as well as a night club entertainer. There is also a wonderful bus sequence thrown in that causes talk which should help this picture bring the shekels into the box office. George Raft comes through with his usual fine performance.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

VIRGINIAN, THE (Re-issue): Gary Cooper, Walter Huston, Richard Arlen, Mary Brian—A reissue. Poor photography and print. However, the draw was above average and seemed to please the majority. Some complaints on poor print. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 14-15.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

MISSOURI, KANSAS ADD CONTRIBUTORS

Two showmen who this week begin contributing comments on what pictures have done for them at the box-office are the following:

F. G. Walker, Community Theatre, Chamois, Missouri.

Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kansas.

First reports from these exhibitors appear in the department in this issue.

RKO Radio

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame, Preston Foster—Very good western that did exceptional business. Where they like westerns, this should go over very good. Played August 25.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame—Very good. Good business. Played August 23-24.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins, Frances Dee, Cedric Hardwicke, Billie Burke—Beautiful picture. Not much to the story. Was not liked. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 11-13.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer, John Beal—We can't make a Hepburn picture pay for itself. In spite of the fact that this was a modern picture, it drew even less than "Little Minister." If your people like Hepburn this is a good picture.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DOG OF FLANDERS, A: Frankie Thomas, O. P. Heggie—There is much in this to please old and young. It holds interest all the way. It is rather a hard title to put over with those who are not familiar with the story. Drawing power for me a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—A good race horse picture with plenty of comedy. Drew good weekend business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Very weak; will hardly hold attention of any one. Played September 4-5.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen, Margot Grahame—A stark, brutal, depressing picture that even McLaglen's performance couldn't save for us. We "pulled" it the second night, as we had more adverse comment on it than anything we had run in months.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

JALNA: Ian Hunter, Kay Johnson—This is a wonderful show anywhere; 95 per cent will tell you they liked it. Played August 26-27.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Fair comedy, not as good as the "Kentucky Kernels." Poor business on this one. Played August 30.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

OLD MAN RHYTHM: Buddy Rogers—I write this to counteract the bad critic reviews on "Old Man Rhythm." This is a very good and very satisfactory picture that will do average business and please your customers, especially the young people. Ignore the "critics"; they are totally wrong. It has some hot numbers, good songs and is well turned out. Rogers means nothing, but the picture is all right and it has a fine acting cast. The popeyed waiter in this should be starred. Would be, if the producers knew their business. He is Jeeves! He's a natural.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—Fantastic, elaborately produced. Was well liked. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 14-15.—Emmet F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—This is one of this company's very best bets on this year's program. It did a good three days' business for us.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Very good, but only average draw. Perhaps it was too smart for our people. Played August 10-11.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRANGERS ALL: May Robson, Preston Foster—A splendid story of family life with May Robson at her best. However, Miss Robson nor the title neither had any drawing power here.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

VILLAGE TALE: Randolph Scott, Kay Johnson—Below average for me. Good enough acting, but not what I would call good entertainment. Too much meanness to be enjoyable. Played August 8.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young—And how the patrons answered to the call! The best box-office attraction we have had in many moons. Generally liked, but many told us that the story had been greatly changed. Beautifully photographed and well acted, with Oakie carrying off the honors. Running time, 91 minutes.—Played August 25-27.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce, Alice Brady—This picture drew as well for me as "The G Men." It compares very favorably with "The G Men." While it deals with the same subject, it is different enough not to look like a copy of "The G Men." It is a real well-made picture that you can get behind in a big way.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

CRIMSON TRAIL, THE: Buck Jones—Pretty poor picture fare. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 24.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Douglas Montgomery, Anita Louise—One swell comedy. Put some extra effort behind this. It will satisfy any audience. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 14-15.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Douglass Montgomery, Alice Brady—Good program offering which might have been much better had there been a little more slap-stick comedy brought into it. Pulled fairly well and pleased generally. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 1-3.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NOTORIOUS GENTLEMAN, A: Charles Bickford, Helen Vinson—A mighty interesting murder mystery drama. Even those who are fed up with mystery dramas should find this to their liking. The audience are made aware as to who is the killer, but the manner in which Charles Bickford works to make it the perfect crime, and the way he is finally trapped, holds one's interest 'til the fadeout.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—Below average draw. Not much to it.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown, Olivia de Haviland—A knockout to small towns. Did good business and was liked. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 28-30.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Adolphe Menjou—Extra good. Was well liked and did good business. Running time, 98 minutes. Played August 4-6.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

DON'T BET ON BLONDES: Warren William, Claire Dodd—Very good, and was liked. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts—Good comedy. Was well liked. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 16-17.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson, Jean Muir—A top production in every respect which drew far above mid-week average and pleased all who saw it. New in story and setting, with the whole cast turning in sincere performances. Warners deserve an orchid for this one. Running time, 97 minutes. Played August 28-29.—M. H. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID: James Cagney, Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins—An old one, I know, but it paid us to go back and pick it up. A natural for Friday-Saturday. We had better than usual week-end business on it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Another good picture from this pair. Will please any audience. Played August 25-27.—Emmett F. Roche, Hart Theatre, Hart, Mich. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Educational

FRIENDLY SPIRITS: Ernest Truex—A dandy Saturday night comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ONE RUN ELMER: Buster Keaton—Got more laughs than any comedy we have run for months. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Metro Goldwyn Mayer

ANNIVERSARY TROUBLE: Our Gang—Another excellent Gang comedy. You owe it to your patrons to play these.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BUM VOYAGE: Todd-Kelly—This went over fine. We think it is one of the girl's best efforts. Running time, 16 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CALICO DRAGON: Happy Harmonies Series—Good. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GOOD LITTLE MONKEYS: Happy Harmonies Series—Everyone old and young liked this.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

LOS ANGELES, WONDER CITY OF THE WEST: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—A very beautiful colored reel of Los Angeles and Hollywood. A credit to any program.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE: Charley Chase—Played this in the middle of the week and sorry we didn't use it on Saturday as it is a splendid slapstick comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE: Charley Chase—Very good. The best Chase we have had for some time.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

STAR NIGHT AT COCOANUT GROVE: Musical Revue—With Leo Carrillo as master of ceremonies, introducing Bing Crosby, Mary Pickford and many more stars who each do or say something, this is one of the outstanding Technicolor shorts of the entire season. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THICKER THAN WATER: Laurel & Hardy—Here is a dandy. Book it and be glad you show it.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CHOOSE YOUR "WEPPINS": Popeye The Sailor—The best of the Popeyes so far.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

EXCUSE MY GLOVES: Jack Doyle, Betty Jane Cooper, Ted Husing—Jack certainly can sing "Macushla," and we like to see as well as hear Ted Husing announce. This is an extra good number in this series. Runing time, 7 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD EXTRA GIRL: Paramount Varieties Series—A glorified advance trailer for Paramount's coming attraction, "The Crusades." Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SONG WRITERS OF THE GAY NINETIES: Pat Rooney—A most delightful reel of old songs presented by their composers.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

JAPANESE LANTERN: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—A very excellent colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MERRY KITTENS, THE: Rainbow Parade Cartoon Series—Everyone liked this.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

PATHE REVIEW: No. 4—One of the finest reels on the market. As good or better than Paramount Pictorials. This Number 4 especially good.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SALESMANSHIP ALOY: Four Star Comedies Series—I opened the show with it, then I put it in the can. Nothing to it; not a laugh in the two reels.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminister, Md. Small town patronage.

SOCK ME TO SLEEP: Edgar Kennedy Comedy—Edgar Kennedy in a slapstick comedy. These Kennedy comedies get by once in a while and please—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

State Rights

FISH FROM HELL: I am a fisherman and booked this to please myself. But I am glad to report this pleased everyone and several people who never go fishing told me on the way out they hoped I would get more like it.—George Osborne, Opera House, Westminster, Md. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BAND CONCERT: Mickey Mouse—A very fine colored Mickey Mouse. Enough said—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

CANDYLAND: Cartune Classics—Entertaining colored cartoon, which garnered its share of laughs. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

DOIN' THE TOWN: Mentone No. 9-A—Splendid vaudeville type presentation, differently done. Running time, 18 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GOING PLACES WITH LOWELL THOMAS: Have played several and they have all been good fillers.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

JOLLY LITTLE ELVES, TOYLAND PREMIERE, CANDYLAND—These three color cartoons are wonderful and they do not hold you up on price. Running time, one reel.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

OSWALD CARTOONS: Most of the Oswald Cartoons are good. I believe they are some better than the "Terrytoons" by Educational. Running time, one reel.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

STRANGER THAN FICTION: Most of these are quite good, though the audience would rather see a funny comedy, but it looks like those are things of the past. Running time, one reel.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

DIZZY AND DAFFY: Dizzy and Daffy Dean—Just fair. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GET RICK QUICK: Allen Jenkins—Not worth running. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Merrie Melodies Series—An excellent colored cartoon similar to "Mickey's Band Concert."—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GOOD MORNING, EVE: Leon Errol—A very good novel colored musical.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

POP GOES YOUR HEART: Merrie Melodies Series—Colored cartoon which pleased the patrons. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

VACATION DAZE: Jenkins and Donnelly—This one got a few laughs.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WHAT, NO MEN?: El Brendel, Phil Regan—A fine colored musical. Beautiful scenes and singing. A little hot, but O. K. El Brendel furnishes the comedy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WHY PAY RENT: Roscoe Ates, Shemp Howard—Better than average comedy, greatly enjoyed by our patrons. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Brothers

WARNER BROS. SHORTS: Warner Brothers are making the best shorts on the market by a long lead.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

Grainger to Make Four

Edmund Grainger, Universal associate producer, is scheduled to put four pictures into work during the next month. They are "The Great Impersonation," starring Edmund Lowe; "Fast and Furious," "Spinster Dinner," starring Carol Lombard, and "Sutter's Gold." Mr. Grainger recently completed "Diamond Jim."

Ruth Waterbury New Photoplay Editor

Miss Ruth Waterbury has been appointed editor of Photoplay Magazine to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Kathryn Dougherty. Miss Waterbury is now in New York for conferences with Bernarr Macfadden and executives of Macfadden Publications but will continue to edit the magazine from Hollywood.

Fox-Wisconsin Adds Three

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Huron, South Dakota

Dear Herald:

We presume that they got the name for this town from the Huron Indians, although we don't know as there were any Hurons around here. Anyhow we know that there are no Hurons around here now unless it might be the two Indians who operate the Huron and State theatres, but we doubt this because they are pretty live Indians, while it is claimed that the good ones are dead.

J. H. Echelman operates the Huron and Jack Shearer looks after the State. Both of these theatres are good enough for Huron or any other town, and Huron is a pretty good town. .

Echelman used to live in Ft. Smith, Arkansaw, but left there and came up to Sioux Falls without asking the consent of Arkansaw or anybody else, which goes to show just how doggone independent he is. Outside of that (and a few other things) he's a pretty nice chap, for a man who has lived single as long as he has.

Jack Shearer at one time was a resident of the Black Hills of South Dakota and he left there and came down to Huron to help put the town on the road map, but they built the penitentiary down to Sioux Falls, and Jack stayed at Huron, because he never liked the looks of a penitentiary (from the outside). Well, anyhow, Huron is a mighty fine town and has a post office, three filling stations and about everything, including something like 13,000 folks. If you are looking for a good town, go to Huron. If you are looking for two well managed theatres, go to Huron, but don't tell the boys you know us.

Before the Music Hall Record

Not being a critic of motion pictures, we presume we ought not to say anything about it, but down at Sioux Falls Sherm Fitch, branch manager for RKO, screened "Top Hat," a picture with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers carrying the burden of the show, while Edward Everett Horton and Helen Broderick did a lot to make this one of the best pictures of the year.

Fred Astaire ought to be good, as he comes from Omaha, Nebraska, and Ginger Rogers is largely responsible for Dallas Texas, being the city it is. If you want to see a good dancing team see these two folks in "Top Hat." If you want to see the most elaborate and gorgeous stage settings you ever saw, see "Top Hat." If you want to see a picture that is well acted and well staged see "Top Hat."

We'd like to say a word to Edward Everett Horton, if he don't mind, and that is that if he don't stop being so doggone funny we are going to put him right at the top of our list of comedians along with Charlie Ruggles, and when they get up to the top with Charlie they are getting up to where they are liable to get dizzy. And there is another thing. Why in thunder don't they star that lady by the name of Helen Broderick? She'd put that picture industry on the map out there if they would wake up and give her something to do. As we said before, we are not a picture critic, but our judgment is that if you don't get "Top Hat" and get out and yell about it, you are not in the show business very strong.

Speaking of Golf—

When we came through Plainview, Nebraska, the other day, we stopped to call on Mr. and Mrs. John Hoffman, who operate Plainview's popular playhouse. John was out circulating a petition to get the town paved and we didn't get to see him, but we had a lovely visit with Mrs. Hoffman.

You may not know it, but Mrs. Hoffman wears the women's championship golf belt of northeast Nebraska, and if you think that these Nebraska girls can play golf we had best not mention your opinion where people can hear you, and if any of you tall, slim, heavy-set boys think you want her belt, our advice to you would be to make inquiries as to her golf history before you issue her a challenge, for after the game is over you are apt to go home feeling you had swallowed a live tadpole.

As soon as we got into Sioux Falls, and the police judge let us go, we went and called on our old college chum, Sherm Fitch, and we had to go up to his house and have dinner and stay there all night. Sherm knows every exhibitor, highway and woodpecker nest in South Dakota, and there isn't a baby in the state, over 16, that he hasn't kissed in the presence of her mother, and he's not particular about their ages either. But what we wanted to tell you about mostly is the dinner Mrs. Fitch served us. Sherm said we ate ten ears of sweet corn, but we didn't do any such thing; we only ate nine (because that was all he left us). And then we had fried chicken, pickles, potatoes, beets, celery, coffee, ice water and something else in a little glass, and icecream and—doggone it anyhow, we never could see why they made our clothes so tight around the waist. If you ever go away from her table hungry, you better go and get some tapeworm medicine right away.

Three of 'Em

The O"Leary Brothers still operate the Grand theatre at Dell Rapids, S. D. There are three of the boys, all single (and glad of it) and their connection with the theatre insures the folks of Dell Rapids that they will see a good show, whether the boys bill it very much or not.

They are strong for the HERALD, and the HERALD is strong for the O'Leary boys, and that makes it pretty nearly unanimous, as far as the Swedes and Polanders can go. Dell Rapids is located in a pretty doggone good counntry, and that's why so many good people went there.

J. A. Bradley has a theatre equipment supply house in Sioux Falls, and our guess is that any who do business with him can't find anything to kick about. His place seems to be well appointed and in addition to supplying parts and other things for the theatre machinery he also makes Neon signs, and if it is a little dark around your theatre you had better see Mr. Bradley.

McCarthy Knows

F. J. McCarthy, who still presides over the destinies of the State theatre at Brookings, S. D., is pretty strong with the golf clubs and we suggested to him that he run up to Morris, Minnesota, and Detroit, and interview Benny Benfield at Morris, and the Anderson Boys at Detroit Lakes, but he shook his head and said "Not me, Colonel, I know those boys."

Brookings is surrounded by some of the best cornfields we have seen this season, and business seems to be on the upgrade at Brookings and also at the State theatre. We asked F. J. if he was in any way related to the widow Malony and he said he wasn't, that his forefathers came over in the Mayflower and brought the Plymouth Rock chickens with them.

Then we drove over to Arlington to see G. S. Abbott, who operates the Arlington theatre. We had a lovely visit with him and then he took us to his house to show us his parrot. We are glad he did because we got to meet Mrs. Abbott, a very delightful lady, and we also saw her flowerbed, which we surmised was largely due to her constant care and attention. They also had a Boston bull terrier (and they are our favorite kind of a dog) but that doggone parrot wouldn't say a word to us, guess he thought we had the itch. Anyhow, we had a lovely time with G. S. and we hope to go back there again sometime. He wouldn't let us leave before he had renewed for the HERALD.

Sweetcorn Champ

If you want to see a boy eat sweetcorn you should go over to Lake Preston and see John Hojem of the Rex theatre. When we called on him he was in a cafe and was working on the seventh ear. We asked him where the mules were and he said they were out in the pasture on a vacation and he was pinch hitting for them. Then we went and called Sherm Fitch up to the cafe to help John with the sweetcorn. John not only runs the theatre but he also prints the news in the local paper and assists Lake Preston to shine in the public eye. There isn't much news of any consequence that escapes John, and there are not very many pictures that he don't know about.

We also called on M. L. Marshall of Bridgewater and we have considerable to say about him, but doggone it, we have run out of space. Ernie is so tight that way, so we must quit.

CORRESPONDENCE

What with Earle M. Holden's recent success in the Quigley August Awards, the following, extracts from correspondence between Holden and this department and having to do with certain aspects of the Competitions, may perhaps be of interest to others likewise concerned. Earle is manager of the Capitol Theatre in Atlanta, Ga. showing third choice of first-runs.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 14, 1935

Dear Mike:

We are planning a good campaign on "A Dog of Flanders" and thought we might submit it to the Quigley Awards Committee, but believe it would be just a waste of time. The committee sees fit to give those fellows who get the best pictures a break. The fellow that has to play third choice first run hasn't a chance.

(Signed) Earle

New York, Aug. 20, 1935

Dear Earle:

Note what you say about entry in the Quigley Awards of "A Dog in Flanders" campaign being a waste of time. You must be mistaken, Earle, because many of the plaques won during the last few months have gone to small towns and subsequent runs. Please allow me to repeat that every campaign, regardless of the picture or where it is played, has an equal shot at the big prizes.

Send in your campaign by all means and remember that in the opinion of the judges, third choice of first-runs is as good as the first.

Quigley Awards Committee,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Please enter this campaign ("A Dog of Flanders") in the Quigley Awards contest for the month of August. The operating policy of this theatre is third choice of first-run pictures.

We wish to call your especial attention to the newspaper contest which is a feature of this campaign. . . . We are compelled to operate on a small ad budget and no advance was made in our budget for the campaign on this picture.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) Earle M. Holden, Mgr.

If this letter appears to make no sense, just blame it on the Award. Honestly when I received that telegram this morning, I believe it was the thrill of a lifetime. Naturally my greatest thanks goes out to all the judges who voted for this campaign and to any and all who played a part in making this selection. This Award should at least prove to those skeptical that the picture don't have to be outstanding in order to stand a chance. This was one reason why I did not submit campaigns sooner. . . .

Lewis Stages Redheaded Beauty Contest on "Parade"

Eddie Lewis at the Regent in Bay Shore, L. I., on "Redheads on Parade" inserted an ad in the papers, heralds, etc., announcing that the first twenty-five redheaded gals presenting themselves at the box-office opening day would be admitted as his guests. Fifteen of these girls appeared on the last evening of the attraction for a beauty contest, audience selecting most beautiful redhead in Bay Shore. Eddie promoted some swell prizes for the girls and reports that the stunt attracted plenty of attention.

On "Bonnie Scotland," Eddie distributed imprinted envelopes containing a Scotch suit hanger, compliments of Laurel and Hardy—the suit hanger, needless to say was a good old-fashioned nail.

SEPTEMBER DEADLINE AND SEPTEMBER JUDGES

Over two weeks remain before deadline set for the Quigley September Award this date having been set for midnight of Saturday, Oct. 5, when as usual entries for September consideration must be at Quigley Award Headquarters, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The September Judges will be as follows: Robt. M. Gillham, Paramount Pictures; Charles Moskowitz, Loew's Theatres, and George Weeks, GB Pictures. Decision will be announced in the October 12th issue.

United Artists Syndicate Wells' Story Serial

Reported by Monroe Greenthal, United Artists' ad head, is a promotion with syndicate handling Sunday magazine section of 21 leading newspapers wherein serialization of H. G. Wells' "One Hundred Years to Come," next Alexander Korda production, has been planted.

Serial will run through October, installments to be illustrated with stills from the picture and theatre datelines wherever possible.

Bruder Conducts Tours Thru Theatre for Patrons

What he reports as being a highly successful good-will builder is the instigation by Roy C. Bruder, Chicago Theatre, Chicago, Ill., of personally conducted tours of patrons through his theatre. Recently when the house had completed a thorough "spring cleaning," Roy inserted an ad in local papers inviting patrons to make an inspection of the entire house and see the various functions of a deluxe operation. Bruder says he received requests from individuals and organizations and that within a period of two months close to 2,000 people had made the tour.

Shows Baseball Plays

Another stunt Roy pulled was the promotion of a baseball Diamond Graph which was installed in lower promenade and operated daily. Rather than lose some potential customers at the ball parks, he encourages his patrons to attend a performance and see the board in operation.

Three Contests Top Shannon's Campaign

That's a heap of work put over by Manager Chuck Shannon, at Warners' Hollywood, Dormont, Pa., on "Doubting Thomas," and featured in the campaign that won him his second Quigley plaque, the August Bronze, were effective contests.

Chuck promoted fur merchant for prizes in an ice melting contest, having insert card frozen in 300-pound block and placed in merchant's window with prizes to those guessing nearest time block would melt.

Then with two local sheets, contests were put on, a happy smile idea, entrants sending smile photos of themselves to paper which ran two-column tieup display ads including theatre credits and Rogers cut. Gag ran two weeks ahead and was put on obviously before the death of the star.

The other contest was a "careful drivers' week," paper running front page boxes announcing cooperation with borough police departments and theatre for motorcycle officers to select each day five most careful drivers. License numbers of these were put down by cops, and winners notified by mail, names also published on page one of the paper at end of week. In conjunction, Shannon placed cards on telegraph poles reading "Don't be a Doubting Thomas; Observe Careful Drivers' Week."

Street stunt quite new in his sector, was Chuck's gag of planting man in front of box office before house opened with "I am waiting" card. And helpful, too, was promotion of fan photos paid for by paper and merchants and given away at daily office and at stores, latter publicizing thee in coop ads.

And with a six-bit rubber stamp Chuck stamped shopping bags, restaurant paper napkins and checks, grocery bags.

The Hollywood is open only on Fridays and Saturdays, is a neighborhood subsequent run, and Shannon reports his entire campaign cost at $19.20.

Earle Promotes Pup For Letter Contest

The stand-out in Manager Earle M. Holden's Quigley August Silver campaign on "A Dog of Flanders" at the Capitol, Atlanta, Ga., was a contest tieup with the Atlanta Georgian whereby the paper with the theatre sponsored a contest to giveaway a thoroughbred police puppy, valued at $50. Purp was donated by local pet shop in exchange for credits. Guest tickets also were awarded, and the prize was prominently on view at the shop (see photo).

Contest was based on letters of 200 words or less written by or for children under 14, letters to describe why entrant would make an ideal master or mistress for "Leo," the prize pup. Answers had to cite at least one specific act of kindness to a dumb animal done by the child during week of the contest. Entries also had to include name, address and phone number of at least one grown-up witness to the particular act of kindness mentioned.

Paper further stressed that act of kindness need not be heroic, but could include giving a drink to animal, restoring kitten to its mother, saving a bird's nest, etc.

Publicity ran 10 days, paper running daily two-column contest stories, illustrated with cuts from the picture and credit captions. In addition, popular dog column editor helped build up the contest and ran two-column theatre boxes at foot of column.

Holden also tied in with dog and cat hospital, placing set piece in waiting room, and got a flock of windows and other tieups.

Screen Player Appears

Further aid was obtained by appearance of local girl who had a bit in the picture on stage opening night, girl also posing with the prize dog. Purp was presented from the stage to the winner, a girl, in the presence of representatives from the paper who participated in the ceremony.

Classified tieup was made with another daily, the host of plugs put in by leading member of local Board of Review, including a library tieup and guest tickets also given winners of athletic events at "Y" meets, athletic director making announcements to the hundreds of entrants and recommending the picture. Lobby and front displays were in keeping with the campaign, the many photos of the campaign submitted credited to Jack Harber, assistant manager of amateur photographer, who took and developed all pictures.

Holden reports free publicity about five times the amount of his paid advertising, the campaign staying within the budget and successfully overcoming the handicap of being put on during vacation time when schools were closed.

The Capitol plays third choice of first-run pictures.

Theatre Publicist Defends Use of "Colossal" School of Advertising

Member Questions Total Effectiveness of Ad Form Created for Fox Midwest

On pages 13 and 14, Sept. 7 issue, appeared an article detailing a new form of newspaper advertising sponsored by Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest Theatres head for use by the managers of his theatres. One of the ads was reproduced on page 62, Sept. 14 issue.

As the policy of this department is to encourage discussion of various important phases of theatre operation, on this page is presented an opinion of the new ad form. The writer, whose name and address are on file, is a theatre publicity head. He requests his name not be used.

Dear Mike:

I have read, with great interest, both the article "New Technique Supplants 'Colossal' Ad Traditions" in the Motion Picture Herald of September 7, 1935, and your editorial, discussing this, in the September 14 issue of the Motion Picture Herald.

The desire to supplant the "Colossal" tradition of advertising is perhaps to be lauded, as is, of course, the desire to be different in advertising motion pictures.

One of the points brought up by Mr. Rhoden is that "The Screen Reporter" type of advertising becomes a dependable source of information about motion pictures. That this source is dependable, I, for one, question.

Scanning the specimen column of "The Screen Reporter" that appears on paid 62 of the September 14 issue of Motion Picture Herald, one cannot deny that it is a bright, attractive column, but I repeat that the information concerning the pictures is no more dependable than the use of the words "Colossal," "Terrific" and "Sensational" would be in a similar ad.

What Ads Are Dependable?

What, furthermore, does Mr. Rhoden regard as dependable? The average film fan's interpretation of dependable may vary as much as the average film fan's appreciation of certain pictures. Any theatre manager who feels that he can tell his patrons the unvarnished truth concerning the product he shows on his screen might as well find another business in which to interest himself. For the motion picture business is not concerned with a commodity such as shoes, underwear, electric irons or oil furnaces.

You cannot treat nor advertise a photoplay in which artistic endeavor enters in the same manner as you would advertise any of the above named products. A merchant dealing in ordinary household commodities can almost always be generally truthful, if such truth pays. He can tell his customers that the leather in the shoes he sells is of the finest grade; that the steel used in his kitchen knives is the finest, and he can be telling the truth.

But, if the movie exhibitor were to talk of his product that way, could he, with impunity, tell his patrons that the cast of one of his forthcoming pictures was the finest assembled in any film for the current year? This perhaps might be the truth as far as the individual exhibitor were concerned. But, would it be the truth as far as the consumer is concerned? The answer is, of course, obvious. The difference of opinion is what makes elections, horse races and motion picture stars.

Patrons Swayed by Advertising

I have found that it is essential that an opinion concerning any photoplay must be expressed to the ultimate consumer. Your prospective audiences will form their own opinion of a picture either before or after they have seen it. But they certainly will be swayed by advertising that tells them how good a picture is. Naturally it is not essential that all pictures be advertised as "terrific," "sensational," "colossal" or "amazing."

Newspaper readers are notoriously quick to sense an exhibitor's lack of confidence in his screen attraction. True, they have been fooled on occasion and have come in to see what has been advertised as a great picture which really turned out to be a dud. But, nevertheless, they must sense your enthusiasm, your praise, for a picture before they will be willing to believe that it is any good, and plank down their money at the box office.

In your advertising you say a picture is great, it is exciting; it is modern; it is romantic. Perhaps you're right. Or let's assume that you personally and privately think one of your film attractions is downright bad (as is frequently the case). Your patrons, or perhaps a large majority of them, however, may think it is great.

Enthusiastic Praise Effective

In other words, you may think a picture is lousy and your audience may think it's great and vice versa. Every advertising man knows that his first duty to his job is to bring the people in on opening day. After that, in almost all instances, the quality of the picture either retains or loses its audience.

No right minded exhibitor can deny that the most effective type of newspaper advertising yet devised to get an audience into his theatre on an opening day was the ecstatic and enthusiastic praise or copy that he used in conjunction with a strong ad.

Why, therefore, should he discontinue this tried and proven method of getting an audience in for opening day? Why should he imperil his chances of cashing in on what might turn out to be a terrific hit by neglecting to advertise it in a manner that will quickly and—yes—conventionally bring it to his public's attention.

All that advertising need do is to get the public in for the first time. The picture will then, of course, do the rest.

In some situations, and perhaps this is true of Mr. Rhoden's operations, there are certain theatres that over a period of years have built up a reputation for showing the best available photoplays. This reputation, if it is well-earned, is sufficient to insure these theatres doing business, regardless of what method of advertising they might use. A "Curly Top," "Top Hat," a "Will Rogers," a "Greta Garbo" can withstand any type of advertising, be it display, or "Screen Reporter," or merely All-Type.

But in those situations where the exhibitor is not so fortunate as to have pictures of that caliber, he cannot naturally utilize the methods of his more fortunate brethren. He must go out and make his voice heard above that of the Garbos, Temples, Rogers and Shearers. And he can do it only by shouting about his product. Only by using advertising that is strong, positive and compelling can he hope to compete with the great draw of good pictures. Perhaps in Mr. Rhoden's situation, "The Screen Reporter" does the advertising for the outstanding theatres in his town. Perhaps, as he says, receipts are up since he instituted this type of "Screen Reporter" advertising. But it is also noteworthy that theatres throughout the country have shown an 8 per cent increase in admissions during the past six months.

Makes No Claims for "Colossal"

And how about the competitors in Mr. Rhoden's town? If they have retained their display ads with their positive claims have their receipts increased also? Have they increased in greater or lesser proportions to those of Mr. Rhoden's theatres? What product is available to Mr. Rhoden's competitors? Does Mr. Rhoden believe that his competitors could sell their pictures in the same fashion that "The Screen Reporter" sells his?

I make no claims for the "Colossal" school of advertising. I do say, however, that when a man is fighting for his existence against great pictures, or against an organized circuit, or against superior financial support, he must use every trick at his command, and one of the most potent of the tricks at his command is his proven ability to bring in the cash customers by means of advertising that tells those very same cash customers how very good his pictures are. The public is no smarter than it need be.

In quite the same manner as demagogues have played upon the emotions of the masses, so can the smart exhibitor use the demagogue's tricks in the movies.

Every picture cannot be "Colossal." Even the dullest movie fan understands that. But when a picture comes along that lends itself to the use of the "Colossal" school, I think the exhibitor is tossing away a good bet when he disdains its use.

AD DEPARTMENT ESSENTIALS

Clear Understanding and Close Cooperation Necessary Between Advertising and Art Department

by S. TILDEN STERN

Art Director, Warner Pittsburgh Zone

S. TILDEN STERN

In every field of human activity there is a chasm without a bottom between the conceiving of an idea and its execution. Nowhere does this thought, once so neatly summed up in the sentence, "there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip" apply more completely than in an organization devoted to advertising. The director of advertising may conceive a notion that is potentially sales dynamite. But his art director may miss the precise point — the cutting edge of his idea and the dynamite is immediately transformed into a wet sock capable of neither form nor fury. I would say therefore that the first essential of an efficient advertising department is a clear understanding and close cooperation between the man who originated the campaigns and gives them direction and the individual who gives them form and substance—the artist.

Making the Layout

Usually preceded by a brief meeting in which the advertising director enlarges upon his ideas of where the emphasis should lie and what the style of the ad should be, copy is handed to the artist. It is then the artist's function to interpret the copy ideas in visual form, making that form fresh and individual. A good artist will, in this process create new embellishments that will add force and point to the copy ideas.

In order to avoid the necessity of making finished layouts and doing them over, it is the normal process in most art departments to rough the layout in pencil form. Often it will be necessary to work out several before you strike one that embodies all of the desired elements. Here again the understanding between advertising director and artist must be a clear one.

It is necessary that the advertising director recognize and properly evaluate the artist's ideas. It is at this stage of the game that the artist can tell and show on paper whether copy elements will be clear and not crowded—whether the copy will come up too small, whether the ad will have too many conflicting blocks of copy, or not enough copy (rare, indeed).

Typography and Photostats

From his rough, the artist can usually visualize the type requirements of the ad. The style and intent of the ad will determine the type face to be used—the emphasis requirements of the ad, the sizes of type in each part. The services of a good typographer are of inestimable value to the artist. He in a sense may do for the artist what the artist has done for the ad director. He will visualize and perfect the artist's ideas in respect to the ads type requirements.

Often advertising campaigns are based on the continual hammering, constant repetition of a single idea, slogan, or style of lettering, or art. The element to be presented thus will be essentially the same in each varied layout. A photostat or "lucy" eliminates the necessity of doing the same piece of hand-lettering, slogan device, or art over and over again. A "lucy" will direct the engraver as to size and position and make for speed and accuracy. The photostat also offers opportunities for variety by making use of it in positive and negative forms. The photostat is a time and money saver in the reproduction of reverse plates. The engraver's charge for reversing a block is many times higher than that of the photostater.

Files and Scrap Books

The artist's best friend, next to the hand he draws with, is a well filled, well organized file, consisting of a variety of photos of subjects, stars, drawings, etc. Clippings from publications to provide an artist with a variety of ideas, backgrounds, bands, groups, costume effects. It is essential that an artist keep abreast of the newest movement in illustration and art ideas. A subscription to a few of the better illustrated magazines will keep him up to the minute on the best advertising thought in the world and also enable him to build up this file.

It is as necessary to look behind as it is to look ahead. An artist can keep himself free from too frequent a repetition of his ideas and at the same time have a constant record of his own progress, by keeping a scrapbook containing all of his ads. Occasional reference to it will help the artist grow in ability and knowledge.

Merchants Aid Frank On Car and Cash Giveaway

A promotional non-cost stunt of no mean proportions was recently executed by Abe Frank, Lyric Theatre, Camden, N. J., on what he termed a "lucky award" contest, sponsored by the Business Men's Association there. Each merchant of the fifty stores cooperating paid an initial fee of $30, excluding cost of tickets given with each 25-cent admission. In addition to fee paid by merchants, cash donations were received from other quarters.

First prize was Studebaker auto, concern given mention in heralds in return for reduction in price of car; runners up received cash prizes. Campaign lasted thirty days and drawing was held in theatre, winner to be present to collect. All telephone poles within area of stores carried stenciled wooden shields bearing slogan "Buy from the Lucky Award Stores." All cooperating stores had window cards calling attention to stunt, trailer was run weekly plugging event, duplicate of car giveaway on display in lobby (see photo) and sound truck on streets also pulled trailer, on which was mounted duplicate of car. Special four-leaf heralds were distributed containing details of contest and merchants' ads.

One of the highlights of Lou Metzger's "Alibi Ike" campaign at the Spreckels Theatre, San Diego, Cal., was a tieup effected with local amateur baseball league, two leading teams of which played special game for the Joe E. Brown trophy sent by Warner Studios. A feature of the tieup was that one of the competing teams represented a large bakery which helped exploit the game by inserting special heralds advertising the game in loaves of bread.

Ballyhoo sandwich man in baseball uniform performed in manner of Nick Altrock throughout game, plugging and yelling "Alibi Ike." A novel window display consisted of tailor seated on stool sewing buttons on vests with sign copy calling attention to fact that the picture was a riot of button-bursting hilarity. Copy contained offer to replace free of charge all buttons blasted from vests of those seeing the picture.

Campbell Inaugurates Lucky Box Matinee

A "Lucky Box Matinee" is reported as working very successfully for Jack Campbell, Capitol, Brampton, Canada, which he inaugurated with his "Sequoia" opening. Twenty boxes were placed in his lobby and each boy and girl attending the Saturday matinee were permitted to write their names on a slip of paper and deposit it in any one of the boxes. The following week numbered slips representing the boxes were dropped into a hat, shaken, one of them picked out and all kids' names that appeared in that particular box were admitted free.

Jack says he intends continuing this for some time, because the kids get a kick out of it and it keeps them coming each week to see if they'll get in "fer nothin' " the following week.

NEWS NOTES FROM WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

The Chicago Amusement Publicists' gang spent Thursday night perfecting plans for the big Mardi Gras dinner-dance which they will hold in the Gold Room of the Congress Hotel on Saturday, October 19th. The association, which bids fair to become one of the leading organizations in the theatrical world, is modeling its gala attraction along the French Revue lines. In fact they have chosen to call their show "La Nudite Paree." Stars of the stage and screen will appear at this event, which marks the first anniversary of the organization. Numerous committees are at work on plans for the entertainment, decorations, ticket sales and the like. Only a certain number of tickets will be sold in order that all present may be taken care of comfortably. Tickets will be sold by CAPA members and the price is $2.50 a person.

Bill Weaver, who wrote this column when it was interesting reading, is back in town following a vacation in the backwoods. Bill is all suntanned and looks like a Kanaka. Which in Hawaiian is said to mean "Native Son."

Jack Fear, vice-president of Mascot Pictures, is a film row visitor this week. He in conferring with Ben Gudell regarding the new season's releases.

Harold Hopper, independent producer, stopped in Chicago for a few days. He plans to produce six feature pictures next season.

"Gay Deception," the Fox picture starring Francis Lederer and Frances Dee, was given a midnight preview at the United Artists theatre Monday.

The $1,000 Bank Night award at the Sheridan theatre was won by a stenographer who makes $16 a week. Some of the number jugglers figured that she now has a year's salary in advance.

Essaness executives say that modernization (it used to be called remodeling) of the Devon theatre will be completed by the end of the month and that work on the Avon and Clifford theatres, which they recently acquired, will start soon.

Clyde Eckhardt made a flying trip—by train—to New York this last week. He was called there for some important business conferences. He celebrated his twentieth anniversary with Fox Film on Friday the 13th.

Managerial changes at the Crawford theatre find Harry Grant in charge with Harry Neil assistant.

Emil Stern left for New York. Be gone a week.

Irving Mack is one of many Film Row lads to take his vacation in New York while the Baer-Louis fight is being staged. Irving will be a member of a party which has chartered a special train for the event.

Local theatremen are much concerned over the plans of the Balaban and Katz circuit in trying to change the present system of booking.

At present there is not much clearance between the "C" week houses and the first-run houses. B&K wants to change the schedule so that there will be at least seven days clearance between the two because now, if a "C" theatre plays a picture on Friday and Saturday, for example, the first-run house can play it starting Sunday, which is in another week.

The probable windup of the matter will be the rearranging of either the "A" or "B" week schedules, which now have three weeks clearance each, to have but two weeks. This would let the extra week come between the "C" week and first-run dates and would simplify matters.

However, not until the local circuits such as B&K, Essaness, Schoenstadt and Warner Bros. get together and decide what will work out best will the matter be settled completely. If no conference is held there is a possibility that the whole schedule may be thrown into a turmoil and the system now in use discarded.

Sidney Meyers, Miami, Fla., theatre operator, is in Chicago with his family on a vacation trip. Meyers operates 12 theatres in Florida and plans on enlarging his circuit shortly.

Fritz Blocki and wife Louise are both spending their spare time doing radio work. And with great results. Fritz writes the Mary McCormic programs which go national next month.

Ray Coffin and Attorney S. P. Halperin were in the city attending to "Bank Night" legal difficulties.

Max Weintraub, Des Moines exchange manager, is here making a few film deals for his group of exchanges.

Paul Fine leaves for Minneapolis to handle the roadshowing of "High School Girl" there.

Florence Paley, manager of the Haymarket theatre, left for northern Michigan on a vacation trip. She will also look for several theatres to add to her group of three.

Jimmie Hall, star of "Hell's Angels," was a film row visitor.

John LeRoy Johnston, Universal press chief on the Coast, visited along the Avenue. Johnston was escorting Marta Eggerth, Universal's newest foreign star, to Hollywood.

Jan Kiepura, foreign singing star, stopped over en route to Hollywood where he is under contract to Paramount.

Mrs. Fred Anderson of Morris is reported improving. She has been very ill for several days.

Frank Miller returned from a three weeks' vacation to resume his duties as manager of the Alamo theatre.

Film Row was very quiet the first part of the week. Possibly the Cubs-Giant series here had something to do with it.

Eleanor Stewart, Chicago photographic model, won the Times-MGM screen test search for talent. Out of 1,500 contestants Miss Stewart took top honors and gets a ten-day trip to Hollywood with a special screen test at MGM. Doris Arden, movie editor of the Times, will accompany her. Miss Stewart says she doesn't know what Hollywood will think of her as she doesn't smoke, drink, or care for night life.

Downstate, E. E. Alger broke all attendance records at his Peru theatre with a $375 "Cash Night" award offered. Alger had state police and city officials out to help handle the crowd, which was the largest ever to attend a theatrical event in Peru.

Irene Castle McLaughlin, whose dancing made her famous, denied a report that she had signed to play the part of a dance teacher in Paramount's filmusical "Collegiate." "I didn't sign any film contract," said the former film star.

The guy who isn't going to the Louis-Baer fight, nor to the Mussolini-Selassie match either, and probably not even to the Cub-Tiger go when and if that comes off, because everybody else on the Avenue is going to one, two or three of them and somebody's got to carry on, is

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

Gordon White Gets AMPA Season Started

Gordon White, who recently was chosen president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers by the board of governors to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Bruce Gallup, presided at the first meeting of the organization last week at Jack Dempsey's Corner. A record number of members and guests turned out for the first session and a varied array of talent was on hand to entertain.

Past presidents were on hand to honor Mr. White and Ed Finney, Mr. Gallup, Walter Eberhardt, George Harvey, Paul Lazarus, William R. Ferguson, Arthur James and John C. Flinn all delivered short addresses.

Joseph B. Basson, president of Operators' Union, Local 306, was one of the guest speakers and he gave an outline of the present operators' situation in New York.

Meetings will be held weekly as in the past, according to present plans, with the Dempsey restaurant the scene of the gatherings.

Fox Wisconsin Anniversary

Prediction that "Fox theatres of Wisconsin will be one of the major exhibiting companies in the entire country within another year" was made in Milwaukee last week by H. J. Fitzgerald, general manager of the circuit, at the launching of the circuit's 10th anniversary in conjunction with "Greatest Movie Week." Fox Wisconsin now operates 44 houses. Recent additions are the Calumet, Calumet, Mich., and the People, Laurin, Mich.

Schines Get Amsterdam Rialto

Meyer and Louis Schine have purchased Mort Shea's interest in the Rialto, Amsterdam, N. Y., thereby giving them full control of the house. Around January 1 the Schine brothers plan to open a new theatre in Bucyrus, O., making seven for the circuit in that state.

"Time" Resumes Friday

"The March of Time," after a recess during July and August, will release the sixth issue on Friday of this week, according to Ralph Rolan. The reel will be released monthly by RKO Radio.

A REAL FIND

LITERALLY, the news about Eastman Super X spread like wildfire. Never has a film "caught on" faster, or been more widely adopted in so short a time. The reason: Super X is a real find for the cinema world. Introducing new standards of speed and photographic quality, coupled with rare versatility, it represents a major advance in raw-film research . . . a true contribution to the art of the motion picture. are the "talk of the town" wherever they are installed. And . . . it's the profitable kind of talk that pays at the box office. These swanky, modern seats have the class and comfort which your patrons want and will come back to, again and again. Heywood Streamline Chairs help to create distinctive decorative effects. Their trimly tailored, metal edge backs make it easy for patrons to "spot" vacant seats . . . thus quickening traffic all over your house. No more delays or fumbling in the aisles. There are many more advantages which we shall be pleased to demonstrate in detail. A note to any Heywood-Wakefield sales office will bring ready response.

COMFORTABLE VISION

HIGH Intensity Projection allows ample general illumination for comfortable vision from the moment of entrance into the theatre. It dispels that annoying period of blindness. Patrons appreciate the ability to find their seats without stumbling or groping.

National High Intensity Projector Carbons make available to theatres of every size a comfortable level of general illumination.

National High Intensity Projector Carbons, in addition to comfortable vision, bring the further satisfaction of perfect projection. They improve the depth and realism of black and white and make colored pictures especially pleasing.

The new and popular colored films are photographed in the snow-white light from National Motion Picture Studio Carbons. Perfect reproduction requires projection light of the same quality. High Intensity Projection meets this requirement and reveals the full beauty of color productions.

A modern PITTCO THEATRE FRONT Builds up Business!

THAT'S BEEN the experience of many theatre proprietors who have "Modernized Main Street" by remodeling their theatres with new Pittco Theatre Fronts. Pittco Fronts bring the people in, widen your circle of patronage, add to box office figures, and usually pay for themselves in a short time by the extra business they draw.

Pittco Store Front Products, so widely successful in the store field, are ideally applicable to theatre remodeling, too. And today, because of the National Housing Act, it's relatively easy for you to remodel your theatre with them. If necessary, you need merely apply to a local lending institution for a loan (up to $50,000) to assist you in modernizing. Our representative will gladly help you negotiate such a loan.

But first you'll need complete facts on Pittco Fronts, illustrations of how they have helped the appearance and the business of other theatres and stores, and an idea of what they cost. Our Pittco Store Front booklet, profusely illustrated, contains all this interesting material. Sign and mail the coupon for your free copy . . . today.

MAKING THE DEAFENED PATRONS AGAIN

1.—The Equipment

The first of two articles on facilities enabling the person with impaired hearing to enjoy the motion picture. The second article will concern exploiting problems

By H. C. ROLLS

HEARING AID equipment is essentially a sound-producing mechanism, suitably activated, to be worn on or held against the head of a person whose hearing does not respond clearly and well to normal sound such as that from a theatre loudspeaker. Increasing exhibitor interest in such aids, indispensable for the estimated 10 per cent to 20 per cent of the population who cannot otherwise enjoy the modern picture, has been more than paralleled by technical advances in equipment, and there are today commercially available at least four fundamentally different "head-pieces," with numerous sub-varieties of each. In addition there are not less than three different and distinct ways of getting sound into those receivers, and other variations almost without number.

Choice and installation of a hearing aid system, with due consideration to the range of equipment and methods offered, raises five separate questions that are not, however, unrelated to each other. The first to be discussed below is perhaps the most impor- and will largely govern the decisions made with respect to the others.

In many theatres the patron who requests it, is furnished with a head set or other hearing aid at the box office, taking it with him to one of specified seats and there plugging it into a suitable receptacle. In others, an usher supplies the portable unit on request; in still others, the patron receives nothing but a key with which to unlock a small box that contains the necessary individual equipment, and in some theatres the apparatus is openly available in a definite row of seats.

The location of the seats in which hearing aid is provided will depend largely upon which of the above methods is chosen as best suited to a given theatre, and that location in turn will have an important bearing on the means used for supplying such seats with wired sound.

SOURCES OF SOUND

Of the three possible methods of securing sound for this purpose, the simplest is to wire the hearing aids directly to the output of the projection room amplifier, in parallel connection to the screen speakers. Since the latter are usually of low impedance and hearing aids have, or can be obtained in, high impedance, this method of connection will not interfere in any way with the normal sound, provided only that the projection room amplifier has sufficient reserve volume to supply approximately one watt of sound power for each hearing unit.

Where this reserve of volume is not available, recourse must be had to a second method, again using the projection room amplifier, but connecting to it through a second, hearing aid amplifier, which will provide sufficient power for the number of units installed without taking any more from the screen speakers than they can spare. The output power of this special amplifier should be in the order of one watt for each hearing unit, and the gain will depend upon the amount of input power that can safely be taken from the screen.

An important objection to either of these methods is the wiring cost involved, since connections must be run from the projection room to the seats to be supplied. The cost of installing those connections is governed partly by the seat location chosen (which, as will be seen, is more important than wiring charges) and partly by the geography of the theatre.

A second objection to either of the above methods, which is sometimes no objection at all and in other cases of paramount importance, lies in the possible attitude of the manufacturer of the sound equipment, who may or may not oppose such additions, or may possibly wish to limit the theatre's choice of hearing aids to his own equipment. The theatre may welcome his assistance, or may prefer to obtain hearing aids elsewhere. In the latter event contractual relations may make the projection room equipment useless as a source of sound for this special purpose.

5,000,000

A third method of providing sound for the individual units can be used in every theatre, and is economically possible anywhere by reason of the low cost of modern sound equipment. This is to install a separate microphone and amplifier for each group of seats to be equipped. Microphone and amplifier together, of excellent quality, can often be obtained at much less than the cost of running wires in conduit from the projection room. Choice of wired seats is then made entirely independent of theatre geography except that a wall or column or other architectural object will be convenient as a means for mounting the microphone out of harm's way, and running concealed wires to the units.

If a second set of seats are to be wired, immediately or in the future, a second microphone and amplifier, equally inexpensive, can be located elsewhere in the auditorium, thereby serving those among the deafened who may fear to make their infirmity conspicuous by sitting in a single location known to be equipped for their assistance.

In some theatres the microphones used for this purpose are mounted behind the screen, directly in front of the speakers, but this practice involves an expense in wiring seldom necessary with modern high-gain amplifiers and directional microphones. In extreme cases, a parabolic reflector of the type used for distant pickup in recording can be mounted behind the microphone, but the need for this assistance will be very rare. In most auditoriums a high-gain amplifier and directional microphone, mounted reasonably close to the front of the theatre, are all that will be needed.

AMPLIFICATION

One watt of sound power per hearing unit remains necessary regardless of whether the source of sound is in the projection room or a separate microphone, and this requirement, plus the power output of the sound source, will govern the rating of the amplifier chosen. Operating power for the amplifier can be obtained by plugging into the nearest available lighting line. If the amplifier is mounted visibly and concealed by decorative covering, care must be taken to allow it reasonable ventilation, or some part may burn out. Concealment plus ventilation will not be difficult, since an amplifier powerful enough to supply twenty or more seats need not be larger than about one foot square.

THE HEARING UNITS

Vast progress has been made in this item of equipment, and whereas a few years ago only standard headphones were used for hearing aid, a wide variety of units is now on the market. Headphones of the standard type are still used, and are least expensive. Headphones of special construction, built for lightness and comfort, are also offered, and likewise headphones of special construction, exceptionally light in weight, which do not contain the conventional magnet wiring, but use instead the piezo-electric crystal of Rochelle Salt.

However, it is no longer necessary to wear headphones of any kind, since lorgnette-type arrangements that are held against the ear with the greatest convenience, and without injury to a woman's hair dress, are available in a number of designs. When equipped with the new lightweight receivers they can be used without fatigue.

Bone conduction units are also popular. These are not phone, and do not operate in connection with the ear, but present a surface vibration at the frequency of the sound waves, which is held or worn against one of the bones of the skull —the bone behind the ear, and also the cheek bones or even the fore-

STANDARD PRACTICE IN THEATRE DESIGN

By BEN SCHLANGER

Seeking a basis for more effective exhibition in accordance with trends in motion picture retailing

THE MOTION PICTURE theatre building is one of the most specialized types of structures. There are about 17,000 such structures in this country alone, and recent reports show that a considerable number of these are being remodeled, and still more are being newly erected. These buildings have been and are being erected, according to no particular set of design standards—standards, for example, which would determine correct and efficient ratios between depth, width and height of structure, the number of seats per cubic foot of auditorium, proper viewing distances, etc. This lack must certainly point to inefficiency and a quality of exhibition that is extremely uncertain.

There is probably no other specialized type of building, erected in such great numbers in so short a space of time as the cinema, and no other type which has gone through such rapid changes due to new developments in their functioning. Nevertheless, the swift pace that the motion picture has set must be reflected in the structures which house it. The difficulties are obvious. If the motion picture structure were a machine, made to a set of dies and sold like automobiles, the difficulties would be appreciably minimized, but instead the design of theatre structures is subject to so many variations in requirements that it almost seems hopeless to attempt to establish definite standards of design.

Just what are these variables? How important are they? Which of them may be entirely discounted on further consideration? Perhaps a careful investigation may show that a more simple set of requirements are more feasible. For the past six years I have been studying these variables, and now I feel that it is ripe to make some definite assumptions which will form a firm basis upon which some standards for motion picture theatre design can be arrived at. Through the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and the co-operation of such motion picture theatre architects as may be interested, these findings may soon be formulated into a set of standards.

THREE BASIC PROBLEMS

Outlined here are three basic problems which have long deterred design:

(1) Eliminating the idea that the stage theatre must be accommodated in motion picture theatre structures. The two theatres function in entirely different ways. (I have always stressed that the motion picture theatre was important enough in itself to warrant a structure purely designed for its own use. Now this fact is recognized, as is apparent both by the rapid decrease in stage shows in combination with the motion picture performance and the complete elimination of the stage in practically all new motion picture theatres.)

(2) Limiting the size and seating capacity of the motion picture theatre. In a previous article in BETTER THEATRES regarding this problem, I said, "There should be many smaller theatres in preference to fewer larger ones. More theatres carefully placed and sized according to the communities they serve seem necessary."

It is needless to point out the increased importance of the smaller neighborhood motion picture theatre since that time. We can place the average and desirable seating capacity definitely between 400 and 1,000 seats. In a recent article, MOTION PICTURE HERALD stated:

"Theatres having capacities of between 200 and 500 seats far exceed in number those theatres of any other size, 8,190—almost half of the 16,849 total. Seven-eighths of all the theatres in the country seat under 1,000 persons, there being about 14,500 in this classification."

It should be noted that only 1,077 or 7% of the total number of theatres in the United States have a capacity of 1,500 or more seats. The effective seating capacity of the latter group of theatres may be considered as being at least 25% less in each theatre because of the number of seats in each instance which are poorly placed for good vision. Analysis of these statistics show that a seating capacity of 1,500 could very safely be assumed as the maximum audience. Additional justification for ignoring the small number of existing theatres having capacities over 1,500 is evidenced by the fact that most of these theatres were not erected solely for the motion picture. The high cost of presenting stage performances and the limited number of performances per day demanded larger seating capacities to insure an equitable income per performance. On the other hand, a minimum seating capacity is well adapted to the motion picture because the cost of film product is relatively low, and the number of shows per day on that same cost is increased.

The statistical tabulation of seating capacities of theatres in the United States shows the small town classification predominating, with 8,190 theatres of capacities of from 200 to 500 seats. The question now arises as to how much above this capacity a larger town or city motion picture theatre would need. Although 1,500 seating capacity has been considered in this report as the high for establishing standards, it may be shown that very few, if any, motion picture theatres need have more than 1,000 seats. A dense population within a limited territory does not warrant the erection of a motion picture theatre having much over 600 seats. Such neighborhoods could readily support two smaller units rather than one larger one. The greater choice in program thus obtained encourages more habitual patronage. The only reason for the existence of the unit having a capacity of more than 600 seats lies in the availability of first-run film product. The motion picture public today, however, is more inclined to see a picture at a later date in a more intimate and pleasing theatre at a lower admission price, rather than go to a less accessible theatre, pay more and quite probably sit in an undesirable seat. This fact will soon place even the first-run unit nearer to the 1,000-seat capacity. The recent September 14th issue of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD presented figures showing the increase of neighborhood over centrally located theatre patronage.

(3) The third problem concerns elimination of the traditional architectural ornamentation, the extraneous ornamental proscenium, and the chandelier lighting vogue from the motion picture theatre auditorium.

FUNCTION AND FORMS

We now know that only the requirements of vision and acoustics must determine the architectural shape of the motion picture theatre auditorium, and not some purely traditional architectural scheme. Quoting from the previous article in BETTER THEATRES: "Much of the effect desirable in the theatre interior must be obtained by the use and control of light. It is here that the mistake is often made. The walls and ceiling are usually designed as if they were going to be seen in broad daylight, neglecting the fact that the light in the auditorium of a theatre must be kept quite dim during most of the performance. Thus the architectural forms employed are blotted out and have little or no effect on the theatre patron actually during the performance.

"To correct this, most existing theatres light up the various separated architectural motifs, which only become annoying by their incoherent, spotty effect, and detract from the presentation. This same spotty effect is also caused by hanging bracketed

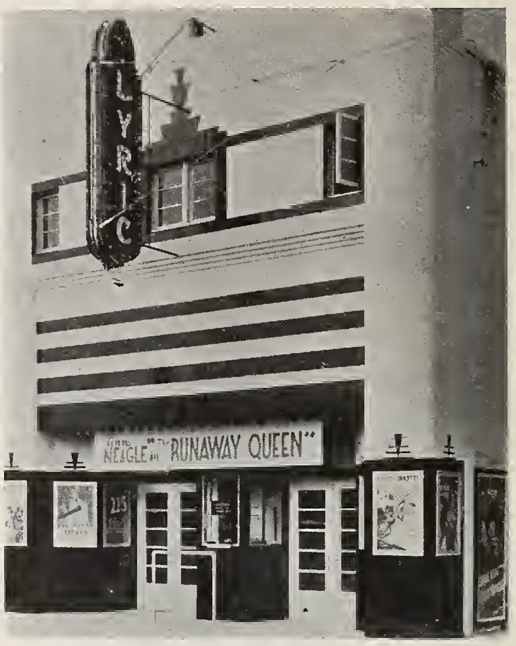
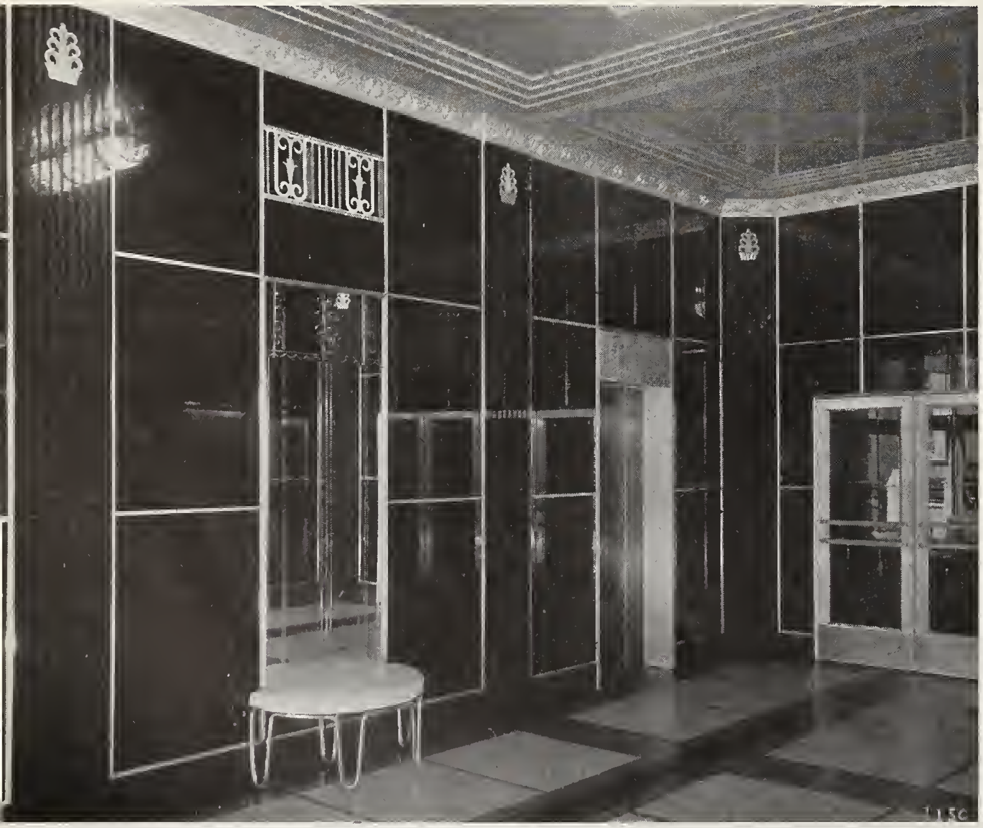
The Lyric theatre in Lubbock, Tex. (below) presents an interesting exterior revision involving projection room windows. Jet black Carrara glass was used to a height of 8 feet, and the same material in white on the end columns and top facings. S. B. Haynes was the architect.





The inner lobby of the Grand theatre in Terre Haute, Ind., is shown above. The treatment carries out the same general pattern as the outer lobby, but is more ornamental. The walls are faced in Carrara glass of jet black, but have aluminum mouldings as well as sand-blasted flutings, and aluminum ornament has been added. New modern lighting fixtures, and a terrazzo floor completed the revision. The Grand is owned by the Western Indiana Theatres. Architects, Miller and Yeager.

The Pickwick theatre in Corinth, Miss., is shown below, with its new exterior treatment. The facing material is Carrara glass in a soft jade color, and this has been enlivened with trim in aluminum. The cost was $425 for the architectural glass and for the aluminum mouldings.

SAVING FUEL BY CHECKING HEAT LOSS

Discussing principal factors in establishing a maximum heating plant load in keeping with economical and efficient operation

PERHAPS BECAUSE of our acquaintance with heating methods very early in life, as children in the homes of our parents, the general conception of heat is familiar to everyone. Frequently it is looked upon as a necessary evil—the colder the winter, the more pronounced the evil. So in theatre operation the manager just accepts his boiler or heating plant for better or worse. Its operation is seldom supervised, and the study of the basic facts pertaining to the heating problem is treated with indifference.

Consider the following in connection with the heating problem: If a theatre is once heated to 72°, all the continuous heat required from the boiler is just sufficient to make up for the heat lost from the theatre. Hence each day when the theatre is once brought up to the required temperature, the rate at which the heating plant must work is determined by the rate at which the heat escapes from the building.

Heat is transmitted from volumes of air or gases or solids of higher temperature to the surrounding media of lower temperature, just as water runs from a high level to a lower level. The greater the difference in temperature, the more rapid the exchange of heat. This is a basic law of thermo-dynamics. In summer, therefore, with air conditioning, we strive to keep the heat from entering into the theatre, because the higher temperature is outside.

HEAT LOSS AND ITS PREVENTION

HEAT IS TRANSMITTED to some extent through practically all materials. The more rapid the passage of heat through a material, the poorer that material is as a heat or cold insulator, and the less rapid the passage of heat through a material, the better it is as an insulator.

Heat is lost from a theatre by transmission and by infiltration or exfiltration. The important factor in heat lost from the theatre by transmission is the material of which the theatre is built and the type of construction, while the important factor governing the quantity of infiltration or exfiltration is the tightness of the building construction, especially the fitting of doors, windows and the dampers in gravity ventilators. Infiltration is the entrance of cold air from the outside into the theatre, and exfiltration is the seepage of warm air from the theatre to the outside. It is therefore easily understandable that both infiltration and exfiltration add to the heating load of the boiler.

WIND AND AIR DENSITY

There are two natural causes that aggravate the cause of filtration. The first is wind pressure, and the second is the difference in density of the warm air inside the theatre and the colder air on the outside. Wind cannot blow against a building but from one direction; consequently there is a tendency for air to enter or be forced into the theatre on the windward side through all cracks around doors or in walls or through porous building material, and a like quantity of air is sucked out or leaves the theatre on the leeward side. Actual tests have proved that this process of filtration is active regardless of the mechanical equipment, such as fans, that might be in operation at the time in the building. In other words, the small pressures that fans can build up within an auditorium are quite ineffectual in reducing to any great extent the winter-time filtration of air. This being a fact, the filtration of air into or out of a building must be seriously considered. To reduce this uncontrolled flow of air the theatre must be made tight—this applies especially to doors, exit doors in particular, and ceiling gravity vents.

Air leakage is not entirely confined to cracks. What we consider solid masonry walls permit air to filter through. For instance, a five-mile-an-hour wind will force 1.44 cubic feet of air per square foot of wall area per hour into the theatre. If this wall is plastered, only .005 cubic feet of air will be forced through. A twenty-five mile wind will drive 16.3 cubic feet of air through every foot of exposed wall, but when plastered only .067 cubic feet will come through. These figures are given here only to emphasize the fact that a substantial quantity of heat is required to nullify the effect of filtration. This is especially so in some of the older theatres that are not of the reinforced concrete type of construction.

HEAT TRANSMISSION

As earlier implied, heat is also lost from the theatre by transmission. This process of transmission takes place when the air in the theatre heats the plaster on the wall, the plaster then heats the masonry, and after penetrating the brick escapes to the outside air. In other words, the heat on the inside actually penetrates through the material of construction to the outside atmosphere.

Transmission is one of the greatest factors in determining the boiler load. The calculation for heat transmission losses are made by multiplying the area in square feet of the wall, the roof or the material through which the loss takes place, by a number which is constant for a particular construction or a particular material. This number is known as the coefficient of transmission for the particular material. The coefficient of transmission have been carefully calculated for a great variety of materials and combination of materials. Tables giving these coefficients are given in all handbooks or manuals on heating. The coefficient of heat transmission is always expressed in B.T.U. per hour per square foot of surface per degree Fahrenheit difference in temperature, between the air on the inside of the wall or other material, and the air on the outside of the wall. Usually the coefficient has been calculated and based on the condition of a fifteen-mile-per-hour wind.

For example: A 12-inch thick solid brick wall with metal lath and ¾-inch of plaster furred on the inside of the wall, has a coefficient of transmission of .25. If, let us suppose, the wall of the theatre under consideration is 80 feet long and an average of 35 feet high, there would be 2,800 square feet of wall area. Now the tem-

PUMP OPERATION: Nearly every theatre has one or more pumps as part of its mechanical equipment, and when one considers the care given these pumps it is rather surprising that they function at all. Naturally one can't tell how efficiently a pump is working by looking at it from the outside, and inspections are usually limited to seeing whether or not the pump is leaking.

The installation of gauges on both the suction and the discharge sides of the pump are practically a necessity if the performance of the pump is to be checked. After the gauges are installed have some one who knows pumps determine what the suction and discharge pressures should be—then mark those pressures right on the gauge. After that any time that you look at the pump the gauges will immediately indicate its performance, or the general location and nature of the trouble. Many a manager is damning his air washer without knowing that it is the pump that is to blame.

FAN EFFICIENCY: In many theatres the exhaust or delivery fans are located in penthouses on the roof of the theatre. Unless these fans are directly connected by ducts to the source of the air from which they are drawing, the enclosed space about them forms a plenum chamber. This plenum chamber should be air-tight. Every crack or crevice means waste because the fans draw air from where it can get it with the least resistance.

In the case of a delivery fan and an air washer, this means that the fan is drawing air through holes, cracks and crevices, and that this air has not passed through the air washer. Hence the extraneous air is making the system just that much less efficient.

Frequently in the case of exhaust fans, air is sucked through the cracks of the penthouse and immediately discharged again to the outside, consequently less air is removed from the theatre. Few managers appreciate the tremendous quantities of air that can be sucked in through what appears to be just a few cracks. Very often this quantity of air is the difference between a satisfactory system and an unsatisfactory system.

FAN SPEED: The driving pulley is called the "driver," and the pulley that is turned by the driver is called the "driven." The pulley on the motor is the driver; the one on the fan, the driven. The formula for determining their relationship is:

Diameter of the driver times revolutions-per-minute of the driver, equals the diameter of the driven times the revolutions-per-minute of the driven.

From this formula anyone who can solve an equation and knows any three of the four factors making up the above equation, can determine the fourth or unknown quantity. Stating the above equation as a proportion or ratio:

The r. p. m. of the driver is to the r. p. m. of the driven as the diameter of the driven is to the diameter of the driver.

Since the diameter is twice the radius, the speed of the motor is to the speed of the fan as the radius of the fan pulley is to the radius of the motor pulley.

This may read somewhat complicated, but take a pencil, paper, rule and r. p. m. counter, and check your fans by this formula, and you will understand it clearly.

perature inside is 72° F., and we will assume the outside temperature to be 30° F.; the temperature difference in degrees is, therefore, 42°. The total heat per hour transmitted through that wall would then be .25 x 2,800 x 42, or 29,400 B.T.U. per hour. Following through with this method for all of the walls, doors, the floor and ceiling, using the proper coefficients, then totaling all the losses, the sum would represent a substantial part of the heating plant load which you have to provide for in your theatre.

Combine the heat losses by infiltration, exfiltration, transmission and the heat required to raise the temperature of the air brought in each hour by the fans and you will have a pretty accurate picture of the basic heating problem for your particular theatre, based on actual, unescapable requirements.

It is fully realized that the foregoing instructions are in no sense complete enough to enable an inexperienced man to calculate the heat losses of a particular theatre, but it should make a manager or owner realize that the proper heating of a building is not just a guessing problem, but a mathematical computation. It further breaks the problem down to certain definite factors, which are presented in their proper relative proportion.

DETERMINING THE PROPER PLANT LOAD

THERE IS A GREAT effort to sell "heat and cold" insulation to theatre men. If you know what the transmission losses are for your theatre and what proportion they are of your total load, then knowing the cost of operating for a season you can readily calculate what those transmission losses are costing each year. Knowing such facts about your property, you will not be at the mercy of those calculating the amount and kind of insulation needed for your theatre.

THE AUDIENCE FACTOR

In the foregoing discussion nothing has been said about the number of people in the theatre. The number of people in a theatre always helps the situation slightly in the winter time. In summer we accept the fact that each person gives off 400 B.T.U. per hour. At that season of the year the occupancy becomes a substantial part of the cooling load. But in winter time the human load is not nearly so important a factor. For winter calculations we do not consider anything but the sensible heat given off by a person, and this amounts to 280 B.T.U.'s per hour. If there were 2,000 persons in the theatre, this heat would only amount to 560,000 B.T.U.'s per hour. Compare this quantity with the 140,000 B.T.U.'s in one gallon of No. 2 fuel oil, or the 14,000 B.T.U.'s per pound of a good grade of soft coal, or the 900 to 1,100 B.T.U.'s per cubic foot of natural gas, or the 525 B.T.U.'s per cubic foot of manufactured gas. Should you make the comparison of the B.T.U.'s thrown off by the audience as a percentage off-set of the total heat load, you would very readily see that the heat given off by human beings in winter does not help nearly so much in creating comfortable temperatures as some would lead you to believe.

HEAT LOSS ANALYSIS

I am convinced that every theatre could well afford to have a detailed heat loss survey made by a competent heating engineer. Such a survey in all of its detail would be invaluable in the permanent file of the theatre in pointing out the things that could be done to reduce fuel costs. I am sure that the twenty or twenty-five dollars that such a survey would cost could be saved in the first few months of the heating season. Please note that I suggest the survey be made by an engineer, not just a heating contractor. Too frequently the heating contractor is but a practical man who has a few rules of thumb to guide him in his work.

All savings, to be really worth while, must be reflected in fuel conservation, as the cost of fuel is the big item in the heating budget. Most industries that consume as much fuel as theatres, buy their fuel on specifications based upon its calorific or B.T.U. value per unit of fuel. However, theatres could not profit much by merely changing the method of buying fuel, because the heating plants are so miserably operated and cared for that more B.T.U.'s are wasted up the stack than could ever be saved by a change in buying methods. Not until it becomes still harder for exhibitors to make money will it be possible to make them conscious of the wastes going on year after year in heating plants—and for that matter in the general maintenance policies of theatres.

GAS AS FUEL FOR HEATING

IN A PREVIOUS article [July 27th issue] the subject of coal and fuel oil was dealt with at some length. Space does not permit repeating it here. There is another fuel that is rapidly becoming of some importance in the theatre heating field—it is gas.

Gas is either natural or manufactured. With the extensive pipe lines for conveying natural gas each year, new areas are having this most convenient form of fuel made available. In many localities it is about the ideal fuel for theatre operation. It is clean, requires no space for storage, and permits of completely automatic control.

In the process of combustion, gas gives off a large amount of water vapor as one of the by products. Generally, this escapes up the chimney, carrying with it a substantial quantity of heat. In fact about 10% of the total heat of the gas is represented by the latent heat of this water vapor. For the purpose of heating for comfort, it is impractical to attempt to retrieve this latent heat, because in order to do so it would necessary to detain the flue gases in the boiler until the temperature of the gases dropped below about 130° to 125°.

If you happen to be burning gas in your theatre, examine the flues on the inside and the breeching where it goes over to the stack and see if you detect evidence of moisture. I have seen evidence of moisture on almost four out of five boilers that I have inspected. Moisture definitely indicates too much baffling of the passages of the flue gases, and such moisture has been found very detrimental to the inside of boilers, flues and breechings, and chimney connections. There should be just enough baffling so that this condensation does not take place, but not so little baffling that the combustion gases pass too quickly up the stack.

The heat or calorific value of natural gas generally ranges about 1,100 B.T.U.'s per cubic foot. The actual B.T.U. value varies somewhat depending upon the section of the country that produces it. You might inquire of your gas company the B.T.U. content of a cubic foot of the gas that you are using.

In the past there has been a great deal of mixing of gases. Frequently natural gas is mixed with manufactured gas in order to give the latter a higher calorific value. In fact there has been so much adulteration of gas that most of the States have passed legislation establishing limits, both maximum and minimum, for the

B.T.U. content. The composition of gas is not necessarily the same in adjacent districts or even in the same district.

In burning gas, anywhere from 5 to 11 cubic feet of air is required per cubic foot of gas, depending upon the particular characteristics of the gas. The design of the gas burner for a particular boiler has a great deal to do with satisfactory gas firing. The gas pressure also affects the type of burner and the quantity of air required.

If natural gas is available in your territory, it will be proper to investigate the possibilities of using it. It may be the answer to further economy. It removes a source of dirt and it requires very little attention, as it can be made to operate automatically.—J. T. K.

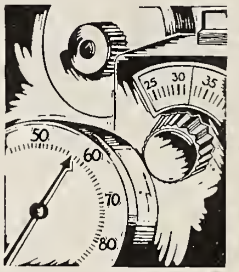
Reports on developments in products used by theatres



NEW SOUNDHEADS AND SOUND PROJECTOR

● Two major items in sound equipment have been added to the line of the S.O.S. Corporation of New York. One consists in two models of soundheads, a senior and junior; the other is a professional sound projector.

Marketed under the trade name of "Duplex-Ace," the projector is a complete unit supplied with amplifier and rectifier. It is adapted to any make of lamphouse. The main frame and casing are of aluminum casting. The soundhead is provided with a cylindrical sound slit in conjunction with General Electric lamp and a scanning slit adjustment of 8/10,000-inch for a frequency response of 9,000 cycles. Oiling is by means of centralized cups with a direct feed line to the moving parts. The shutter is of rear type, and an automatic douser is provided. The intermittent movement employs Geneva type star and cam entirely enclosed in an oil bath. All bearings are of alloy bronze. Optical equipment is by Bausch & Lomb.

New "Duplex-Ace" Sound Projector.

A senior model of its Cinemaphone soundhead has been added for adaptation to both Simplex and Powers projectors. The main characteristics of this model are: Curved aperture of hardened chromium, impedance roller of precision machining, complete shielding of the photocell in a separate compartment, pre-set full-size optical system of Bausch & Lomb components, hard sprocket and film stripper, four - way exciter lamp adjustments, dynamically balanced driven pulley, heavy duty bronze bearings on drive shaft, offset motor brackets. The manufacturer claims for the head and its amplification system, an undistorted frequency response of from 60 to 9,000 cycles.

This manufacturer and supply house also has available now a complete line of public address equipment, and a special catalog has been issued on it. All the microphones in the line, which includes those of crystal type, are designed for operation without polarizing voltage, and are available with output impedances of from 200 to 500 ohms. The catalog also illustrates a variety of amplifiers, pre-amplifiers, speakers, horns and units, and accessories necessary for public address systems in the theatre and for ballyhoo trucks.

THEATRE EQUIPMENT FOR THE HARD-OF-HEARING

● A group hearing system for installation in theatres, providing for suitable amplification, individual volume control and a selection of earphones, is now available in the line of equipment for the hard-of-hearing manufactured by the Trimm Radio Manufacturing Company of Chicago. The earphones (headsets of bone conduction type are also supplied) are of extremely light weight in both headband and lorgnette styles. In the usual installation volume control for each phone is provided in a combined unit with the outlet jack, contained in a metal box attached to the chair just below the arm rest.

NEW ELECTRICALLY DRIVEN REWINDER

● An automatic rewinder based in its design on another model of higher price, has been developed by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago. It is operated by a 1/6-h.p. motor. Cabinet construction is of hot-rolled steel with oxyacetylene weldings. Up to 3,000 feet of film can be accommodated.

Automatic control is provided through a cast-iron brake drum and Prony type friction brake. A mercury tube opens and closes the circuit, and the rewind will not operate until the door is closed. The shafts are 9/16-inch in diameter, are of mirror steel and fitted with milled slot keys.

DRY TYPE PORTABLE FIRE EXTINGUISHER

● A portable fire extinguisher employing dry chemical from which the extinguishing gas is generated following emission, has been marketed by the Garrison Engineering Corporation of Waterbury, Conn. The larger models are similar in size and shape to the liquid chemical type in common use, and in addition a "gun" type is available, especially designed for quick action in extremely small blazes. All models may be readily refilled by the owner of the appliance himself. Action of the dry chemical is to release, when in contact with heat, an inert oxygen-excluding gas, which smothers the fire. The more intense the fire, the greater is the extinguishing action, which continues as long as there is heat. The compound or its gas will not injure fabrics or other materials.

PORTABLE GENERAL UTILITY LAMPS

greatly facilitated by portable adjustable lamps working on small storage batteries, and the line of the Carpenter Manufacturing Company of Boston contains a variety of kinds. There is a work light capable of supplying illumination in an area of 100 feet for up to 50 hours of continuous service. This model weighs 35 pounds. Another, weighing 27 pounds, is designed for 20 hours of continuous service. These are the types adapted to general utility purposes encountered in the theatre. They are of reflector type, directing a beam with the lighting unit adjustable sidewise or up and down.

NEW AUTOMATIC SLIDE PROJECTOR

● A motor-driven slide projector which may be plugged into the regular lighting circuit has been developed by the Best Devices Company of Cleveland. The slide wheel holds ten standard slides, which, under automatic control, can be projected on the screen for from 10 to 30 seconds, as desired. The projection range is up to 75 feet, with adjustment possible for a variety of image sizes. The manufacturer recommends the use of a 500-watt incandescent lamp, but satisfactory results may be obtained with the use of a 400-watt bulb. This projector is supplied complete with 10 feet of cord, a switch and bi-convex lens, and is obtainable for either a.c. or d.c.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● The C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company, makers of projection lamps, has removed its factory and sales department from Los Angeles to Long Island City, New York. The address is 4731 Thirty-fifth Avenue. C. E. Ruth is in charge of the Western office, which is located in the Film Exchange Building, Los Angeles.

The Carrier Engineering Corporation of Newark, N. J., manufacturers of air-conditioning equipment, has made available to theatres having its equipment, a trailer of 100 feet showing interesting phases of the cooling system. The film brings out the point that the theatre showing the film is equipped similarly to large metropolitan deluxe houses. There is a musical accompaniment. The running time is one and a half minutes. The trailer was prepared by the National Screen Service, Inc., New York, from whom the prints are available.

The tentative program for the Society of Motion Pictures Engineers convention in Washington calls for the usual four days, the semi-annual banquet and an equipment exhibit. The dates are October 21-24, at the Wardman Park Hotel.

NEW TECHNIQUE FOR ELIMINATING SPOTTY EFFECT IN COVE LIGHTING

COVE LIGHTING, which modern architecture has elevated to eminence in the illumination of the theatre, can better meet the new importance given it as the result of recent developments which make it not only more effective as a medium of decoration, but more efficient as a source of illumination. Certain phases of the newer technique were brought out by Mr. C. S. Woodside of Westinghouse in a paper presented before the annual meeting of the Illuminating Engineering Society of Cincinnati on September 4. Mr. Woodside is director of the Photometric Laboratories of the Westinghouse Lamp Company.

"There are many ways by which desirable effects can be obtained by more efficient methods than have been applied in the past," said Mr. Woodside. "New and unfamiliar materials, currently used in building and decoration, and the wide variety of possible light sources, together with the constant struggle for the ingenious, have combined to make the problem for the architect and engineer quite complex.

"Recent modernization plans have included ceiling and wall coves as well as ceiling coffers. The Beaux Arts-I.E.S. competition this year indicated that student architects are giving more attention to this type of lighting. Analysis shows that many of them would not produce satisfactory results, from a standpoint of lighting efficiency.

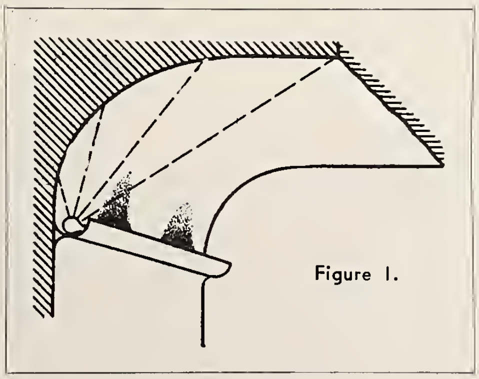

Figure 1.

"Basically, cove lighting is a form of indirect illumination wherein the wall or ceiling becomes a secondary light source. This being the case, it is quite essential that the wall or ceiling reflecting surface

F. H. RICHARDSON'S
BLUEBOOK OF PROJECTION

700 PAGES OF TEXT, CHARTS AND DATA

A new Blue Book by Richardson is always an event of signal importance to the motion picture industry. It is being issued at this time to meet the truly urgent demand of thousands of users of the old Blue Books for an accurate, modern evaluation of the changes and refinements in the art and science of sound reproduction and projection including all the apparatus. Richardson's expert knowledge makes this latest treatise, in the opinion of leading authorities, the most comprehensive, most useful projection manual ever published.

$5.25

The new Blue Book contains nearly 700 pages and 153 illustrations—photographs and schematics of every description. Large readable type for easy visibility in the projection room under all conditions. Its low price of $5.25 and its handiness in one volume are two additional important features.

should be of a diffusing nature. For best results, the ceiling or coffer should be vaulted, with the light source located just beneath the spring of the curve."

Mr. Woodside classified cove lighting into three groups: (1) the continuous light source; (2) spaced lamps, and (3) individual projectors. Efforts have been made to lift the practical value of cove lighting as an illuminant, to make this kind of illumination practical as well as decorative.

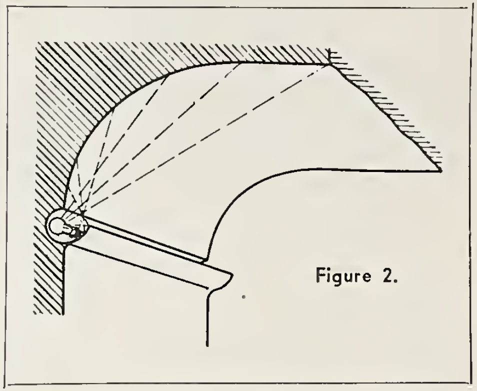

Figure 2.

The chief objection to cove lighting cited by Mr. Woodside in the spaced lamp method, is the spotty or scalloped effect produced on the ceiling or wall when the trough is fastened flat against the wall. Alternate white and dark spots, which are neither desirable in decoration nor advantageous from a viewpoint of efficient lighting, frequently result. In this method the lamps should never be installed in a cove which fastens flush to the wall (Figure 1), since this produces a pronounced scalloped effect.

"Some installations," Mr. Woodside pointed out, "have employed low-wattage lamps on 6- and 9-inch centers to avoid scalloping, but this method is inefficient. In the spaced lamp method, using general service lamps, more space is required, but it is somewhat more economical and produces a higher degree of illumination."

Uniform lighting on the ceiling, he said, is best produced by recessing the cove construction and placing the lamps on 12- to 18-inch centers (Figure 2). Here the direct light from the lamps strikes the ceiling at a greater distance from the source. The section of the ceiling adjacent to the lamp is illuminated by light from the reflector. In this manner the ceiling is uniformly illuminated. The reflector, according to Mr. Woodside, should be mat-surfaced, using either porcelain enamel, Alzak processed aluminum, white plastic, or plaster.

In the continuous light source method of cove lighting, the illumination problem is much simpler. Lumiline lamps are easily adapted to this kind of lighting, because the break between lamps is only about half an inch. They may be installed in either horizontal or vertical troughs, a fact which contributes to their flexibility where the decorative lighting must perform a utility function. Available in a variety of pastel colors, they naturally provide an excellent means of pure decorative lighting.

In calculating the illumination from cove lighting installations intended to supply useful light, it has been found that the room index and utilization factor tables for totally-indirect ceiling fixtures, published by the Mazda lamp manufacturers and in common use by the industry today, may be used. Allowance, however, must be made for the variation which exists among the different types of coves, which may introduce varying factors.

A well-designed cove constructed with a porcelain enamel reflector will have an efficiency of about 70%. In a room 14x20x 8⅛, with a room index of 2.0, and a corresponding coefficient of utilization of 0.25, approximately 17 foot-candles are produced on the working plane when 60-watt Mazda lamps are spaced 18 inches apart (See Figure 3).

A group of carpet patterns brought out by the Mohawk Carpet Mills under the title "Broadway." These carpetings are especially adapted to theatres and similar buildings, hence the name. They are distinctly modern in designs, which are wrought in such colors as bright red, yellow, black with silver or white. Being especially intended for use under heavy traffic conditions, the fabric is of material and weave to withstand constant tramping and cleaning.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

I AM A constant reader of your helpful magazine and desire some help from you. Please send me what you consider plans for a small theatre in a town of one thousand population with several towns of about 800 population in a radius of about 12 miles. I would say I have a territory of about 3,000 people within 15 miles of me. I want to have a nice theatre, as I have some fair competition about 22 miles away.

Please send me information as to size of theatre I should have. Also please advise how you would equip same. By this I mean kind of equipment I should use. I want your advice just as if you would build such a place yourself. Do you think I could make money in the location I have described, or should I drop the idea?—R. B. C.

The Answer:

IF YOU ARE located in a town of one thousand population with a surrounding territory of 3,000 people, I advise you not to build too large a house, as you must figure that the theatre in the town 22 miles away will share with you in drawing from the extra 3,000 people. So it is my opinion that a 400 seating capacity house will meet your requirements.

A building with 30 x 100 feet floor space will be large enough to accommodate such a seating capacity, but it will be necessary to be as economical in construction and design as possible. I do not know what price of admission you will be able to charge, and the maximum cost of the building depends on that. At any rate, you should be able to make a decent income out of it. If there is a building in your town which could be remodeled into a theatre, it may be advisable to do so rather than to build a new house.

As far as equipment is concerned, I advise you to purchase the best of projection and sound apparatus and comfortable chairs. I suggest you plan the theatre as follows:

A 10 x 15 foot lobby with women's and men's rest rooms on each side, entered from inside of auditorium. Provide a 6-foot cross-aisle or foyer behind the seats. Place seats in a center bank of 13 seats across the width of the auditorium, with a wall aisle on each side.

Plan for 12 feet between first row of seats and curtain line. Also plan for a platform 10 feet deep to place projection screen and sound horns. The projection room can be located over the lobby. The ceiling does not have to be higher than 17 feet above the rear of the auditorium floor.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Question:

WE ARE BUILDING a theatre on a lot 50 x 125 feet. We are having some difficulty about the proper floor slope. Main floor from back wall to front of stage will be about 83 feet, stage 21, lobby, foyer, etc., 21 feet. The architect figured less than 1 inch to the foot.

You probably have some chart of some kind designed to show proper visibility, which would also show the required slope to the floor. Also, if the chart does not show this, please advise just what difference there should be in the stage level as compared to the lobby level. Should the floor of the stage be lower than the lobby level, assuming that the floor at back row of seats is on level with lobby?—I. H. H.

The Answer:

THERE IS NO relation between stage floor and lobby floor levels. The incline of the auditorium floor depends on the amount of rows of seats. As the distance from the auditorium back wall to the stage is 83 feet, there must be deducted from this distance at least 12 feet for space between curtain line and front row of seats, leaving space for 28 rows.

A workable formula for figuring floor slope is to divide the space from stage to foyer wall in 15-inch sections. The slope of the first section nearest stage should be three inches, the next section slope should be increased 9 inches, the next 12 inches, the next 15 inches, and so on, increasing the slope of each section 3 inches. The entire slope of the floor in your audi-

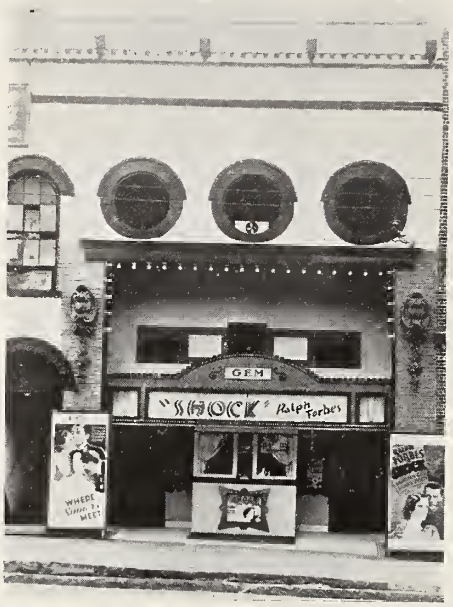
The new lobby of the Astor theatre in Times Square, New York, which has been remodeled principally through the application of Fyr-Art architectural glass panels in a thickness of ¼-inch to the walls. The glass is blue, and the plaster ceiling and woodwork were painted blue. All metal used is chromium plated. The floor was covered with white rubber mats with blue stripings.

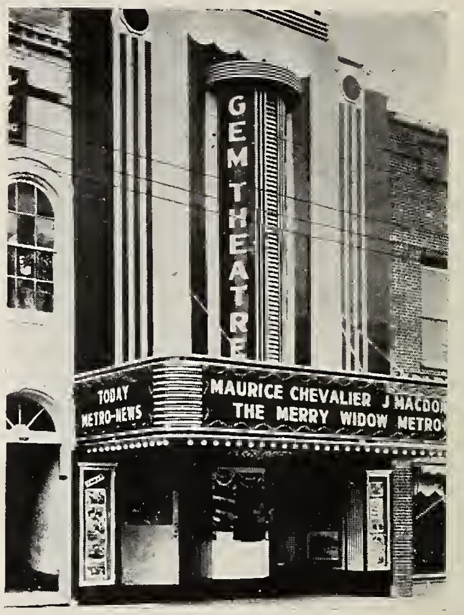
UNCLE SAM HELPED FINANCE THIS REMODELING



● The modernized Gem theatre in Rome, Ga., the front of which is shown before and after revision, was remodeled with the aid of a loan from the Federal Housing Administration. Changes were made throughout the theatre, with those at the front portion effecting a complete transformation. The entire facade was covered with metal lath anchored into the old brick. Over the lath was applied 1-inch cement stucco, which was painted black and white with cement paint. The cylindrical shaft (see picture) is of No. 26 galvanized iron fastened to light metal frame and coated with black and silver paint. The letters are of opal glass, perforated, with lamping in a cylinder.

The vestibule has wood pilasters, a wainscot of black Carrara glass, and wood display frames. The inner lobby also has a Carrara glass wainscot, with upper walls and ceiling of plaster. The floor is covered with ¼-inch rubber of white and green pattern. Off either side of the lobby is a toilet room.

In the auditorium the decorative scheme was revised by covering the wainscot with pleated green satine, and placing Masonite panels, painted black, (three to the wall) above. Located within them are bracket lighting fixtures, set in the center of diamond shapes effected with white paper strips, ¾-inch wide, applied around a field of old rose. Above the panels hang satine valances in white and old rose. Bordering the walls at the ceiling are wood mouldings painted black and white, with cotton rope tassels and rosettes draped. The ceiling was treated with acoustic tile, applied to plaster.



Housing for complete air conditioning equipment was erected at the rear of the building. The projection room was rebuilt, and new curtains and a curved curtain track were installed at the stage.

The Gem is operated by the Lam Amusement Company. Architects for the remodeling were Tucker & Howell.

torium should be not less than 4 feet, 9 inches minimum.

As your Architect figured a little less than 1 inch to the foot, he obtained a steeper slope than required. There is such a thing as having too steep an incline for motion picture theatres. The formula I described above is minimum.

The stage floor should be between 3 feet, 4 inches and 3 feet, 6 inches above the lower part of the auditorium floor, and as the bottom of the screen is generally placed about 24 inches above the stage floor, the sight lines should prove to be satisfactory if the incline is based upon the above rules.

The Question:

AS A READER of your journal I shall be much obliged if you will help me with your advice on the following matters. I enclose herewith two drawings of a proposed cinema hall in this town, having a volume of approximately 140,000 cubic feet and a seating capacity of 900 persons.

It is proposed to install two propulsion fans at the basement one at each side. The air is conveyed by fan ducts into a 3-inch channel formed in the walls at each side of the stage. The air enters the auditorium through ventilating grilles. Two exhaust fans are placed in the position shown. Please give your opinion as to this scheme.

Should the size of the exhaust fans be the same as the propulsion fans? How should the fan ducts be connected with reference to the fan inlet and at the wall, and what shape it should be? Assuming the capacity of the fans is 7,000 cubic feet per minute, will the air issuing from the grilles into the auditorium cause any sound disturbance? Please get manufacturers to get in touch with me.

Please let me know the proper places in the auditorium at which acoustic material could be effectively applied. Would you prefer material of felt, or wood pulp, or cane pulp?

You will notice the ceiling is stepped for concealed lighting. Is this arrangement satisfactory? If not, please make suggestions and get manufacturers to send me catalogs. What would be the wattage necessary?—K. E. F.

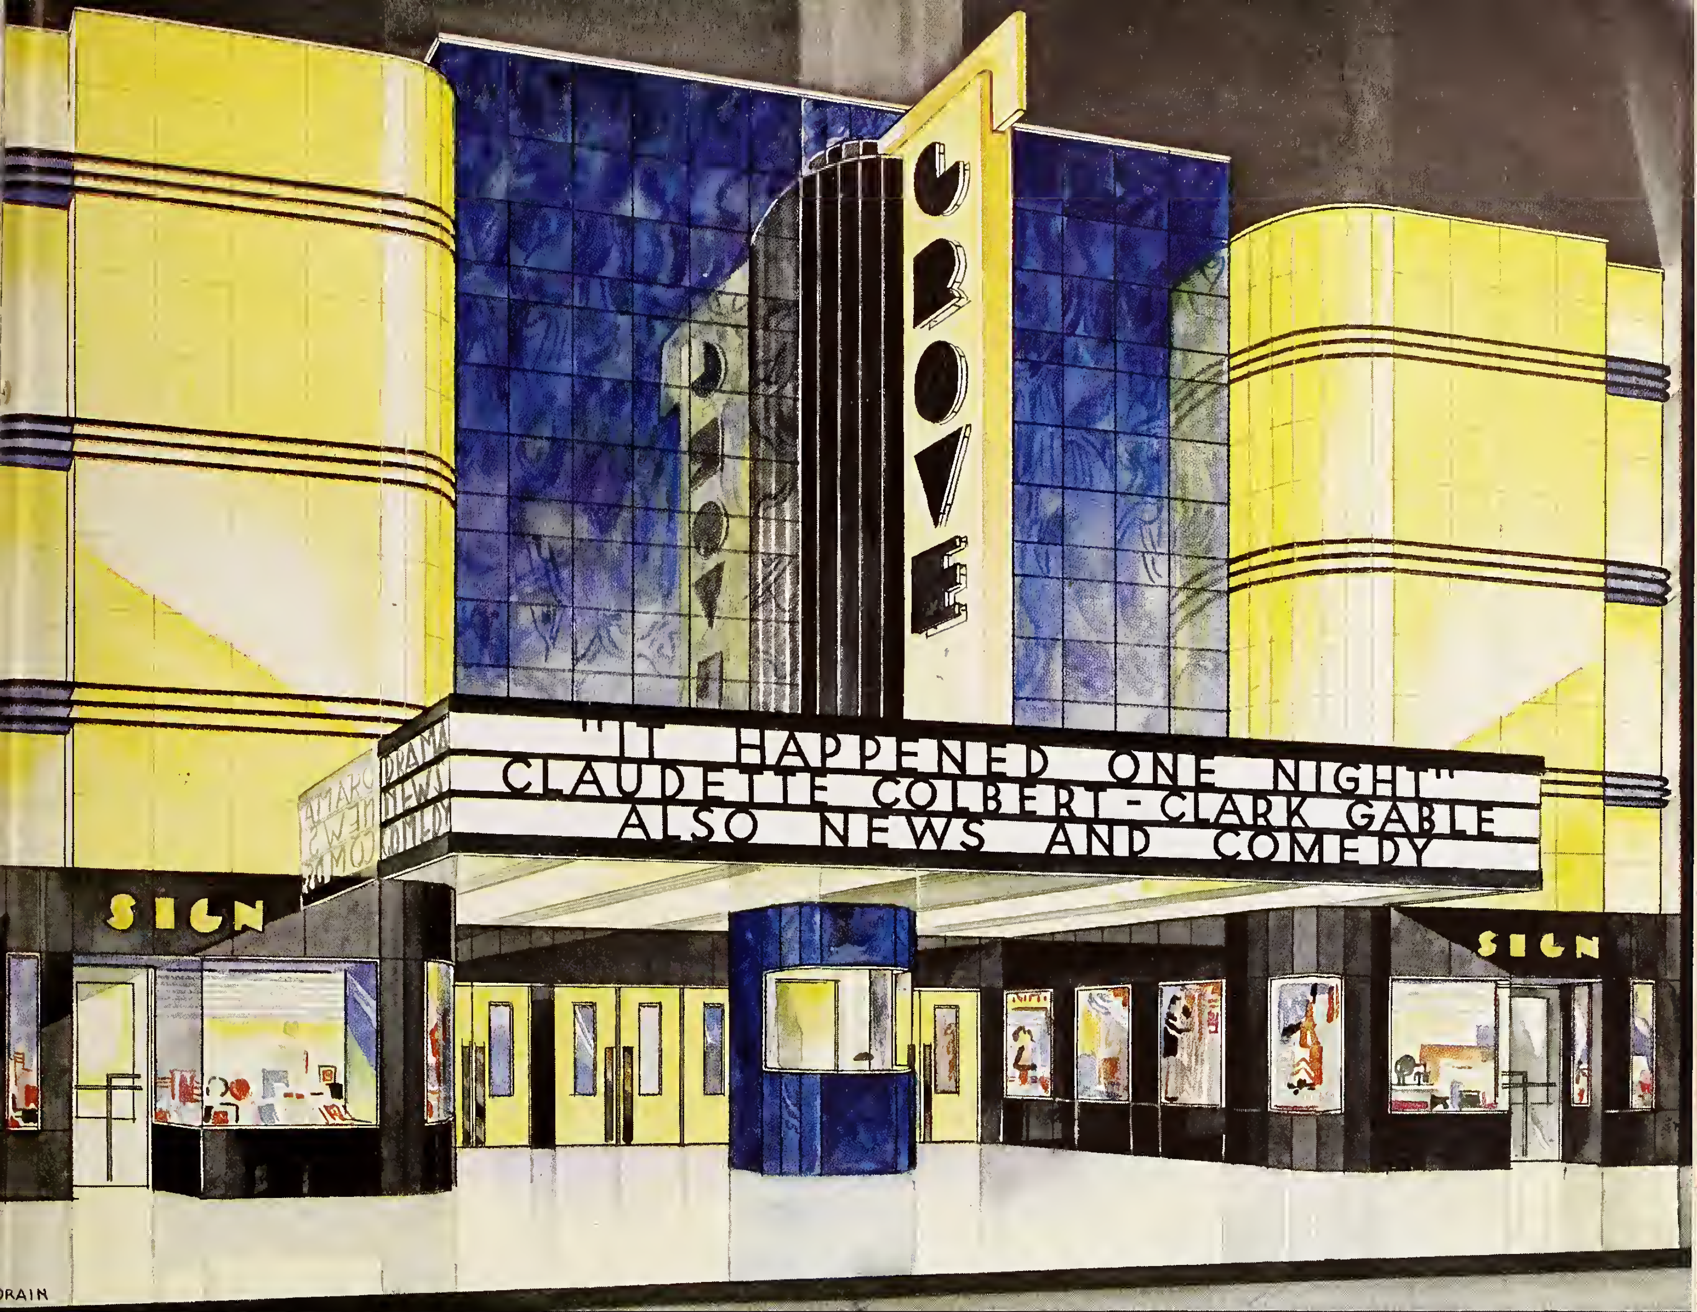
The Answer:

WITH RESPECT to ventilation: Your equipment should provide for six changes of air per hour. You will need two centrifugal type blower fans with these specifications: 7,000 c. f. m., outlet velocity, 12 f. p. m. Wheel diameter, 32 inches; ¾-inch static pressure, 295 r. p. m., 1.35 b. h. p.; 2 h. p. motor, 3-phase, 60-cycle, Tex rope drive. You should provide for two inlet louvres 4 x 3 feet; two ducts, 3 x 3 feet; two outlet grilles, 4 x 3 feet.

There should be two centrifugal type exhaust fans at the rear of the balcony, 4,500 c. f. m., ½-inch static pressure, 430 r. p. m. 1½-inch static pressure, 430 r. p m., 1½ h. p. motor, 3-phase, 60-cycle. Outlet velocity 1,600 f. p. m. Outlet louvres, 3 x 3 feet. Two grilles at balcony ceiling, 3 x 2 feet. Two grilles under balcony, 2 x 2 feet.

I gather from your drawings that you would find either acoustic tiles or acoustic plaster effective. The places to be treated are the auditorium ceiling, the soffit of the balcony, and the rear auditorium wall.

I assume that in your plans for cove lighting in the auditorium you have provided for reflectors. The backs of the coves should be rounded. You will need 20 watts per running foot. If you use the new Lumiline lamps, double sockets for these should be spaced 18 inches from center to center. I believe that your arrangements for these coves will make the lighting very effective. You might consider using lamps alternating along the cave in harmonizing colors.



Modernize and Beautify your Theatre with VITROLITE

WHAT the public wants is a good show in a beautiful, modern, colorful theatre.

Attract, invite, welcome the crowds—pack 'em in day and night—with a brilliant, colorful Vitrolite Front, a rich and decorative Vitrolite Lobby, and clean, sanitary Vitrolite Toilet Rooms.

Colorful Vitrolite, now a Libbey-Owens-Ford product, comes in 16 gorgeous colors—10 rich solid hues, 6 stunning agate shades—and surface effects in sandblast, inlay, and color-decorated.

No other material combines so well with bright, modern metals such as chromium and stainless steel.

There is lifetime beauty in Vitrolite—for its bright, gleaming surface does not mar—does not stain or discolor—does not check or craze. It does not grow dull with age. Acids, water, oil, and grease cannot harm it. A damp cloth is all that's ever needed to restore its pristine newness.

Vitrolite pays for itself in increased patronage, in the immediate increase in the value of your property, in its increased salability and rentability—and in the ease and economy of installation.

Across the continent from coast to coast successful theatres are beautifying and modernizing with colorful Vitrolite, to their greater profit.

MOTOR-GENERATORS AND MOTOR BRUSHES

By MAX L. ROBINSON

Reviewing important characteristics of an element in electrical power sources that is often the seat of trouble

THE PURPOSE of this article is to give projectionists and others in the theatre concerned with the operation of motor-generators and motors, an understanding of certain characteristics of brushes which they may not have encountered as yet in their direct experience. There are altogether too many, for example, who regard brushes as plain pieces of carbon, and one who is tempted to use a set of brushes out of the "miscellaneous" box needs to be reminded that the design, manufacture and application of brushes is a very skilled technical procedure. There are about seven classes of brushes, as follows:

Copper leaf and gauze.—This is practically obsolete.

Low-grade carbon graphite.—This brush has a low ampere carrying capacity, is usually abrasive, and is limited in use to machines with low peripheral speed commutators, where strength and abrasiveness are important.

High-grade carbon graphite.—This is very popular and has a wide range of uses. It has medium friction and is composed of carbon and graphite.

Carbon graphite.—This brush is impregnated with lubricating material, and is not very popular because it has a number of bad features, such as a tendency to stick in the brush holder and to "gum up" the commutator.

Electro graphitic.—A brush of this type is made by a high heat treatment process which increases the carrying capacity and lowers friction. It is popular for use with undercut commutators and usually unabrasive.

Graphite.—Natural or artificial graphite is used in this grade of brush which as a high ampere carrying capacity, medium contact drop, is soft and requires low spring tension. It is used for high amperage, high speed, low or ordinary commercial voltage apparatus, and for use on 2,200-volt slip rings.

Metal graphite.—This is a widely used brush and is made of a copper powder and graphite. It has a low contact drop and is used on low voltage commutators or slip rings carrying high currents.

The chief ingredients used in the manufacture of brushes are petroleum coke, lamp black, carbon flour, graphite, copper powder, lead, zinc, pitch and tin.

The carrying capacity of a brush is the current in amperes which one square inch of brush surface on a commutator will carry under normal conditions, without causing the temperature of the brush to rise more than 50 degrees Centigrade. When a brush is used on slip rings, or for intermittent service (duty) on commutators, the rating can be increased from 25% to 40%.

Peripheral speed varies with the grade of brush and is given in feet per minute.

Hardness of a brush is its ability to withstand pressure and does not bear any relation to abrasiveness. An instrument called the "Scleroscope" is used for determining hardness. This is measured by the height of rebound of a steel ball, dropped from a fixed height upon the brush. A Scleroscope indication of 0-15 is very soft; 16-sO is soft; 31-45 is medium; 46-60 is hard; 61 and over is very hard. As a comparison, 105 is the hardness rating of commercial steel, and 20 that of commercial brass.

Contact drop is the voltage drop between the commutator or ring and the brush. A medium voltage drop for a positive plus negative brush is 1.2 and 1.8 volts.

Abrasiveness is the degree of surface wear of commutators and rings. Commutators with hard mica, not undercut, and machines with poor commutation require abrasive brushes. Bright polish on a commutator is an indication of an abrasive action, while dark gloss indicates good commutation. Non-abrasive brushes should be used in all cases with under-cut commutators.

Brush pressure is given in pounds per square inch of contact surface.

Tension or brush pressure is an extremely important factor in the life of a brush. In general it is best to use the lowest pressure that will give good contact, but never less than 1¾ pounds per square inch, except with some grades of graphite brushes. Figure the area of any brush and then use a small sized spring scale on the brushes if you wish to set the spring tension accurately. In other words, multiply the contact face dimensions of a brush (in inches) by the pressure per square inch necessary for the machine (2 pounds is a good average pressure) on which the brushes are used. In general, the brush pressure to use for motors and generators will vary between 1¾ pounds to 2¼ pounds per square inch; for slip rings, 1¾ pounds to 3 pounds; and for metal graphite, from 3 to 4 pounds.

For example: if the face of a brush is 1.5 inches by 5 inches, and it is used as on an ordinary generator, the pressure per brush is 1½ times 5 times 2 pounds, equals 1½ pounds pressure per brush.

When large metallic brushes are used, more spring tension must be applied to the brushes on the under side in order to compensate sufficiently for the weight of the brushes.

The bevel of a brush is the angle included between the bevel face of the brush and plane at right angles to the length of the brush. Bevels vary by steps of 5 degrees. The length of a beveled brush is the length of the square ended brush from which the beveled brush was made. "End" bevels on brushes are known as "contact face bevel" and "spring end bevel."

The running angle of a brush is its position on a commutator, with reference to the direction of rotation and is classed as trailing, leading and radial. Shunts or pigtails are flexible copper leads securely fastened to the brushes. Failure of these shunts to carry the current causes brush holder springs to lose their temper and burn off. Brush holders become pitted and sparking may occur.

GETTING INTO PROJECTION IN A LARGE UNIONIZED CITY

AN OKLAHOMA projectionist has written me a letter concerning a matter which, my correspondence indicates, is of rather general interest, and to this general interest I shall try to respond in my reply. This latest letter is as follows:

"I wish to ask you a question, the answer to which is of large importance to me. I have been in projection for about two years. I have read everything I could get my hands on and studied to the best of my ability, hoping some day to get ahead in the profession. I am only working part time in a small town and cannot get much money ahead after paying necessary expenses. Somehow, though, I have managed to buy a Bluebook and to subscribe to MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

"Now here is my question: What is the best way to pry one's way into a larger city where there is a projectionists' union? I have talked with several men, but cannot get much satisfaction. Some say to go in as an apprentice; others to get on as a permit man. Which way is best?"

An extremely hard question to answer, brother. Some unions neither have or permit apprentices. A "permit man" is a union man who is permitted by a union to work in its territory, though belonging to a union located elsewhere. I am not altogether certain, but believe that in some exceptional occasions unions have issued permits to men not members of the union to work temporarily in their territories.

As nearly as I can tell from a map, you are working within the territorial jurisdiction of local union No. 497, IATSE and MPMO, McAlester, Oklahoma, which is a "mixed" local, containing both projectionists and stage men. I would suggest that you take a run over there, express your willingness to agree not to seek employment in McAlester unless invited to by the local, and not to ask the local to try to improve your working conditions or wages in your own town, and make application for membership.

Under this condition, the local, assuming you able to prove your competence as a projectionist, could have no reasonable cause for refusing to admit you, whereupon you would be in a position, later on, to seek employment in some city, either under permit, or directly and by transfer to the local there.

You may eventually find yourself no better off, or even not as well off, in a large city as in the small town where you get little money. However, you cannot be blamed for the wish to try to advance yourself, as many other small town men wish to do. Also, as I have said before, since you are working in the jurisdiction of a local you have a right to demand membership, provided you can prove good character and competence.

While this is true, there is another side to the matter. When such men are admitted, usually about the first thing they demand is that their wages be raised, and that the union force this, which usually the union very naturally is quite unable to do. Such men also occasionally demand a job in the home town of the local, which also is unreasonable and usually impossible, as the local ordinarily has all jobs available filled by its own men; moreover, it has its home town young men to take care of, and usually if at least a substantial number of them are not taken care of, trouble and much ill feeling is engendered.

I set forth a plan some while ago to take care of this situation with advantage to all, but it was not accorded the study and consideration it should have had. What I have here told you explains the situation in detail. It is to be hoped that IA will ultimately adopt some plan for taking care of conditions like those indicated in this letter.

MAINTAINING PROPER VALUE

JOHN G. TOWNSEND, projectionist of Sutherland, Nebr., has an idea that he sets forth as follows:

"Note the many comments in your columns of BETTER THEATRES regarding maintenance of sound level in theatre auditoriums. Feel moved to make a suggestion. There has thus far been no manner in which the projectionist, practically completely isolated as he is from the sound he is in charge of, can control its volume except through prompting by an observer.

"That method, while it works out well if and when competently handled, is far from satisfactory for several reasons, the chief of which is the fact that but very few theatres keep a competent sound observer on the job constantly. In fact, relatively few have any at all, turning the job over to an usher or some one similarly employed, with results very, very far from perfect.

"My idea consists of a very simple arrangement of a microphone, an amplifier and a loudspeaker, so connected that sound from some selected spot in front of the projection room or elsewhere would be projected in the projection room, thus constantly advising the projectionist of its level in the auditorium and enabling him to make the necessary fader adjustments. I expect to test this out for myself soon. Other projectionists might join in."

It is not quite so simple as all that, Brother Townsend, though I do believe such an arrangement might be one through which the projectionist could learn to handle the sound level much better than now is possible in many theatres. True there are objections, but I nevertheless think it could be made to work at least fairly well.

For your information, I have conceived to turn over to the engineering staff of a manufacturer for examination, a plan which may permit projectionists to look actually at the auditorium sound level constantly. Meanwhile, if you do experiment, we shall be glad to be advised as to how your efforts work out.

INSPECTING NEW M.-G. INSTALLATIONS

J. L. CALHOUN of South Chicago asks, "Will you be good enough to advise me as to just what points I should examine into after installers have put in a new motor-generator set? I know they are supposed to leave everything in perfect condition, but my experience tells me they don't always quite do that."

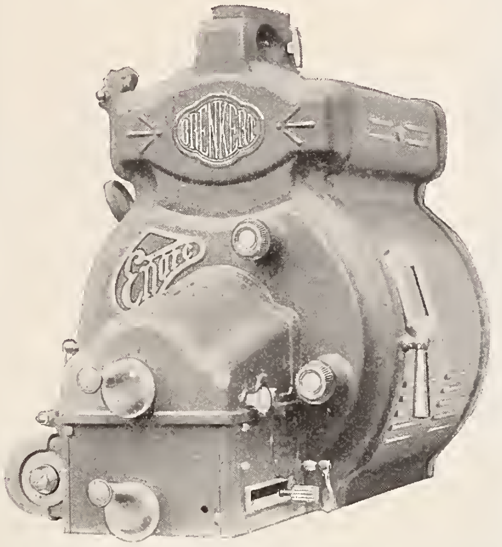
You will probably find everything all right, but to make certain you should check up on the following:

(1) Is the set level? (2) Is its supporting base well grounded? It should be. (3) Are the air gaps the same depth all the way around between armature and pole pieces? You may test with a strip of paper of a thickness just sufficient to pass between one of the pole pieces and the armature. (4) Does the set run without vibration that may be felt by the hand? It should. (5) Examine the generator commutator and make sure the under-cut slots between commutator bars are free from all deposit. Better brush the slots vigorously endwise, using a good stiff brush. Not a bad plan to draw a hardwood stick whittled to just the width of the slots through each of them before the machine is started. (6) Be sure (a) that the brushes are exerting proper pressure on the commutator (1.25 to 1.50 pounds per square inch of surface), (b) that they make perfect contact with the commutator all over their surface, (c) that they fit snugly in their holders but do not stick therein, (d) that they are the grade recommended by the maker of the machine, (e) that there is a minimum of sparking or none at all, (f) that the oil is of the kind recommended by the maker of the machine (accept no other), (g) that the circuit is properly fused.

These are all points upon which the projectionist has every right to have first-hand knowledge. It most emphatically is highly improper for him to take any one's word as to their having been properly attended to. He is the one who will be held responsible for the set and its proper operation once the installer has turned it over to him and left the place. I have myself known installers who seemed much more interested in getting the set in, running and off their hands, than in what might happen afterward.

I remember being called to a theatre where a new motor-generator had been installed, a bearing of which had burned out the first day. The manufacturer was complained to and decided the projectionist had tightened down the bearing and thus caused the trouble (bearings could be tightened down in those days on some sets). I don't know what gave me the hunch, but I almost immediately drew out some oil from the other bearing. We all

Let Performance Be Your Guide



WITH the success of your theatre depending largely on the quality of light on the screen, your projection lamps are a most important item.

HOW I MADE MY RADIO CONSIDERATE

MOST EXHIBITORS, managers and projectionists have a radio in their home. Many exhibitors and managers have one in the office. As we all know, when the radio is going strong and the telephone rings, the radio for the moment is a nuisance. However, I have rigged up a system so that now when the phone rings I automatically squelch the radio when I pick up the phone.

To a copper plate of any convenient thickness (it may be quite thin), firmly solder one end of a wire—by preference a flexible lamp cord, though any wire will serve. Extend the wire to the radio and attach its other end to the aerial binding post. Next, using paste, attach a sheet of heavy writing paper to the upper side of the copper plate and set the telephone on the paper, whereupon you will find that the act of lifting the phone off the copper plate will squelch the radio. Setting it back on will instantly restart the radio as before.

The copper plate, paper and telephone form a condenser, through which the radio uses the telephone line as an aerial, without in any way interfering with the functions of the telephones attached thereto.

The other day, though, I met a discovery. By accident a newspaper was laid over the copper plate. There were several thicknesses of paper, yet when I set the phone down the radio commenced business apparently about as strong as ever. I then laid a rather thick magazine over the plate, with the phone on top of it, only to find the reception still good, though toned down some.

TESTING FOR GROUNDS WITH MAZDA LAMPS

J. B. SCHWARENGEN of Little Rock, Ark., writes, "I recently read an article descriptive of a ground tester and would appreciate an expression of your opinion as to its value. Details are as follows: Two 25-watt clear incandescent lamps having Mazda filaments are connected in series across the positive and negative busses of a generator supply panel, connecting their joining lead to a water pipe or other suitable permanent ground.

"Under normal conditions, says the article, both lamps will burn with equal brilliance. But should a ground develop in either leg of the service the lamp connected to opposite polarity will burn at higher brilliancy, and merely by opening the switch of each projector or spot one may determine which circuit contains the fault. If all circuit switches be opened and the ground persist, then it is evident the generator itself or its circuit is grounded.

"Now Mr. Richardson, it seems to me this is not a very reliable method to use, therefore I come to headquarters for advice."

My own reaction is that while it would be quite reliable as a detector of grounds of considerable amount, it would not be sensitive enough to small ones, and "small ones" waste a great amount of current because in too many cases they persist undetected for long periods of time. By using a high-power magneto, I myself, found, in one case, six of them in one projection room. Current bills were high and finally the exhibitor himself paid me to investigate.

R. M. Williams of St. Louis refers to the same article in this letter:

"I am not as yet a projectionist, though I am studying and hope some day to be one. Recently in a magazine devoted to projection matters I read an article that does not seem to be correct, so I am applying to you for an opinion. In it the recommendation was made that two 25-watt clear incandescent lamps having Mazda filaments, be connected in series across the positive and negative busses of a generator supply panel, and the connecting wire of the two lamps be joined to a water pipe or other permanent ground.

" 'If this be done,' says the article, 'under normal conditions both lamps will burn with normal brilliancy. Should a ground develop in either leg of the service,' the article goes on to say, 'the lamp connected with the other side will burn at higher brilliancy, and merely by closing the switch of each projector or spot separately, one may determine the circuit in which the trouble is located.'

"Now, Mr. Richardson, this does not seem to me (admitting my limited knowledge) to be at all a good plan, for several reasons. First, it presumes the panel to be fed by a three-wire circuit, which is not the case, I believe, in a large number of theatres. Second, the lamp would not burn 'at higher brilliancy,' as stated. Instead the lamp on the grounded side would burn at less brilliancy, because the voltage of that side would be lowered by the ground. If—and there lies my third objection, question or what have I—if the ground be a small one (as I believe is often the case) the voltage would not, I believe, be sufficiently lowered to enable the eye to note the difference in brilliancy between two fairly dazzling lights.

"Now, Mr. Richardson, I may be all wrong, but I have tried to study those electrical matters that will affect my work when I finally get through with college and enter projection. In closing may I ask you what is the best method of approach. In other words what would you do when the time comes, were you in my place. I have your Bluebooks, read all your articles and have hopes."

Answering Brother Williams' last query: I would try to get an opportunity to work in some theatre evenings, if it would not interfere too much with my studies, as helper in the projection room if possible. An hour an evening would help a lot by providing at least some practical experience. I gather from your letter that you have studied to some purpose and are able to reason from cause to effect. You should one day be a most excellent worker in the field of projection. Just how to "get going" when the time comes—well, you will do well to cultivate the friendship of the business representative of the St. Louis projectionists' local union and ask his aid and advice.

Returning to the article: Unfortunately I have not seen it, nor have I experimented with the plan, or seen it in use. In my present judgment, however, it would only be effective for heavy grounds, and would tend to cause slight ones to pass unnoticed, possibly for days at a time, thus setting up small but constant wastes of electric energy. I would like to hear from my readers on this matter. What do you think?

Here is the matter as I see it. We need a thorough ground test at least once each week, and by thorough I mean one that will reveal any leak, no matter how small. With such a tester installed I believe the average man would depend upon it absolutely. Small leaks exist and persist month in and month out in too many projection rooms. They may be and in many cases are detected by the sound. In other cases they do not affect the sound, at least not enough to cause investigation and cure.

FACTORS IN CRITICAL FOCUS

THE FOLLOWING question has reached me from Mr. H. J. Fentress, Quannah theatre, Fletcher, Okla.: "Please give me the fullest details on getting the critical sharpness on all pictures."

This is a question that involves many things. In the first place, the photography in the film itself must be critically sharp. Second, the film must be clean—especially as to oil. Third, the film must lay perfectly flat over the projector aperture, which calls for perfectly straight, flat tension shoes and aperture plate tracks. Fourth, the projection lens must be perfectly clean and of such quality as will provide critical sharpness when properly focused. Fifth, the projection lens must be focused critically, which cannot be done by a projectionist looking through a port cover glass, its inner surface too often smeared with light, at a picture from 50 to 150 feet away. The eye must be aided by a really good opera glass, or focusing must be done while someone is within 20 feet of the screen directing operations, which is of course impractical. Sixth, the screen surface must give off no "glare." Seventh, the screen surface must be at right angles to the optical axis of projection.

And now getting down to brass tacks, knowing that the various items of equipment are what they should be and that all are properly adjusted, looking at the picture with a good ("good" is highly essential) opera glass, with the port cover glass open, the projectionist should focus until the smaller objects (leaves of trees, for example) are brought out as sharply as possible, whereupon he has done his full duty. But if the management has not itself provided a really good glass (which

Only Lumotron Gives You This Sound Uniformity

When a projection machine is equipped with Lumotron photoelectric cells, you know that every cell will give exactly the same sound output. Amplifier adjustments are minimized. And you will have no more embarrassing trouble from differences in sound intensity when fading from one projector to another.

Only Lumotrons give you this security. For only Lumotron Tubes are available in "Matched Output". An exclusive process enables us to record the performance of every cell. And all cells on each individual order and any subsequent order will have identical performance characteristics.

If you do not know the type of tube used on your projection machine, write us or ask your dealer. Dealers are invited to write us for a complete list of projection machines and the type of tube designed for each.

ADAPTABILITY OF MAZDA EQUIPMENT

J. M. OWEN of Branson, Mo., asks about screen illumination in a letter in which he says, "Am planning erection of a new theatre soon and come to you for information. This is a small town, so it is very necessary that operating cost be watched closely. I am now using Mazda projector light sources and wish to know how long a projection distance you consider practicable, using Mazda; also what size picture.

"It would be quite expensive to change to other light sources. Seating capacity of the new house will be only 350, hence I thought possibly I might be able to retain the Mazda lamps, but want to know whether or not you consider them practicable. If not please recommend the type of equipment you would advise."

A large question and one difficult to answer because so many things are involved. To answer I should know the width of the seating space, particularly down front, and the distance from front and rear seats to screen. This information would advise me as to the type of screen needed, and that of course cuts a large figure in a matter of this kind. If the house be narrow, then a specular or semi-specular screen might be used, which would not require so much light as would the highly diffusive screen necessary for a wide seating space. However, here is the dope, so far as I can give it without having the seating space dimensions.

The Mazda equipment, provided it be handled and adjusted exactly right (see your Bluebook) will provide a soft, pleasing light of acceptable brilliance for a 12- or even a 14-foot picture, provided the projection distance be not too long. If the projection distance be so long that a lens of more than, say, 5-inch E.F. is required, then there will be light loss, not because of the distance itself, but by reason of the fact that with Mazda the situation is such that the divergence of the light beam on the lens side of the aperture is increasingly heavy as E.F. of the lens increases, and beyond 5-inch E.F. I doubt that a lens may be had that will pick up the whole beam. However, you might write the General Electric Company, Nela Park, Cleveland, O., about that. If the lens cannot pick up the whole beam, it means not only light loss, but increased unevenness of screen illumination.

Many assume the distance itself to be of importance. They fail to consider that light rays travel some few millions of miles from our sun to this earth. This being true, why should 50 or 100 feet of added distance be of importance, unless the atmosphere be full of dust or smoke?

On the whole, certainly the projection distance in a 350-seat house cannot be very long, nor can the conditions be such that a large screen is required. Therefore I would say that if you have a good reflection surface, and keep it in good condition, you should have satisfactory results with Mazda if your picture does not exceed 12 feet in width. You might even get away with a 14-footer, but I would not go larger than that—no need for it and general results will be much better with what I have suggested.

There is another "but," however. Meaning no criticism, just how well posted is your projectionist? Has he studied Mazda? Does he understand how sensitive it is to maladjustment? Does he know that just a very little misalignment means a lot of light loss? He should be up on his knowledge of Mazda operation.

A WISE CHOICE BY LOCAL 306

THE MEMBERS of Local 306, New York City, are to be congratulated on their selection of Joseph Basson for the presidency of their union. Mr. Basson has long been active in New York projection affairs. It is also pleasing to note that he has the help of an executive board composed of such men as George Edwards, William DeSena, Dave Garden, Maxwell Horowitz, Tony Rugino, E. McD. Bendheim, Louis Boritz, Phil Grill, Benjamin Morel and Frank Pineau.

Internal dissension, politics and related affairs have so disrupted Local 306 that although President Basson is supported by the International office, he will need the sincere co-operation of the entire membership to consolidate the reorganization begun under the auspices of Harland Holmden, third vice-president of the IA.

IDENTIFYING OBSCURE ELEMENTS

HAVE YOU ever been called in on short notice to take charge of an equipment with which you were not familiar, but lacked knowledge of the peculiarities of the individual set-up? Well, brother, I have, in the old days when things were far simpler and in every way easier. And believe you me I found it not an altogether pleasant situation.

That was in the old days. With modern complicated equipments I often wonder how a strange man gets along in a strange projection room at all. For there are peculiarities in every set-up. Moreover, in many cases wires enter outer insulation in a bunch, and the only possible way to find out which is which is by time-consuming tests.

So now let's get down to business. While it may be a source of satisfaction to see a relief man, for example, get into a jam, still in the end that sort of thing never pays. The real man is too big for that sort of thing. He realizes that his job is something more than merely a boosting block for himself.

The wise projectionist, as soon as practicable after taking charge of projection equipment, will proceed to trace things out and affix an identifying tag to each fuse block, to each wire circuit the purpose of that ONE speaker capable of covering a desired frequency range is better than using a multiple of speakers?

When many of you wrote that you had the best possible Sound in your theatre after installing the 309 Full Range Reproducer and Horn . . . you were right!

But . . . in spite of the seemingly impossible . . . we have improved the Model 309 Reproducer!

It costs you practically nothing to find out what the New 309 Reproducer and Horn can accomplish in your theatre. Therefore, when you consider what perfect Sound means in increased patronage, you cannot afford to delay trying it.

Maintaining our well known policy of offering owners of our equipment an opportunity of securing any of our new improvements—we offer those theatre owners now using our former Model 309 an attractive trade-in proposition. Write for it.

which is not obvious, and to all other things in the room in a manner that will aid a man called in suddenly to take his place.

This is a very simple thing to do. From any drugstore a sufficient number of gummed labels may be procured for a small sum, and these labels, properly inscribed, can be affixed to any object requiring identification. Or it may be done in other ways.

This comes under the general heading of "put your house in order." It is, for one thing, evidence that you are not a "little" chap who fears to make things easy for the relief man. It is proof that you have the best interests of your employer in mind. Get busy, brother. Put your house in order.

NEW DEVICES BY A PROJECTIONIST

IN CHICAGO, L. D. Strong, a member of Local 110, has invented a foot switch for use on projector circuits. The device has an aluminum casing. Its mechanism is of cast bronze, and its switch contacts are carbon on copper. A three-wire hook-up is all that is necessary for two or more switches. It is designed to be attached to the floor, presumably with screws.

Brother Strong also has evolved a "five-point" changeover device for use with either front or rear shutters. The device is designed to provide eye protection by means of heat-treated glass of suitable color, a light for framing, a means of opening the gate for threading, and for raising the fire shutter. Brother Strong also has a "Deluxe" changeover designed to be attached to the lens port. This too seems to be well designed and well made, so far as I am able to determine from photographs.

POTENTIAL DIFFERENCE, E.M.F. AND VOLTAGE

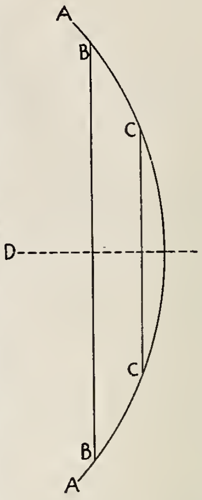
EDWARD J. SCANLON, projectionist of Holyoke, Mass., objects to my recent statement that potential difference is not the same thing as E. M. F. or "voltage." He asks that the question be further commented on by myself and other men prominent in the profession. His own view is that potential difference, E. M. F., and voltage, which latter is only the measuring stick of potential difference, are all one and the same thing.

Such discussions are welcome. I shall be glad to hear from those who may feel able to shed light upon the matter. My own view is summed up thus: Potential difference is that which causes us to obtain power from electric current. If no power is obtained there is no potential difference. Establish a circuit that is well and thoroughly insulated. Connect it to a working generator of any sort, with no current using apparatus of any sort connected therewith and in operation. What is the situation? My argument is that no potential difference exists in that circuit.

To my mind it is highly questionable that anything really does exist, though it is the fashion to say there is potential difference commensurate with the impressed voltage. As I understand electricity, noththing whatsoever exists until current in some amount, small or large, commences to flow.

SCREEN WIDTH AND IMAGE DEFINITION

In the August 24th issue I referred to projector spacing and picture width in reply to an inquiry concerning image definition from Roy W. Howell of Coleman, Tex. In extension to that reply, I have made the accompanying drawing to illustrate the fact even if the lens is on a line with the screen center, there still is strain if the picture be too large. You will observe the distance from lens D to sides of screen CC and its center is not the same, line AA representing at every point an equal distance from the optical center of the lens. However, if we double the screen width, as per BB, the difference is greatly increased. Less depth of focus is therefore required to give good definition all over screen CC than over screen BB—projection distance being in both cases equal.



Possibly I am all wrong, in which case I invite those who differ to set me right, but it cannot be done by merely saying there is a potential difference between an idle positive and negative.. My contention is that potential difference is the difference existing between the two poles of a current using device, or a current carrying connection in the form of a leak or short, which difference causes current to flow.

QUALITY AT HIGH VOLUME

RECENTLY friend daughter and her dad were invited to a broadcast carried on each Sunday afternoon in summer in connection with a land development. It is to attract potential customers, who drive in, sit in their cars and listen to instrumental music and singing that is, under the circumstances, unusually beautiful. In approximately the center of the development a huge, four-sided horn of many units is mounted, perhaps 30 feet in the air. The amplifier, an organ and other apparatus are in a small building about 200 yards away. Seated in our car fully 500 feet from the loudspeakers, with a strong wind blowing from us toward the speaker, we heard every word of the songs distinctly. Some cars were parked fully a quarter of a mile away.

I am telling of this, though it has noththing to do with theatre work, for the reason that it is an exposition of the tremendous volume with which singing and instrumental music can be reproduced without sacrificing quality.

PROJECTION A PROFESSION

VIRGIL V. VIERS, projectionist of the Sherman theatre in Goodland, Kans., takes a well deserved poke at the erstwhile NRA as follows:

"Brother Richardson: While this is my first letter, I nevertheless am one of your constant readers. Have been in the profession for eight years. When I say 'profession' I mean just that. Nothing I can remember offered me such insult as did the NRA when it failed to classify projection as a profession. As I see it, anything that requires such a wide range of knowledge, careful and highly skillful work, as does projection at its best, can only justly be classified as a profession.

"And now, having given voice to that complaint, my one greatest criticism of the motion picture industry, including all its many branches, is the atrocious condition in which some exchanges send out prints. This is especially true with regard to misframes, loose splices and ripped sprocket holes. It is my experience that these faults are at their worst in short subjects, rather than in feature productions. At least three-fifths of the shorts I am called upon to use must be thoroughly examined and repaired before they are safe to project.

"As to doubling up reels, I regard it as almost a crime, and I shall look forward with much pleasure to the advent of the 2,000-foot reel

"And now for a question: Is it not the fact that some producers use a lighter grade of film (less thickness), and thus make it necessary to re-adjust aperture tension in order to have a steady picture?"

Answering your last question first, I think not, though it is true there is some variation in film stock thickness. However, a moment of consideration will, I believe, convince you it must be and is too slight a difference to make any appreciable difference in the pressure or braking effect of such a device as aperture tension springs and shoes. While it is highly important, as I have often explained, that the tension be as light as possible, maybe you go to an extreme in that direction. You see, different films may, for various other reasons than thickness (smeared with oil, for example) cause any certain, fixed amount of tension to exert a somewhate different frictional or braking effect.

As to your criticism of exvchanges, we now have exchanges that only send out prints after a thorough examination and competent repairs have been effected. But, sad to say, we still have a good many that still try to force projectionists to do their inspection and repair work—free of charge, of course. In them, "inspection and repair" consists wholly in rewinding the films at race horse speed, stopping for repair only when the film is half or wholly torn in two.

What Brother Viers has said about projection being a profession is wholly correct. We honor him for respecting his calling in life and demanding that it be placed upon the high level it deserves.

Making the Deafened Patrons Again

head. The greatest significance of bone conduction lies in its efficacy in those cases of deafness where the mechanisms of the ear itself do not function effectively. Bone conduction units are connected to an amplifier like any receiver.

CONTROLS

Individual volume controls are almost indispensable, in view of the wide variation in hearing defects, and for the same reason tone controls, although less popular, are scarcely less valuable. These controls are sometimes conveniently mounted in the "lorgnette" handle, sometimes on a small box located just under the front of a seat arm, occasionally on a box mounted on the seat in front of the listener—this last is more troublesome, since the unit must be un-plugged to allow others to pass. If the unit is portable it will be plugged into the same box that carries the control or controls; if permanently wired in place, it will be wired to that box.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS

The amplifying power needed for hearing aids has already been discussed. Impedances must be reasonably well matched, except when a high-impedance hearing aid line is connected to so powerful a source of sound as a large projection room amplifier, in which case the loss of volume due to mismatch is specifically desired.

Where a separate microphone and amplifier are used impedances between them should match accurately, and the output impedance of the amplifier should match the impedance of the headset line. This is very easily arranged, since both commercial amplifiers and commercial hearing aids are available in many impedance ratings, and a multiplicity of series, parallel and series-parallel unit connections are practical, and can be used to maintain impedance match between almost any amplifier and almost any set of units, if only a minimum of care has been exercised in choosing both.

If the units are to be plugged and unplugged as hard-of-hearing patrons enter and leave, changes in volume that may be very annoying to those listening can be avoided by using double-circuit jacks and "dummy load" resistors offering the same impedance as the unit. With this arrangement, the resistors automatically take the place of any units not in service and adding or removing a unit creates no line disturbance beyond a very minor switching click.

It should be remembered that line noises, clicks and other disturbances that might drive a normal person frantic will usually be inaudible to a deafened individual. A change in volume, however, and specially a lowering of volume, may annoy him extremely.

Sound for the benefit of the hard-of-hearing should be of exceptionally high quality, particularly with reference to those higher frequencies that provide distinctness and definition. The lower frequencies are of comparatively less importance, not only intrinsically, but because they are in part felt by the body, rather than heard by the ear, and with respect to the very low frequencies the theatre chair, the floor, and the air itself to some extent perform the part of "bone conduction" units. This is another difference between the hard-of-hearing and those with normal faculties—with the former exceptionally excellent sound rich in high frequencies may seem unbearably "tinny" to others.

Standard Practice in Theatre Design

lighting fixtures, the use of which would best be discarded. The very forms used to make up the character of the interior must be carefully thought of in terms of light found in a dark space.

"While recent theatre design has shown signs of eliminating over-ornamentation, yet the interior treatment and forms are not simple enough and still lack the proper functional form."

It might be said that while it is all right to proceed to establish design standards for the cinema, completely eliminating consideration of the stage, and permitting only the functioning of the cinema to dictate its physical shape, why restrict standards to limited seating capacities only? Because standards must be made where their application will be used most repeatedly and benefit the popular unit. So far we know definitely that the cinema with limited viewing distances and seating capacities is more desirable for the following reasons:

(1) Acoustical quality is superior, (2) illusion is more complete where the screen predominates than in the larger houses where one is auditorium-conscious, (3) more intimate surroundings, (4) obstruction of view of screen is diminished (for example, a 1-inch obstruction in the thirty-fifth row causes almost a 4-foot obstruction at the screen, whereas in the tenth row it would be only a little over a foot at the screen), (5) smaller viewing distances mean a smaller screen image and therefore cause less distortion from the side seats and less waste area between the screen and the first row of seats.

In attempting to establish standards for

LAW AND THE THEATRE

A DEPARTMENT DEVOTED TO LEGAL PHASES OF THEATRE OPERATION

PITFALLS IN CONTRACTUAL RELATIONS

By LEO T. PARKER

Analyzing various types of written agreements as revealed in recent litigations before the higher courts

AN AGREEMENT in which the seller of a theatre agrees not to enter into a competing business is valid and enforceable, provided the restrictions in the contract are reasonable. Moreover, the higher courts in different States recently have rendered decisions on the validity of contracts containing varied stipulations as to the duration of the restriction, area of restricted territory, and the like, by which a clear line of distinction is marked between valid and invalid contracts of this nature.

It is important to know that contracts of this character always are valid in which the seller agrees not to establish a competing business in the immediate vicinity for a period of one to ten years. Conversely, contracts are void by which the seller of a theatre obligates himself not to engage in competing business over a larger territory than that from which he draws his patrons, or for an unreasonable period, as fifteen years or more.

Another well established point of the law is that where the restrictions in a contract of this nature are reasonable, a reasonable amount specified as liquidated damages is collectable, if the seller breaches the contract. However, it must be shown that the damages sustained by the purchaser of the theatre business, as a result of the seller breaching the contract, is not less than the amount of damages specified in the contract.

Also, it must be remembered that unless a contract, by which the seller of a theatre agrees not to enter into competing business, clearly states that it can be assigned by the purchaser of the theatre, its provisions are not effective with respect to another person who later purchases the theatre from the first purchaser.

CASE

For example, in Yates v. Blythe, Fort Worth, Texas, (79 S. W. (2d) 913), it was disclosed that a man named Blythe purchased motion picture equipment from Yates in April, 1934. Yates agreed not to re-enter the show or theatre business in the city for ten years "as affects said Blythe or his estate." Soon afterward Blythe leased for one year the show to a man named Stallings and assigned to him Yates' agreement not to compete in the theatre business in the city for a period of ten years. Shortly thereafter Yates re-entered the show business in the city.

Stallings sued Yates and asked the court to grant an injunction against Yates to prevent him from continuing to operate the show in violation of the above mentioned contract. However, since the contract between Blythe and Yates did not specifically state that Blythe was privileged to assign the contract, the higher court refused to grant an injunction, and said:

DECISION

"Yates has contracted not to go into the show business 'as affects said Blythe or his estate.' We take it that this ambiguous language means 'to the financial injury' of Blythe's estate. No facts are alleged which show injury. Blythe gets money rent for a year. She gets that whether Stallings' show pays or not. . . . This covenant is not one which runs with equipment sold to Blythe, but is personal to 'Blythe or his estate.' We do not believe that Stallings, as assignee, can enlarge Yates' contract, even if he can enforce it. It is still 'as affects Blythe or his estate.' "

LIABILITY IN CAUSING BREACH OF CONTRACT

IF A PERSON maliciously interferes with a contract between two persons, and induces one of the contracting parties to breach the contract, the injured party may file suit and recover damages from the wrongdoer. In other words, where anyone does intentionally that which is calculated in the ordinary course of events to effect damage, and which in fact does damage another person, the guilty person always is liable. Moreover, under certain circumstances the courts will grant an injunction against a person or firm to prevent performance of any act which will result in breach of a contract between two other contracting parties.

On the other hand, it has been held that an exhibitor is not entitled to an injunction restraining another and innocent theatre owner from exhibiting a picture, where the suit for injunction is brought only against the innocent theatre owner, provided the distributor under contract with the theatre owner was not made a party and where no contractual relationship existed between first theatre owner and the company which originally leased the picture.

CASE

For example, in Dade Enterprises v. Wometco Theatres, Miami, Florida (160 So. 209) it was disclosed that the United Artists Corporation, a distributor, entered into a contract of license with Sparks East Coast Theatres, an exhibitor, for the exhibition of a certain motion picture film known as "The House of Rothschild" A clause in the contract provided:

"A road show is not a general release and the said motion picture will become available to the Distributor for distribution only upon the completion of any such road show."

Soon afterward the Sparks East Coast Theatres, entered into a contract with Wometco Theatres, which stated:

"With the consent of United Artists we hereby agree to sell you nine runs of these pictures for a consideration of $7,200. . . . With the consent of United Artists, you are to secure prints of pictures referred to direct from United Artists and not through us. . . . The intent of this clause is to enable you to date pictures referred to as best suits your requirements without any interference or lost motion on our part. . . . No other theatre in Greater Miami, Miami Beach or Coral Gables shall run these pictures. . . ."

A number of the selected films had been furnished the Wometco Theatres, and before March 10 the United Artists Corporation had confirmed the dates for the showing of "The House of Rothschild" to Sparks East Coast Theatres. The latter on March 10, wrote Womteco Theatres, Inc., a letter relative to the confirmation. However, on March 14, United Artists wired Sparks that ". . . We are hereby rescinding dates previously confirmed to you for Miami and Palm Beach bookings stop please notify theatres involved and wire your understanding and acknowledgement this telegram." On this same date the United Artists, Inc., made a contract with the Dade Enterprises, Inc., a road show, to exhibit the first run of the picture in the cities in which Wometco Theatres, Inc., had previously advertised that it would exhibit the first run.

The Wometco Theatres, Inc., filed suit against the road show and asked the court to grant an injunction to prevent showing the picture on the grounds that the Wometco Theatres, Inc., "had expended considerable sums of money in announcing that it would exhibit said picture, and made the announcement publicly and extensively."

In refusing to grant the injunction, the higher Court said:

DECISION

"In such cases the injured party has an action against the party in default upon the contract, but he is not limited thereto. He may also maintain an action against the wrongdoer who induced the breach. . . . In a suit brought solely against Dade Enterprises, Inc., to enjoin it as a tortious and willful intermeddler with the contractual rights of Wometco Theatres, Inc., it would be unreasonable and inequitable to hold that Dade Enterprises, Inc., could only act at its peril in accepting a 'road show' contract from United Artists Corporation. . . .

However, it is important to know that this court also said:

"It follows that the order appealed from should be reversed, with directions to deny the injunction and dismiss the bill, without prejudice, however, to any right complainant (Wometco Theatres, Inc.) may have to assert against United Artists Corporation or Sparks East Coast Theatres in appropriate proceedings in which they are made parties."

In other words, the Wometco Theatres, Inc., still may sue and have an opportunity to recover damages for breach of contract from the United Artists, Inc., or Sparks East Coast Theatres providing, of course, Wometco Theatres, Inc., proves a breach of contract.

DAMAGES IN CASE OF CONTRACT BREACH

A PERSON who breaches a contract is liable in damages, loss of profits, and other financial losses sustained by the other contracting party as a result of the breach. However, the mere fact that the party being sued had stated that he intended to breach the contract, is not sufficient justification for the other party to recover damages.

For illustration, in Clark & Company v. Miller (122 So. 475) a disagreement became apparent between the contracting parties. Suit was instituted by one of the parties on the contention that certain acts and statements of the other party indicated that he intended breaching the contract. The court held that a person is not liable for assertions of this nature, since no breach actually has been accomplished. This court said:

DECISION

"The mere assertion of a party to a contract that he will be unable, or will refuse to perform his contract is not sufficient to constitute a breach. There must be a distinct, unequivocable, and absolute refusal to perform, treated and acted upon as such by the other party to the contract. A mere assertion of inability to go on with the contract is not a repudiation of the contract. The intention to abandon the contract at some future date is not a breach of it unless such intention is declared in positive terms and unconditionally."

STATE LAWS COVERING INTERSTATE BUSINESS

MANY COURTS have held that state laws are not applicable with respect to interstate theatre business. Also, recently a court held that State anti-trust laws are not effective with respect to the operation of theatres owned by film producers, or with respect to distributors of films produced in another state.

CASE

In this case, State v. Griffith, Oklahoma City (42 Pac. [2d] 861), suit was filed by State authorities against a film exchange and a corporation which is a producer of motion pictures and the owner of theatres located in the state. It was alleged that the latter had entered into an agreement and combination within the state to drive out all competition in the moving picture business in cities and towns in which they owned or operated theatres, and that a private citizen who owned a number of theatres in the state had been driven out of business by this combination which had control of the leasing of films in this state. It was further alleged that the film exchange and corporation acted unfairly and unlawfully against him in the kind of films they permitted him to lease and in the price charged for the same.

The corporation and film exchange denied any such agreement or combination as alleged and contended that neither the business of producing or distributing moving pictures, which is done by way of licensing under copyright granted under the provisions of the United States Copyright Law to each producer, nor the business of exhibiting moving pictures, is within the terms and purview of the anti-trust laws of the state because it involves interstate business. In other words, it was contended that all matters pertaining to the manufacture or production of moving picture films in one state, making contracts with the exhibitors for their use, and transmitting the films from the state where produced to the state where they are to be exhibited, constitute interstate commerce over which state authorities have no control and that state anti-trust laws are not applicable to this business. In upholding this contention, the lower court said:

DECISION

"That the said evidence proved, or tended to prove, that the defendants were operating theatres in the state of Oklahoma, but that said theatres were operated by said defendants for the exhibition of pictures produced and shipped in interstate commerce and that the Federal Court has exclusive jurisdiction of all matters in violation of interstate commerce, and that this Court has no jurisdiction in said matters and has no jurisdiction to enjoin said theatres when said are a part of interstate commerce."

CONTRACT SIGNED BY MISTAKE

UNDER CERTAIN circumstances a contract signed by mistake may be rescinded by the party who unintentionally signed it.

CASE

For example, in Warren v. Chancellor & Vaughn, Inc., Milwaukee, Wisconsin (259 N. W. 258) it was disclosed that during negotiations with an orchestra director a written contract was submitted to him. The testimony indicated that this contract provided that he direct twenty concerts without extra pay. It also provided that the employer might terminate the contract at any time during the year if the director's services were unsatisfactory, or if the employer's finances were insufficient to meet his salary.

The director took the contract for consideration and later revised it so that it provided for only eleven free concerts and omitted the paragraph giving the option to the employer to terminate his services. It also varied from the proposed contract in several less important respects.

When the director returned with the revised contract he submitted it to his employer, who signed it. Later the employer discovered that the contract that he had signed was not the one he had submitted to the director, and he immediately notified the director that he would not proceed with fulfillment of the contract. The director sued the employer to recover damages for breach of the contract. However, it is interesting to know that the lower Court held the employer not liable and the higher court sustained this verdict, saying:

DECISION

"The evidence clearly sustains findings to the effect that the contract was signed by mistake. . . . Where a party enters into a contract under a clear bona fide mistake, ignorance or forgetfulness of facts material thereto, he may, on that account, avoid or rescind such contract, provided the rights of innocent third parties will not be prejudiced by such avoidance. And, in such case, it is not material to inquire whether such party might not, by reasonable diligence, have ascertained correctly the facts which he had forgotten, or in regard to which he was so mistaken or in ignorance as aforesaid."

Now, it is important for all theatre owners to know that the reason the court held the employer entitled to rescind this contract is that (1) the employer's mistake in signing it primarily resulted from the director's act of substituting the new contract without calling the employer's attention to the substitution; and (2) that no third party was affected by the recision. If an innocent or third party would have sustained financial loss by the employer's rescission of the contract, then the Court would not have permitted the employer to rescind it, unless he repaid the loss resulting to the innocent or third party.

IGNORANCE OF THE CONTRACT'S TERMS

THE LAW IS well settled that under ordinary circumstances any person who signs a valid contract is liable in damages for failure to fulfill the assumed obligations, unless it is shown that the other party to the contract practiced fraud or misrepresented facts for the purpose of inducing signing of the contract. Moreover, this rule of the law ordinarily is applicable with respect to persons who sign contracts without reading the same.

CASE

For illustration, in Sharpless (155 Atl. 247) it was shown that a person signed a valid contract, and then attempted to avoid liability because he did not read it. Notwithstanding this argument the higher court held the person bound to perform all obligations assumed under the contract, and said:

DECISION

"If one can read his contract, his failure to do so is such gross negligence that it will estop him from escaping its obligations, unless he has been dissuaded from reading it by some trick or artifice practiced by the opposite party. If he cannot read it, it is as much his duty to procure some reliable person to read and explain it to him, before he signs it, as it would be not to read it before he signed it if he were able to do so; and his failure to obtain a reading and explanation of it is such gross negligence as will estop him from avoiding it on the ground that he was ignorant of its contents."

INJUNCTION OVER LEASE CONTRACT

VARIOUS COURTS have held that a landlord who leases a theatre building to a theatre operator may obtain a court injunction to prevent anyone from interfering with peaceful possession of the theatre building by the theatre operator. Moreover, a recent higher court has held that the landlord is entitled to the injunction, although the theatre operator is in legal controversy with the person who interferes with the theatre operator's possession of the building. In other words, the landlord may enforce proper and peaceful possession of his property against any one irrespective of the alleged reason for the acts which interferes with the tenant.

CASE

For example, in Anderson v. Tower Amusement Company (Miami, Florida, 159 So. 782), it was disclosed that a person named Anderson leased her theatre building for a five-year term subject to a restrictive clause that the premises should not be underlet or rented without consent of Anderson. Later the lease was transferred to the Sparks Theatre Company. Pursuant to the assignment of the lease the

EMPLOYER - EMPLOYE RELATIONS

By M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

SINCE PRACTICALLY all exhibitors must hire people to help them run their theatres, the law covering employment is of particular interest to them.

The relationship of employer and employe is created by an oral or written contract between the parties. The substance of a contract of employment is the agreement by the employe to work under the supervision and orders of the employer for a salary or wage to be paid by the latter.

At this point we must distinguish between an employee and what is known in law as an "independent contractor." An independent contractor is not an employe, but rather a person who agrees to do a piece of work for another person independently and at a specified price.

For example, a plumber called in to do a repair job is not the employe of the man engaging him, but is an independent contractor. Usually the independent contractor's employes take orders from him and not from the person hiring the independent contractor. The fact that the independent contractor is not an employe, but rather works "on his own," generally absolves the employer from responsibility for acts of negligence and similar wrongs committed by the independent contractor and the latter's employees.

The contract of employment may be for a definite or indefinite period of time. If no mention is made as to when the contract expires, it may be brought to an end at any time by either of the parties. A contract of employment providing for the payment of wages every week or every month, as the case may be, is usually considered to be a contract for at least the period of time elapsing between pay-days—that is, a week or month; and in such a case, the contract may be ended only at the close of such a period.

Aside from termination of the contract by direct act of the parties, it may be ended by breach of the terms of the contract by one of the parties. In the case of an employe; such breach of the contract may be caused by one of the following:

1. Disobedience to his employer.
2. Inability to do his work through insanity, drunkenness or illness.
3. Incompetence. Although a contract of employment may require that the employe perform his services to the satisfaction of the employer, the latter may not arbitrarily discharge the employe before the end of the contract period by claiming that he is not satisfied, but must act in good faith and must have reasonable grounds for finding fault with the employe's work.

The contract may be ended by the employe if the employer:

1. Becomes bankrupt.
2. Fails to pay the wages agreed upon, or attempts to have the employe perform work other than that which he was hired to do, without the employe's consent.
3. Changes the ownership of the business, as by selling it to another, incorporating or taking in a partner. Since the employment relationship is personal in that it calls for performance of duties by a certain person to another, the contract of employment may not be transferred by either of the parties to a third party without the other's consent.

In the event that the contract of employment is broken by the employe, the employer may sue for such damages as were caused thereby. For example, if the employer must pay a higher wage to someone for filling the employe's place, he may sue for the difference. In a limited class of cases, such as those involving the employment of a stage, screen or sports star or other persons whose services are unique and extraordinary, the wrongful ending of the contract by such an employe gives the injured employer the right to obtain an injunction preventing the employe from working for anyone else for the rest of the contract period.

Where the employe is wrongfully discharged before the end of the term for which he is employed, he may recover, as damages, his salary for the balance of the period for which he was hired. However, the employe is under a duty to look for similar employment after the unlawful discharge, thereby cutting down the amount of damages which the employer would otherwise be forced to pay.

building was occupied by the Sparks Theatre Company. However, another theatre company performed certain acts which interfered with peaceful occupancy of the building by Sparks. Anderson, the owner of the building, filed suit and asked the court to grant an injunction against any acts which interfered with peaceful possession of the building by Sparks Theatre Company.

Although the acts of interference were said to result from legal controversy between Sparks Theatre Company and the other theatre company, the Court promptly granted this injunction, and said:

DECISION

"If, in the present case Marie W. Anderson, as the landlord, was entitled to file her own individual bill for an injunction . . . she was entitled to have same granted to her in her own right, irrespective of the pendency of other litigation to which she was not a party. . . . Hence when she showed that she was entitled to have it awarded to her in her particular suit, so that it would inure to her benefit in her own name, and be capable of enforcement as her own injunctive process, irrespective of the course or outcome of the separately pending litigation being carried on in the name of others."

WHEN UNIONS MAY NOT PICKET

ALTHOUGH UNION members may lawfully picket a theatre in which the members are not employed, the courts will not permit picketing for any other reason.

CASE

For example, in Jensen v. St. Paul Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union No. 356, St. Paul, Minnesota, 259 N. W. 811, it was shown that a theatre owner had employed an operator for a moving picture machine who was not a member of a union, although he had paid to the union a sum equal to the dues of a member. Later the theatre owner entered into an agreement with the union by which he agreed to employ only moving picture machine operators furnished by that union and for several months he employed a union operator. However, later he dispensed with the services of the union operator and operated the moving picture machine himself. The agreement with the local union terminated four months afterward, but the union continued to picket the theatre as "unfair."

The theatre owner filed suit against the union and requested that an injunction be issued to restrain and prevent further picketing of the theatre. The lower court granted the injunction against further picketing and the higher court upheld the verdict, saying:

DECISION

"If the defendants (union) were right in their construction of the contract, they had at most a cause of action for damages for its prior breach. . . . To permit compulsion of that character to be brought to bear upon such a dispute would so far deprive plaintiffs (theatre owner) of their right to settle a claim for damages as provided by law that the statute could hardly be sustained. The dispute related to a question of damages."

SOUND EQUIPMENT SOLD FOR TAXES

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen during recent months whether expensive equipment leased to theatre owners may be sold for taxes, if the theatre owner fails to pay the taxes due.

It is well known that state laws under which taxes are levied are strictly construed in favor of the property owner and against the state. However, it is equally true that language of a tax law must not be given an unnatural construction in order to defeat the tax legislation nor the plain intent of legislation disregarded. It is also true that the courts, when the language will reasonably permit, will so construe statutes that they may become operative rather than give a construction that will defeat them.

There are many thousands of articles of personal property sold each year on conditional sales contracts and many more thousands held by nonowners under leases. They range all the way from articles of home furnishing of relatively small value to property of very considerable worth. For this reason it is very important that all theatre owners and sellers of theatre equipment shall be informed of the decision rendered a few weeks ago in RCA Photophone, Inc., v. Huffman (Fresno, California, 42 Pac. [2d] 1059).

CASE

In this case it was shown that RCA Photophone, Inc., leased sound equipment to a theatre owner for a term of years. It was installed in the Lyceum Theatre in the city of Fresno. Under the contract the theatre owner was given only a right to use the equipment, and he agreed to pay all taxes. He failed to list the equipment for assessment. The assessor of the county discovered this omission and seized the equipment, gave the required notice of sale, and sold it for $83.69. The amount due for taxes was $80.69.

When RCA Photophone, Inc., discovered that its equipment, valued at near $2,000, had been sold for $83.69 to cover the tax due, it sued the purchaser to recover possession of the equipment.

The counsel for RCA Photophone, Inc., contended that the assessment, seizure, and sale by the tax collector were void and conveyed no title to the purchaser for the reasons that (1) the property had not been assessed to its true owner, and (2) if it be conceded that personal property may be assessed to one in whose lawful posession it is found, it cannot be seized and sold by the assessor unless it is assessed to its owner. However, the higher court refused to invalidate the sale and said:

DECISION

"To require the assessors to ferret out the legal owner of each of these pieces of personal property would place upon them a task almost impossible of fulfillment. To hold that the tax on personal property lawfully assessed to its possessor could not be collected by its seizure and sale would surely result in the escape from taxation by many, as no other adequately workable means for collecting these taxes is given by the law. . . . We do not believe that the price which was bid and paid can be controling in cases of this kind. The law contemplates that the selling price shall at least equal the tax, penalties and costs. . . . This is the first concern in tax sales and not that the owner may receive the reasonable value of his property."

ALLOWANCE OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES

THE COURTS have consistently held that an award by a jury of actual damages is not a matter of discretion, but one of absolute right, and such damages are required to be measured by standards that make them, as far as it is humanly possible, an exact equivalent in money of the injury suffered. On the other hand, the giving of punitive damages, as well as the amount thereof, lies wholly within the discretion of the jury and are awarded only when the party causing the injury did so with actual malice, knowingly and with intent to do wrong.

For example, in Greaves v. Kansas City Junior Orpheum Company (Kansas City, Missouri, 80 S. W. [2d] 229), it was disclosed that a man named Greaves had a good reputation and for a number of years he had been engaged as head janitor and custodian of various theatres. One day while one of the theatres was being remodeled the superintendent of new construction and the remodeling of old theatres told Greaves, as the evidence indicated, that he could sell some old chairs to get some extra money. After Greaves had sold the chairs and the superintendent had left the city the manager missed the chairs and upon learning that Greaves had sold them the manager, believing that Greaves had stolen them, reported the matter to the police. Soon afterward Greaves was arrested at his home by members of the Police Department. During the time that Greaves was incarcerated he was put into a cell with people of the underworld, his finger prints taken and he was put through the "show up room." His arrest has resulted in humiliation and disgrace. When no one from the theatre filed charges against him he was released.

Later Greaves filed suit against the theatre for damages. Although considerable testimony was given to contradict Greaves's testimony the jury held the theatre owner liable in $750 for actual damages and $750 for punitive damages.

The theatre owner appealed to the higher court and insisted that there was no evidence of maliciousness in the case, that is, that there was not an intentional doing of a wrongful act by the theatre owner known to have been wrong. The theatre owner contended that he could not be held liable for $750 as punitive damages because Greaves had not been arrested maliciously. In upholding this contention the court said:

"Of course, in order for the arrest to be actionable at all and even compensatory damages recovered, the arrest must have been wrongful. . . . Implied malice is defined to be the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. The Courts have construed this definition to mean that the thing done must not only have been wrongful but it must have been known to have been wrong. . . . However, the amount assessed as punitive damages cannot be sustained."

RESTRICTIONS ON LABOR UNIONS

IRRESPECTIVE of the character of a contract, whether it is between theatre owner and employes, theatre owner and a union, or theatre employes and a union, the constitutional rights of liberty and property may be limited only to the extent necessary to subserve the public interest. For example, a union cannot, in the service of its interest, deprive a nonmember of his constitutional right of liberty and property.

Another important point of the established law is that a labor union cannot legally be employed to the detriment of society. It shall not be used as a means of oppression and injustice in respect of its members, or to deprive any of them, in the form of a contractual surrender, or otherwise, of their fundamental rights, when the public interest will not be thereby served. In other words, there can be no arbitrary or capricious discrimination between the members of the union in respect to equality of opportunity to work. And these rules of the law are applicable under all circumstances. So held a higher Court in Cameron v. International Alliance of Stage Employes And Moving Picture Operators of the United States And Canada, Local Union No. 384 of Jersey City (176 Atl. 692).

In 1928 the synchronization of pictorial action and voice and sound became a reality and wrought radical changes in the industry. The advent of the sound picture, so it is claimed, produced a shortage of skilled projectionists. It became necessary to impart the requisite technical knowledge to them, and to instruct a like number who were wholly unfamiliar with the mechanics of the trade. These latter inexperienced men were given a "permit" to work in the theatres with which Local Union No. 384 had a contract, until such time as the examining board of the local union was convinced that these men were qualified and sufficiently experienced in their trade. These permit holders acquired practical experience under the tutelage and guidance of the union operators, and in consideration thereof, paid to the local union 10% of their earnings. The permit holders were in no sense members of the union, and consequently had no standing with the parent international body.

Later a Junior Local was created. The membership fee for permits of the Junior Local was $500. There was a specific provision that "Junior members will at all times be subject to removal from jobs" when such jobs are desired by senior members. It was agreed that before a member of the Junior Local could become a Senior there were several prerequisites, among which were that the application must be voted on, by secret ballot, at a regular meeting and receive a two-thirds vote of all senior members present at such meeting, and the amount of dues to be paid by all members and officers shall be of such amount as the union may decide upon from time to time. The membership fee as a Senior was increased to $3,000.

Suit was filed to invalidate these regulations on the grounds that they are against public policy. In holding a contract of this nature void, the court said:

"The classification in question is an unreasonable restraint of the junior members' constitutional rights. It is an arbitrary interference with the liberty of contract. . . ."

ACCEPTANCE IS PAYMENT

GENERALLY SPEAKING, where an account is disputed by a theatre owner or other debtor, acceptance by the creditor of a check with a notification: "This check is in full payment of account," or "I am sending the enclosed amount as full and complete payment of the enclosed account," relieves the theatre owner of further obligations to pay the balance due.

Notwithstanding this fact, sometimes considerable difficulty is experienced by the courts in deciding whether a payment made by a check on a disputed account is full and complete payment. Usually, if the written notification of full payment is on the check, or in a letter accompanying the check, it may fairly be interpreted that the debtor intended the payment to be final, and the creditor had reasonable opportunity to determine the intent of the debtor, which results in the debtor being relieved of further payment.

For illustration, in Alcorn v. Arthur (20 S. W. [2d] 276, Louisville, Ky.), it was disclosed that a debtor objected to the amount of a bill sent by creditors and the debtor refused to pay it. Subsequently he sent his check to the creditors for a small part of the amount he owed and wrote on the check the notification: "For account in full."

The creditors accepted and cashed the check and later filed suit for the balance due contending that they did not see the written notification on the check. Notwithstanding this contention the higher court held the creditors not entitled to collect the balance due.

the cinema it would be wise to take into consideration and to provide for such changes in the motion picture as may come about. One change that appears likely deals with the shape of the projected picture. Here is one instance where we may say that the cart can logically be put before the horse. With limited viewing distances standardized it would be possible to develop a new improved film shape which could not be achieved with greater viewing distances. The film is adjusted to the structure rather than the other way around.

The relation of the width of the film to the size and shape of the motion picture can now be given definite consideration, knowing the ideal size of viewing audience. The 70 mm. and the 50 mm. film widths which have been suggested toward changing the shape of the screen are needlessly wide for the smaller audience; in addition, such widths would require drastic changes in equipment. With limited viewing distances it would be possible, by an increase of approximately only five additional millimeters to the present film width, to obtain an improved picture shape. This new shape can be made possible immediately by utilizing the following three steps, each of which would not entail any impractical change to the present motion picture mechanism—(1) slight increase in present film width, (2) slight decrease in present height of picture on film, and (3) slightly greater magnification in projection to compensate for reduction in picture height.

Some additional practical considerations to be dealt with in establishing standards are:

1. The usual shapes of plots of ground upon which motion picture theatres are erected.
2. Internal circulation, such as aisle arrangement and emergency exit conditions.
3. Economy of construction costs.
4. Governing building codes.

The above factors can be dealt with efficiently and will in no way hamper establishing standards. As a matter of fact, the standards will help to determine the proper selection of theatre plots, and should also be helpful in keeping construction costs down.

There remains one important factor in need of careful research work; that is proper viewing distances for given screen image sizes. Viewing distances must be determined in two ways—first, by the ability to see detail on the screen clearly; and second, by the distance of the viewer from the screen permitting the proper illusion. Researches into this latter phase of the matter are likely to advance us still further toward the establishment of standards in design.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 120, No. 13 · September 28, 1935

THE EXHIBITOR

THESE lines fall upon paper at a desk a-swirl with printers' proofs drifted deep as storm-blown snow in the process of issue of a monumental issue of Motion Picture Herald—Mr. Martin Quigley's twentieth anniversary—such an issue of a journal of the industry as it has never seen before.

On this busy day we are mindful, and oft reminded as we turn the pages, that the world of the motion picture is thus memorializing, in the season of its greatest product, its success, and that this success of which we are all so proud is box office success, exhibitor success.

Every triumph of the motion picture and every important step in its progress these twenty years has been made on the screens by which the exhibitor has delivered to the public for its final decision every product of all the striving of the industry.

It is a particular pride of Motion Picture Herald, as a floration of twenty years of administration and editorship by Mr. Quigley, that it stands unique in the expression of the policy which has ever given the exhibitor, that key man between the product and the people, his place in the sun and a place where his voice could and can be heard. The Herald files hold twenty years of pages of vigorous exhibitor expression.

The purpose of the motion picture is exhibition.

GIVING AWAY THE SHOW

AN exemplification of conflict of purpose between the motion picture and the newspaper is afforded in a recent issue of the New York Times, September 8, section 9, page 4x, a Sunday, which presents an advertisement of "The Crusades" headed "You'll gasp at this!" and promising thrills. In adjacent columns is an article from Hollywood by a special writer painstakingly explaining the studio devices by which the thrill scenes were made. After a perusal of the article, a reader might have a clinical interest in the picture, but he would find it hard to accept the make-believe which had been so exposed, diagrammed and dissected for him. The motion picture seeks to serve its audience, and the audience tries to buy illusion. The newspaper and the fan press seem to find it entertainment for their audiences to make copy of invasions of that illusion.

This procedure with respect to the motion picture is, however, not unique. The same press has often done much of the same sort of a job for the book trade in reviewing pages. With editorship aimed at circulation and reader interest a great many so-called book reviews are in fact special articles which tend to extract the essence of the book under discussion and so satisfy the potential reader that he finds acquisition of the book unnecessary.

Book publishers, apparently perhaps a bit more aware of their copyright protections than the motion picture commonly has been, have taken steps against such invasion of their interest by making and stipulating decided limitations on the amount of text that may be quoted by reviewers. Book publishers have done something about the enterprise of the press which would give away the show in advance.

THE VARIETY BILL

THE final rout of vaudeville with the adoption of all-film—double bill—policy at the Loew and RKO theatres of New York, the last stronghold of the variety show, completes a process that has been under way nearly forty years. The theatre career of the screen began the week of April 23, 1896, in Herald Square with the new-born marvel a turn on a vaudeville bill.

The first material of the screen's production for the theatre was direct recording from vaudeville acts, and so it continued, essentially, for many years. And so it came that the pictures worked their way to the end of the bill and became known as the "chasers," indicating to the audience that the show was over.

Now for a good many years the best variety material that the theatre could offer has been presented in screen shorts. The motion picture show consisting of a feature and assorted shorts is in truth a vaudeville, a variety show, in film. As early in fact as 1902 Mr. Thomas Tally of Los Angeles advertised a "refined vaudeville of moving pictures."

The wonder is that the vaudeville stage survived so long as it did.

Probably the most curious manifestation of its whole career was that strange enterprise by which the Radio City Music Hall was built and launched on a concept of policy substantially identical with that under which the Palace, greatest Broadway citadel of vaudeville, was dying. When pictures were called to the rescue of the Music Hall there remained nothing to do about vaudeville but write the obituary. All that was good of vaudeville lives today to enrich the screen.

It seems odd that there has been no piercing outcry from vaudevillians that the motion picture was obligated to preserve them as a source of material, or special pleas for government subsidy to insure the stability of civilization by keeping the acrobatic acts and the Swiss bellringers employed. But, after all, poor old vaudeville, worn out, outmoded servant of the masses, was of illiterate stuff—with no Professor Walter Pritchard Eaton of Yale to weep for it.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Building Again

An investment estimated at between $17,000,000 and $26,000,000 was allocated by both new and old motion picture capital during the first nine months of 1935 to the construction of 260 new theatre buildings in 199 cities and towns in 38 states. Thus does exhibition become a participant with the general field of construction in normal activity for the first time since 1929 when the crash of the markets and the subsequent depression silenced the steam shovels in the excavations for new projects.

Additional millions were spent in this period for remodeling and re-equipping and otherwise rehabilitating wornout theatres.

Surveying the country, it was found that claim of over-seating in an area has not been necessarily a deterrent to new theatre construction. There is a definite trend, too, back to neighborhood exhibition. This has created a demand for a greater number of exhibition units with reduced seating capacities, designed for more rapid write-off and lower maintenance charges.

An analysis of the findings from the survey appears on page 13, and starting on page 225 is a record of each of the 260 new theatres reported.

William Fox Taxes

The long arm of the United States Government this week reached out to penalize William Fox in a claim for $3,566,583, on charges of alleged attempts to "defeat and evade" his income tax payments by "false and fraudulent means." The amount includes deficiencies, penalties and interest, and the claim results from income returns made by Mr. Fox in 1929 and 1930. The matter has been pending for three years and was made the subject of Congressional inquiry in 1933. See page 30.

Asserting that if Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres, exercised an option to acquire 50 per cent of the stock in the reorganized Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, he would be risking the company's funds, Archibald Palmer, counsel for petitioning creditors, is opposing the move.

A Fox Theatres stockholders' protective committee has obtained an order from Judge Martin T. Manton in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York, directing Mr. Weisman to show cause why he should not exercise the option to purchase a half interest for $270,000. The committee is headed by Gustavus A. Rogers, of the law firm of Jenks and Rogers.

Mr. Palmer said he would fight the move when it came up for a hearing on Friday, insisting it was the duty of the receiver to liquidate the company's affairs and not "to go into business" through a deal of that nature.

Meanwhile it developed that no application for allowances in the reorganization of the old Fox Metropolitan Playhouses has been filed in New York supreme court, which set September 30 as the deadline for filing claims. A hearing on claims is expected in October.

Product difficulties took Mr. Weisman to New York supreme court seeking to restrain the Dorset theatre from playing "China Seas" ahead of the Gotham, which claims to have bought the picture on last season's contract. This matter comes up Monday.

Reorganization of Theatre Realty Company, operating the Fox in St. Louis, is expected to be expedited by a bondholders' petition to reorganize under Section 77-B of the bankruptcy law.

H. J. Fitzgerald, operating head of Evergreen States Amusement, Seattle, and Rick Ricketson, Fox Intermountain division manager, Denver, are in New York to negotiate five-year contracts with National Theatres.

Continuing its expansion, Fox Intermountain is preparing to build a $100,000 house on the site of the Curran, Boulder, Colo., to be ready January 1, and recently added to the State in Boulder.

First Move

Determined to formulate an organized exhibitor stand in favor of some sort of regulation to curb the rising tide of ruinous trade practices, Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is starting on a coast-to-coast investigation of exhibitor sentiment in the field.

What Mr. Kuykendall learns will form the basis of the MPTOA directors' recommendation on self-government for the industry when it meets in November.

Out of the welter of discussion regarding the legal hazards to the distributors in acting in concert on any plan, it develops that film companies are now faced with legal liabilities a-plenty because harmful practices are allowed to run unchecked. The distributors, however, are waiting for the theatre men to make the first move.

The entire codifying situation at the moment, together with proposals, expectations, predictions and the moot questions involved, is discussed in the article starting on page 167.

The Story Millions

Forty motion picture producers invested an estimated $3,395,000 in 679 books and plays during the year ended September 1, 1935.

Original stories continued throughout the year to be Hollywood's principal source of material, the studios buying 337 originals, or 50 per cent of the total, as against 254 published books and only 88 plays, these representing 37 and 13 per cent, respectively.

An analysis of the 1934-35 purchases, by companies, together with the first full year's record of acquisitions to be published, appears on pages 29 and 283.

Nontheatricals

Boycott as a weapon to force distributors to cease servicing nontheatrical accounts is urged by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

He assails also equipment manufacturers and dealers who supply reproducers to these sources of competition, and calls for action against the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company's sponsorship of a free-admission unit show headed by Kate Smith which is presently touring key cities.

The MPTOA head regards competition of this character as a major industry worry. He discusses this and other problems in the article on page 304.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Resigns

The aggressive ambitions of the National Congress of Parent-Teachers Associations to cause the schools of the country to invade the motion picture industry, as proposed by Mrs. Robins Gilman of Minneapolis, motion picture chairman, were unceremoniously killed late last week with the acceptance of her resignation. Mrs. Gilman had been campaigning the country over for months to induce communities to engage, under her plan, in production, distribution and exhibition, in competition with the established theatrical industry.

Succeeding Mrs. Gilman is Dr. Edgar Dale of Ohio University, who is not so outspokenly antagonistic toward the motion picture, and immediately the Association will make a new approach to the film "problem."

Mrs. Gilman strongly advocated the abolition of "block booking," "blind buying" and such, whereas Dr. Dale is understood to have concluded, some time ago, that purely industry practices are the concern only of the industry.

Dr. Dale was associated for a time with the Motion Picture Research Council, of which little is now heard, and in that connection wrote for the Council's Payne Study a treatise on "How to Appreciate the Motion Picture," for use as a text book in high schools. Some in the industry considered this work as an aid to the development of motion picture appreciation.

The change in the chairmanship came at a Chicago meeting of the board.

Best in a Decade

Fundamental conditions are better in the film industries than at any time in the last ten years, declared Conrad Alexander in the first of two articles which appeared last week in The New York Daily Investment News. This is due, he wrote, to financial reorganizations, increasing earnings and reduction of funded debt to a normal position in relation to total capitalization.

"More conservative practices with respect to amortization of film costs have been adopted, there is not the reckless expenditure of money that was general a few years ago, producers are saddled with fewer theatres and the 'cleaning up' of pictures in response to public demand has aided rather than hurt attendance," Mr. Alexander continued.

He also sees a tendency toward increased admission and reduction of giveaways. Color, he wrote, has not caused a stampede and "Becky Sharp" has removed the fear of heavy expenditures. Its perfection in the less expensive short subjects, he said, will result.

MARTIN QUIGLEY wishes to acknowledge gratefully and to express hearty appreciation of the many congratulatory messages received on the occasion of his twentieth anniversary in motion picture journalism.

Relief Mystery

President Roosevelt announced some ten days ago the establishment of a $27,000,000 fund from the Administration's $4,800,000,000 relief coffers, for alleviating distress in the army of unemployed theatrical workers. But to date no one, in Washington or elsewhere, has been able to explain the basis on which the grant was made, or under what policy of operation it will be administered.

None of the grant will go toward establishing motion picture exhibition shows on the road, which is the form to be taken by the theatrical companies under the present plan. This, of course, is good news for established film theatres, which probably would suffer from the competition if such traveling film units were placed in operation.

The story of the $27,000,000 theatrical grant is told on page 235.

Opening Sundays

The trend toward liberal Sundays and repeal of the Blue Laws prohibiting Sunday amusements was marked this year, and this fall many communities will have Sunday film shows for the first time.

Twelve states in the present decade have revised or repealed their Sunday laws, and current straws in the wind are the first Sunday premiere of a play in New York and the prospect that many communities in Pennsylvania will relegate the Sabbath taboo at the November referenda. Other sections have veered to a liberal tolerance of Sunday amusements.

In Manhattan, Kan., the theatre managers have instituted a plan of community cooperation which has displaced the former hostility to Sunday film shows. A survey of the nationwide situation, with comment on the trend, is contained in the article starting on page 31.

In the Courts

Federal court actions, existing and threatening, were highlighted during the week in six places, with the federal government and independent owners complaining against trade practices of distributors, and, in some cases, against competitive owners, too.

Outstanding was the action of the federal court in St. Louis in paving the way for the trial on September 30th of the anti-trust conspiracy case against large distributors, causing the Department to abandon its plan for a special court to expedite determination of the issue, which, basically, revolves around the alleged refusal to service three St. Louis theatres with first run product.

The Department, too, was studying contracts of distributors in which exhibitors are not permitted to show the company's product with another feature.

Motion picture legal issues are reported on page 63.

Insurance Cut

Motion picture theatre owners in the Midwest will benefit greatly by a new plan that is about to be effected whereby present excessive liability insurance rates will be cut immediately by 25 per cent, in line with arrangements made by the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association. The idea, it is expected, may be developed further to extend the cut to as much as 50 per cent, and brings to owners the largest single reduction ever effected in this connection. See page 18.

This Week in Pictures

ACTOR BY SURPRISE. Never suspected it, did Pinky Tomlin (below). Went to Hollywood as singer and song writer. Worked in "King Solomon of Broadway." Result, a contract to play in Universal pictures.

ALONG BARBARY COAST. As recalled for the Samuel Goldwyn production "Barbary Coast," soon to be released by United Artists. Shown are: Miriam Hopkins, Mr. Goldwyn, Edna Ferber, Director Howard Hawks, Lawrence Tibbett and Edward G. Robinson.

ADMIT RESPONSIBILITY. For what would seem to be a hit picture, RKO Radio's "Top Hat," co-starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. These personages aren't Fred and Ginger, of course—merely Mark Sandrich, who directed the musical, and Irving Berlin, who did the tunes.

OLDEST EXHIBITOR. Shown below at his favorite hobby—ship-building—is T. R. Garrick, proprietor of two Australian theatres and at 83, probably the oldest showman in that country.

ONE DAY BIKE RIDER. Waiting for a new day. Or maybe a street car. Anyway, the pause permits (below) a grateful glimpse of June Travis, Warner player. Hey, the handlebars are reversed! (Or aren't they?)

TABLEAU. Snatched (above) from First Division's "Mimi," adapted from Murger's "La Vie de Boheme." Gertrude Lawrence and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., are shown in this scene from the production.

TO THE VICTOR. In Republic's sales drive will go the silver and gold plaque which Trem Carr, vice president, and Charlotte Henry, Republic star, are displaying below. It is called the Carr Sales Trophy.

ALL IN A DAY'S WORK. For William Koenig, who is in the center of this montage of trappings and tasks of a motion picture production plant. Mr. Koenig is general manager of studio operations at the Warner-First National establishment in Burbank.

BACON COMPANY

IN SEASON. Is John McGuire's contract with 20th Century-Fox, for a former football star is he. He and Sally Blane (shown with him above) are together in "This Is the Life." Alice Faye was just a-visitin'.

THE WINNER. AND so as "Miss Wisconsin," chosen by the Elks of that State, Miss Myrtle Stracotha got to go to Hollywood. And above she is, with her mother and somebody else, meeting Jimmie Cagney at Warner's.

EVENING GOWN. Of chintz, good old-fashioned chintz. Flowers on a background. And then, of course, Betty Furness, MGM player.

MAKING THEIR SCREEN DEBUT. Fred Lightner and Earl Oxford as they appear in "Rhythm of Paree," Educational musical short. Lightner is a vaudeville comic, Oxford a singing juvenile in stage revues.

BEING STARRED. Wini Shaw, whose recent work in Warner pictures has won her a contract and the starring role in "Broadway Hostess."

SIGNED. As costume designer. He is Brymer, New York fashion creator, and will conceive costumes for Universal. He is shown conferring with Irene Hervey concerning a gown in which she appears in her newest production, "His Night Out."

AT HOME. Where there are no mikes or cameras George Burns and Gracie Allen get this way. It's because they think Sandra Jean is some daughter. Paramount's "Here Comes Cookie" is the latest Burns & Allen picture.

GRECIAN. A rendition in sculptured white of the darksome Kay Francis, indicating how she appears in Warner's "I Found Stella Parrish."

ONE-MAN ORCHESTRA. Drum, fiddle, trumpet effects. In other words, Rubinoff, who can make music look funny and sound lovely, and does it in "Thanks a Million," 20th Century-Fox picture.

FLIES EAST. Ian Hunter arriving for New York premiere of Warner's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," in which he has a leading role.

GIRLS AND GIRLS. And girls, plus Lucille Page, which gives you an idea of Educational's "Moonlight and Melody," a two-reel musical produced by Al Christie and co-starring Miss Page, Buster West and Tom Patricola.

RETOUCHING. Margaret Irving, whom Darryl F. Zanuck brought from Broadway to appear with Dick Powell and Fred Allen in "Thanks a Million," 20th Century-Fox production, being given attention by a makeup expert before going on set.

FEATURED. Rita Cansino, one of the newer personalities of the screen, who has been given an important role in the 20th Century-Fox production, "Paddy O'Day," starring Jane Withers.

BROADWAY RHYTHM. Is the name of the dance represented at left in a demonstration by June Knight and Robert Taylor, who execute it in MGM's "Broadway Melody of 1936." The dance was created by Dave Gould.

OFF-SET STUDY. (Right) Warren William waiting the call for the next scene of his latest Warner assignment, a mystery thriller entitled "The Case of the Lucky Legs."

260 NEW THEATRES IN 38 STATES IN NINE MONTHS

Investment of Between $17,000,000 and $26,000,000 Made in New Buildings in 199 Cities and Towns; Unknown Additional Millions Spent Throughout The Country for Remodeling of Old Properties

With the resumption of activity in the general field of construction at the turn of the year, after a standstill that was almost complete during the previous four-year depression period, both new and old capital turned to new theatre construction and in the first nine months of this year built, or announced for construction, some 260 theatres in 199 cities and towns in 38 states.

Averaging the cost per theatre at from $65,000 to $100,000, the total investment ranges from $16,900,000 to $26,000,000, conservatively estimated. Unknown additional millions were spent on remodeling, reequipping and otherwise rehabilitating old or deteriorated properties.

Independents were as active as the circuits in building and rebuilding.

Over-seating Found to Be Not Necessarily A Deterrent to New Theatre Construction

A nationwide survey shows that claims of over-seating in an area has not been necessarily a deterrent to new theatre construction. This is due, it was found, to the operation of two factors, both of which have gained momentum during the last few years. The one is obsolescence, which has overtaken a large percentage of the theatres built before theatre architecture became ascendant. The other factor is population shift, which the economic depression has accelerated and which, reports show, to be bringing about the erection of some theatres closer to shifted centers of population than existing houses are located.

Impinging upon these two factors, yet distinct enough in its workings to form a separate element in the revival of theatre construction, is the definite trend back to neighborhood exhibition, making motion picture entertainment more readily accessible, and, thereby, cultivating the theatregoing habit. This has created a demand for a greater number of exhibition units with reduced seating capacities, designed for more rapid write-off and lower maintenance charges.

All New Properties Compiled, As Gathered In Field from Equipment and Film Sources

Beginning on page 225 appears a compilation of the new theatres actually completed and opened, or announced for immediate construction in the period from January 1, 1935, to September 30. The record was gathered from architectural announcements, from admissions by the prospective owners and/or operators, and from the books of theatre equipment manufacturers and dealers and film exchanges, which are always on the alert for new business.

It was virtually impossible, however, to determine the specific extent of remodeling which took place during this period, although it is generally known that it was widespread, more extensive, in fact, than since the boom years of 1927 and 1928.

New theatre construction, too, eclipses all previous years since 1927, and is running at average, or better, of normal times, when some 300 theatres are usually built in a twelvemonth.

The theatre construction spurt this year was not given much impetus by the federal government's Housing Administration project, but theatre remodeling and re-equipping was.

Theatre construction activity was most pronounced in Texas in the nine months, some 53 new projects reporting, against New York's 24, Ohio,s 14, the 12 each reported in Pennsylvania and California, and 11 each in Illinois and Louisana. Activity in the other states is outlined in the compilation in the adjoining column.

Construction in New England appeared to be continuing at a standstill. There was much activity in the northwest and along the Atlantic Seaboard below the New England line. Building was at a brisk pace inland around the national capital and in the midwest, although it was not marked in the agricultural territories. New theatres appeared in many territories for the first time in five years and more.

INDUSTRY AT AMPA'S LUNCHEON OBSERVING QUIGLEY ANNIVERSARY

The 20 years of service of Martin Quigley to the motion picture industry was the occasion for a testimonial luncheon given by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at which leading executives and representative members of the industry turned out en masse Wednesday at Jack Dempsey's restaurant, off Broadway.

Speakers dwelt on Mr. Quigley's contribution to advancement of the industry in the last two decades. Al Lichtman, president of United Artists, who was master of ceremonies, pointed out that coincidentally this was the twentieth anniversary of the founding of the AMPA. Gordon S. White, AMPA president, opened the meeting.

Among the 268 in attendance and an overflow of 63 who were unable to crowd their way in, were 95 who have served the industry 20 years or more. These signed a register which was presented to Mr. Quigley. Telegrams were read from leading industry figures who were unable to attend.

On the dais, starting at the left, were J. Edgar Hoover, Herman Robbins, R. H. Cochrane, Terry Ramsaye, Dr. A. H. Giannini, David Bernstein, J. Robert Rubin, Sam Dembow, P. D. Cochrane, C. C. Pettijohn, Will H. Hays, Mr. Quigley, Mr. Lichtman, Mr. White, Howard Dietz, P. L. Thomson, Ned E. Depinet, E. W. Hammons, Jules Brulatour, Colvin Brown, Jack Connolly and John C. Flinn.

At the lower speakers' table were: J. J. McCarthy, S. Charles Einfeld, "Red" Kann, James R. Grainger, Charles E. McCarthy, William J. Germain, Louis Nizer, Edward Finney, W. Ray Johnston, Arthur A. Lee and James P. Cunningham.

IATSE Files a New Complaint On Coast

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees filed a supplementary complaint in Hollywood with the National Labor Relations Board, requesting that International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (a studio union) contracts for soundmen with all studios be declared illegal. The initial complaint filed earlier this week pertained only to major studios.

Eddington in New Firm

Harry Eddington, Frank Vincent and Rosalie Stewart have formed a new firm in Hollywood to act as representatives of authors and composers. The company, which will be known as Edington, Vincent and Stewart, will operate apart from Eddington and Vincent, who act as artists' representatives.

Del Ruth Picks Eleanor Powell As Best Feminine Tap Dancer

Roy Del Ruth, director of "Folies Bergere" and "Broadway Melody of 1936," has compiled a list of ten best dancers in motion pictures today. First on the list is Eleanor Powell, who recently won the award of the Dancing Masters of America as "the world's greatest feminine tap dancer."

Others in the list are Fred Astaire, Joan Crawford, Clifton Webb, June Knight, Harriet Hoctor, Ruby Keeler, Ray Bolger, Nick Long, Jr., and Bill Robinson, who is termed by the director "the world's greatest masculine tap dancer."

Lift Englewood Ban

Children are again being admitted to theatres in Englewood, N. J., after two weeks of a ban due to the infantile paralysis epidemic in Bergen County.

Clark's Re-election Expected At Film Carriers Convention

James Clark, president of National Film Carriers, is expected to be reelected at the association's annual convention planned for October 7-9 at the Park Central Hotel in New York. Charles C. Pettijohn and Ted Rogers, president of the American Trucking Association, will speak at the luncheon scheduled for October 8.

The U. S. Motor Carrier Act and its effects on film transportation will be discussed and means of cooperation planned.

Commonwealth Convention

Approximately twenty managers of the Commonwealth Amusement Corporation theatres in Kansas, Missouri, and Iowa met in Kansas City last week at the organization's first annual convention. The session lasted two days.

Looking Forward

After the first twenty years

THE past twenty years happen to represent the period during which the industry and art of the motion picture assumed its present character and significance. It happens, also, to represent the period during which the writer has been exclusively engaged in the business of publishing and editing trade journals dedicated to the purpose of assisting the industry and the art of the motion picture to form a character consistent with its high mission as the world's greatest entertainment medium and to foster and promote its significance as the show of shows, exerting, as it does, in constantly increasing measure, an incomparable influence on the lives and living of vast millions throughout the world.

To one who believed earnestly and wholeheartedly in the motion picture, in its possibilities for profit and service, in its genuinely important position in world affairs, the past twenty years have been rich in compensations. He has seen the motion picture and its people rise from a lowly estate in which they had been regarded by other industries and other professions with a feeling varying from contempt to amused tolerance. He has seen the inevitable dawn of that day in which the significance of the motion picture, both as a business and as a social influence, was suddenly and seemingly by accident realized by educators, sociologists, great institutions of finance and even by the Government itself.

THEREFORE, after these twenty years which followed the cradling days of the motion picture, a point has been reached at which the years ahead may be contemplated not only with confidence but with enthusiasm. As impressive as is the scene now, when the past twenty years are reviewed in retrospect and the distance traveled is realized, there is a future prospect to be contemplated which needs only clear judgment in face of the known facts of today to inspire unbounded anticipations for tomorrow.

The motion picture industry faces the future with a vastly improved personnel, there having come into its ranks notably better recruits than it was largely compelled to accept two decades ago and through many of the intervening years.

IT has learned to its credit, and even its own complete satisfaction, that as a purveyor of mass entertainment it faces an inescapable responsibility for the character of its product and for the well-being of its customers.

It has learned that motion pictures must be created in a studio and not ground out in a factory.

It has learned that theatres have a community character and local responsibility and that they cannot be regimented like gasoline stations.

It has learned that it is not necessarily dependent upon public finance; that, in fact, the occasional ascendancy of the banker has done but very little to assure progress or even stability.

It has learned that within the talents and experience of its own people there is ample capacity to advance the progress of the business and of the art—without reliance upon those from alien fields who would reorder and reconstruct professedly for betterment, but actually for only the purpose of gaining for themselves a warming place in the industry's sun.

During the past twenty years the motion picture industry has weathered the experiences of a lifetime. It has faced prosperity and depression; good fortune and bad. It found itself from time to time confronted with enormous difficulties no one of which, however, proved a permanent obstacle to progress and better times. Two decades ago the industry was young; it is still youthful, and young it will continue through the generations of its present custodians, as compared with other businesses that rank importantly in the modern world. But it is old enough to have crept from Halsted Street, Chicago, to Rockefeller Center, New York. It is old enough to have taken in its strides the manifold difficulties presented in the development of the feature picture, the erection of suitable auditoria, the transition to sound and meanwhile a thousand and one other internal and external complexities.

The industry is young, but it is indeed old enough in training and experience to face such problems as confront it with equanimity and confidence.

IN swift and ceaseless motion the industry itself partakes of the character of its product. The action moves with such lightning rapidity that even the closest and quickest observer has difficulty in keeping up with the trends. There actually already have reached the screen attractions of a character and fineness which were not conceivable only a few years ago. The transformation in the essence and scope of the motion picture which came with the transition to sound all seemed at the time to have been diligently analyzed and explored, but it has become apparent that the predictions, however far-flung, have fallen far short of reality. It is now a demonstrable fact that the finest literary, musical and dramatic compositions of all time are being rendered in a manner that makes feeble and barren the best that any art or all the other, older arts have been able to achieve. And it may most importantly be noted that what the motion picture does it does not do for a small, select coterie of the elect, but for the millions of all kinds and classes throughout civilization.

IN the changing world of these days the motion picture has become an instrumentality of an importance and significance which few realize. The battle cry in political life the world over is to give to the masses a more abundant life. This cry has been anticipated by the motion picture, which because of its character and because of its facility for duplication is already prepared to bring to the masses a rich abundance that through any other medium is not possible or even conceivable. It not only can serve what in other days were the forgotten millions, but it can serve to them, at low cost, what power and wealth previously could not obtain at any price.

TO have played a part, however small, in this drama of the conquest during the past two decades of the motion picture over obscurity, prejudice and a world opinion unconscious of this nascent miracle of the development of the greatest of the arts, is in itself an abundant compensation for twenty years' effort.

To be now at the threshhold of continued service to the industry is an opportunity which stands beckoning in the resplendent light of the satisfactions of the twenty years that have passed.

MIDWESTERN OWNERS GET 25 PER CENT REDUCTION IN LIABILITY INSURANCE

New Plan Does Not Take Form of Dividend, but Gives Owners Immediate Cut Rate Upon Signing Participating Contract

Group Underwriting Is Basis of Idea, Which Is Expected Eventually to Bring Savings of 50 Per Cent, Losses Permitting

Of interest to motion picture theatre owners the country over is a new plan, formulated at Kansas City, whereby the present excessive liability insurance rates for theatres are reduced 25 per cent immediately, with possible further reductions as the plan functions. It is one of the largest single reductions ever secured by exhibitors.

As the result of efforts of the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association to secure public liabilty insurance for member theatres at a rate less prohibitive than has been the rule nationally in the past, the plan for effecting such reduction has been worked out with an old-time stock insurance company by Finton Jones, pioneer Kansas City insurance agent.

Under the plan, whereby the insurance company will write liability on theatres of members at a rate 25 per cent under the present rate, this discount does not take the form of a dividend, but is taken off the existing rate immediately, regardless of what the loss ratio may be. Exhibitors, then, save 25 per cent on liability costs in advance.

While contracts have not been closed with individual theatres on this basis, and it will require at least 50 to make the reduction effective, approximately 100 theatres in Missouri and Kansas already have indicated an interest in the proposed plan, and at least 50 of these are expected to take the coverage. The rates are available now.

Further Reductions Possible

After one year's experience, if the loss ratio is not too high, this reduction of 25 per cent will be increased even further and will continue to be increased each year as long as the preceding year's loss ratio is not too high.

For each 25 additional theatres (over and above the original 50) participating in the plan, the rate will be further reduced.

The following concrete examples indicate the extent of saving which theatres may effect on liability insurance under the plan:

A theatre in Kansas, with a seating capacity of 360, under the old rate, which was charged on the seat basis, would have paid a premium of $43.20. On the new basis it is $37.50.

A theatre with a seating capacity of 500 paid the old rate of $60. The new rate is $50, and with the 25 per cent discount it will be $37.50.

A theatre in Kansas City with 1,297 seats: Old rate, $518.80; new rate, $312, and with the 25 per cent discount, $234.

These figures cover standard limits of $5,000/$10,000. Limits of $10,000/$20,000 would, of course, raise the premium.

One of the advantages of the plan is that individual theatre owners are not required to buy compensation, burglary, fire or other insurance protection in order to participate in these public liability rates.

However, savings on other lines are possible and will be worked out separately for each type of hazard later on.

DIOGENES MAY NOW BLOW OUT LANTERN

If Diogenes had lived in the present age instead of several thousand years ago, he undoubtedly would have concluded his search upon hearing of a woman patron of D. M. Robbin's Warner theatre in Youngstown, Ohio.

Last week Mr. Robbin received a letter from a woman patron explaining that she had purchased a ticket for the balcony, "but somehow found myself sitting in a lower floor seat." The letter contained 15 cents in stamps to cover the difference in admission prices.

The theatre owner who sets out to buy public liability in the ordinary way frequently finds it necessary to buy other coverage from a company before it will give him protection against public liability. It is true, also, that because of the potential hazard of theatre liability, a claim often results in cancellation.

"I am satisfied that with a little care on the part of theatre owners in watching their claims and keeping their houses in order, reductions ought to amount eventually to 50 per cent," Mr. Jones predicted.

Insurance companies have had unfavorable experiences with public liability claims in the Kansas City area, particularly in Greater Kansas City, because of the "fake claim" racket, according to Mr. Jones. This caused the companies to increase rates, about three years ago, from 12 cents per seat to 40 cents, a scale equal to that in effect in Chicago and New York, and only exceeded by Boston, where the rate reached, at one time, was 68 cents per seat.

This rate was changed from a per-seat to an attendance basis on June 30, this year. The present rate in all of Kansas, and all of Missouri, except Kansas City and St. Louis, is five cents per 100 of annual attendance. In those two cities it is 15 cents per 100.

"Even at these rates many compainies are not anxious for the business," Mr. Jones commented, "and in a great many cases a company compels the insured to give it allied lines, such as fire, theft, etc., to 'sweeten' the liability."

In some cases the exhibitor has been at fault because he has paid absolutely no attention to safety, and when he did have a claim, fraudulent or just, made little or no effort to take care of it. Consequently it frequently got into the hands of attorneys when, with a little attention, the exhibitor could have prevented the claim growing to unreasonable proportions.

The change in rate basis from seats to attendance is general and resulted partly from complaints by exhibitors that they were paying liability premiums on empty seats, that their business was seasonable.

The new basis is regarded as much more reasonable and equitable. Under it the exhibitor is paying for the risk as he runs it. When there are large crowds the hazard of accident is greater, and he pays a higher premium.

Before insurance companies went to 40 cents a seat, between 80 and 85 per cent of theatres in the Kansas City area were covered. Now, only about 40 per cent of Kansas and Missouri theatres carry liability protection, and in Greater Kansas City this drops to 20 per cent. This is due very largely to the prohibitive individual theatre rate; but, it is pointed out that also at the time the increase to 40 cents became effective, many theatres were changing projection equipment from silent to sound, were adding cooling and ventilating equipment, etc., and these extraordinary expenses caused exhibitors to forego the protection, when they might not have done so under ordinary circumstances even at the increased cost.

Small Theatres Were Handicapped

Another barrier to the general protection against public liability by theatres has been the $50 minimum premium effective in this territory. This has made it practically impossible for small theatres to buy the coverage. Under the present plan this has been reduced for participants to $37.50.

Some three years ago the ITO had to take up an aggressive fight in Kansas City against the "fake claim" practice. Theatres reported details of claims and claimants to a central file and then checked each new one against the information the file contained. In this way they were able largely to eliminate "repeaters," persons who made a practice of slitting a carpet and catching a heel, or falling on a stair, and then "settling" for $25, $50 or some other amount that was less than what it would have cost to fight the claim in court.

Insurance men and the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce last winter took up the matter and formed the Liability Protective Association, Inc., to fight fake and excessive damage claims by getting business men to pledge to serve on juries when called, by improving jury wheels, by spiking the tactics of "ambulance chasing" lawyers and their "testifying doctor" friends, by gathering evidence against "repeaters," by publicizing the "damage racket" in newspapers and public talks, etc.

Theatre Men Die in Fire

Jack Malone, owner of the Casino at Boonville, Mo., and E. V. Brooks, operator, were fatally burned when film ignited in the projection room. The two were working with a hot soldering iron when it dropped in a container of film. The men ran downstairs from the booth with their clothing afire. They were hurried to a hospital where they died late Sunday evening. Firemen successfully fought the flames in the theatre, which was vacant at the time.

Ohio Censor Cuts

The Ohio censor board at Columbus has reviewed a total of 244 reels during the recent two-weeks period and eliminations were made in but seven reels.

TWENTY YEARS, two dynamic decades, is half of the span of years since the beginnings of the motion picture and it is all of the period through which the modern screen drama and its theatre have evolved from the primitive nickelodeon.

These twenty years precisely coincide with the career of service to the evolving art and industry of Martin Quigley. He has years enough to have begun when the motion picture began its rise to dominance as a world amusement, and yet is to be counted young among the leaders of the screen world of today.

When Martin Quigley began, the screen was beginning to find itself. The great General Film Company was just starting over the downward curve of its toboggan to oblivion. Triangle was filling the air with bold publicity about prospects of a two dollar admission policy for the Knickerbocker. Paramount had just crystalized into a distribution machine for Adolph Zukor's Famous Players and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Lewis J. Selznick was telling the world that he was vice president and general manager of World Films. John R. Freuler of Mutual Film Corporation had just assigned the first outriders of his coming coup to capture Charles Chaplin at Essanay and shock the world with that amazing salary of $670,000 a year for a bamboo cane and a pair of pants. There was still eastern production then and Maurice Tourneur was making important pictures at Fort Lee, where Jules Brulatour was operating the famous Paragon laboratory. The other great laboratory concern was Ludwig Erb's Erbograph up in 145th street. Pearl White was making Pathe serials a-top the new plant in Jersey City and playing pool with the boys at Jack Krantzer's on the Patterson Plankroad. Richard Rowland's Metro was new born with Miss Shelby re-christened Mary Miles Minter to align with the M. Out in Chicago, George K. Spoor was making pictures up in Argyle Street and Colonel William N. Selig's plant in Irving Park Boulevard was busy. Way down under in Australia, J. D. Williams was the big motion picture name. Cecil Hepworth was a dominant producer in England, and over in France, Leon Gaumount was dividing the field with Charles Pathe. "The Birth of a Nation" was at the top of its run, and Commodore Blackton's "Battle Cry of Peace" and Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" were in the making. The Knickerbocker bar had just raised its price to fifteen cents straight for a Manhattan and the biggest selling cigarette was Fatima.

So this, the twentieth anniversary of Martin Quigley's advent in the land of the screen, is indeed a milestone in its history, a bench mark in time by which a world industry may measure its growth.

NOW IN Chicago in 1915—the year the Eastland sank, and the Germans were inching towards Paris—this Mr. Quigley, then in his middle twenties, a reporter on the polite Chicago Evening Post, with experience on the aggressive Chicago Tribune and the noisy Chicago Examiner behind him, looked upon motion picture journalism and saw opportunity.

It appeared to this vigorous, lithe young reporter with the penetrating blue eyes that a touch of good newspapering, sound journalism dealing with facts, presenting opinions honestly labelled, and all done with some respect to the canons of the art of printing, might well find its reward in service to the motion picture industry which needed so much. So it came that the first Quigley's publication, Exhibitor's Herald, was born, in Chicago. That slim leaflet, as tentative as the first spear of tender green pushed up from the acorn, held important destiny.

EXHIBITOR'S HERALD and Martin Quigley came into a motion picture world consisting exclusively and painfully of the present. He was among the few, the very few, who were anxious to believe that there was a tomorrow, and a greater tomorrow, that the sane and real values upon which all great industry was built were true and real values in the world of the fleeting shadowplay.

As motion picture enterprises of the day were measured, Exhibitor's Herald acquired momentum and pace slowly. It did not flame into success. Mr. Quigley and his Herald were then learning a young business that did not even know itself. Uniquely and strangely there was no other person in quite the position and attitude of this young man. He alone was concerned with the success of the whole of the motion picture industry, its continuing and growing success as an art and industry. His publishing contemporaries might have been, save for the fact that the origins of their enterprises in type were inevitably identified with special and particular interest. This was perhaps as much a result of their place in the embattled chronology of the industry as in their predilections. That is not important. The fact was that Martin Quigley was a certain sort of person making his entry at a very certain time and phase of the evolution of the industry.

NEVER touching a foot of film, an on-looker of the studio and screen, Mr. Quigley began a career which was to make him integrally a part of the industry and to carry him deeper into it in a very definite sense than any person whose interest was in one company, one group of interests or any single faction. His problem was not that of the producer, the distributor, the exhibitor—it was rather the problems of all them, inter-related, in a coordinated, balanced relation which should mean a service of the people, the masses, the market. It is not to be assumed that this was all from the beginning, consciously planned in any all-seeing manner. It was rather a trend and resultant of the impact of a sort of person, with certain traditions and nurture, upon a sort of industry in a nascent state. Events, the times and disposition ordained for this Mr. Quigley the position of being the industry's best friend—and sometimes its severest critic.

A REPORTORIAL approach, inquiring impersonally though friendlily early in his motion picture publishing career, won for this young man important confidences. It was inevitable that one who was grinding no axes for anyone, but who sought for all of the motion picture the success and status in the world of a superseding art, should become recognized as the motion picture's best friend. No argument of an immolating, sacrificing unselfishness need to be made about all this. Mr. Quigley's enterprise and his plans for its tomorrow were based most exactly on the continued and continuing success of the industry to which he had dedicated his working life. His job, his success, his happiness depended upon the motion picture getting along well.

THIS JOB specifically required that his journal, the Herald, should so serve the exhibitor, the motion picture theatre, the customer, that its circulation and its acceptance should make its advertising space profitably attractive to the makers and purveyors of pictures. As the perspective broadened it became clear too that it was to be the function of the Herald to serve also the makers and purveyors of pictures in a sense of putting before them and their own increasingly extended and complex organizations a deal of news, facts and material which no single enterprise or its house organ might gather and present. Important among the functions of publication was to maintain and hold open a forum of frank expression, open to all but more especially important in behalf of the exhibitor who controlled no paid space and employed no spokesmen. It has ever been the Herald's great function to see that he who has had something to say had a place in which to say it.

ENTERPRISES grow as men grow. With the progress of the years, Martin Quigley saw in widening perspective that the motion picture was not really only the business of the producer-distributor and the exhibitor, but that it was also very much the business of the consumer—the public. The industry, wrapped deeply in its internal affairs, was in great but unconscious need of an interpreter of a none too articulate but profoundly important demand from the public.

Out of this the Production Code was born, in the Autumn of 1929, conceived by and directed by Martin Quigley, as a contribution to the well-being of the motion picture to which he had given of his interest, energy and years—another instance of a labour for the whole of the industry which could be performed with success by no single component. That the Production Code remained for some years encased in the glass of a certain conservatism of expression with the industry, today, perhaps, makes more conspicuous its real significance. When at last the storm of public criticism broke, it was this long latent Production Code which, released and adequately empowered at last, brought to the motion picture of 1935, a rebirth in public and box office esteem. The motion picture's best friend, who began so impartially in 1915, brought to floration in this, his twentieth year, that service which is epitomized in the proverb: A friend in need is a friend indeed.

MARTIN QUIGLEY and his works in print have succeeded as the motion picture has succeeded. So it has come that such estimable enterprises, so great in their day, as the venerable Motion Picture World, born as organ of the Patents Company, Motion Picture News, first organ of the "independents", Motography, first Chicago picture journal, and sundry other publications have been absorbed, merged and melded, into what is today Motion Picture Herald and Motion Picture Daily. Confusion of interests has been simplified, unified, and a multiplicity of divided services have been stranded together into two voices and institutions of service to the whole of the industry.

The motion picture's best friend is this year of 1935 celebrating the anniversary of the inception of a project and a job well enough done to be dominant in its field—this is Martin Quigley's twentieth anniversary.

FORTY PRODUCERS BUY 679 STORIES FOR $3,395,000

50 Per Cent of All Purchases for Year Ended Sept. 1 Were Originals, 37 Per Cent Were Books, Only 13 Per Cent Plays

(Stories purchased for motion picture production during the year ended September 1, 1935, are listed alphabetically, starting on page 283

Forty producing companies purchased 679 stories for feature production during the year ended September 1, 1935, investing an estimated $3,395,000, based on the generally accepted average expenditure of $5,000 each. Costs, however, ran as high as $100,000 and $125,000 for hit plays.

Original stories continued throughout the year to be the principal source of material, those purchases amounting to 50 per cent of the total made, there having been 337 acquired, as aganst 254 published books, representing 37 per cent of the total, and only 88 plays, equaling 13 per cent.

The bulk of the purchases were made for immediate production, for last season's release schedules—1934-35, and for the present 1935-36 period. However, several dozen properties were placed "on the shelf" for future use, adding to the millions of dollars' worth of material on hand in the vaults of producers.

Paramount's story vaults were evidently empty, undoubtedly as a result of the liquidating process effected during the reorganization of the bankrupt, for the company made 128 purchases in the 12 months, or about double the number required to meet its usual 60-picture seasonal commitment. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, probably the most consistent story buyer in the business, concentrating for the most part on published books and novels, rated second place with a 12-month buy of 111.

RKO Buys 69—Warners, 62

There was a sharp numerical drop from the 128 and 111 purchases made by Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, respectively, to the 69 acquired by RKO, and Warners' 62 acquisitions. Universal rated fifth place from the standpoint of the number bought, taking 55, as against Fox's 45 and Columbia's 41. Company purchases are compiled in an adjoining column.

There was much spirited bidding during the year among the principal producers for the best books and outstanding plays.

Too, their ambitions to continue under the new order to raise the standard of production were noticeably reflected in the high quality of many dozens of the properties purchased. There was hardly a book or play of any merit that lent itself to filming that was not taken by Hollywood for conversion into motion pictures.

Sources of Story Material For New Feature Production

Following is an analysis by companies of the story purchases, totaling 679, made by 40 motion picture producers during the year ended September 1, 1935, when 337 originals, 254 published books, and 88 plays were acquired:

U. S. DEMANDS $3,566,583 FROM WM. FOX FOR ALLEGED TAX EVASION

Federal Government Adds a 50 Per Cent Fraud Penalty in an Amended Petition to U. S. Board of Tax Appeals

William Fox, instigator of court suits aplenty, has himself become the target of a claim for $3,566,583 demanded by the United States Government for alleged fraud and wilful attempt to evade payment of federal income taxes.

Seeking the application of fraud penalties totaling $940,071, and the affirmation of deficiencies of $1,880,142, plus interest of $746,370, making a total of $3,566,583, Robert H. Jackson, assistant general counsel of the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue, filed with the United States Board of Tax Appeal at Washington an amended answer to the petition of William Fox for review of his income returns for 1929 and 1930.

The matter has been pending before the Internal Revenue Bureau and the Appeals Board for some three years, and the transactions involved were gone into in detail during the motion-picture phase of the Congressional inquiry into Wall Street activities in 1933, in which Mr. Fox figured prominently as a witness.

The case before the Appeals Board centers primarily around Mr. Fox's return for 1930. The Revenue Bureau seeks confirmation of a deficiency assessment of $28,498 on his 1929 return, plus an evasion penalty of $14,249, and interest, now amounting to $13,680, a total of only $56,427, but the 1930 return involves a total of $3,510,156, of which $1,601,644 represents the original deficiency, $250,000, an additional deficiency which the commissioner has found, $928,822 evasion penalty and $732,690 interest.

The subjects of controversy are Mr. Fox's transactions in stocks, both in Fox Theatres Corporation and Fox Films Corporation and in other stocks in which he dealt, the latter involving the activities of his All-Continent Corporation.

Also involved, however, are amounts paid by him as salaries to Lee DeForest, Courtland Smith and A. S. Kempner, for which he had been reimbursed and, having been permitted to deduct those payments when made, the government claims the amounts repaid to him constitute income.

Counsel for the Revenue Bureau explained at Washington that the subjects of the deficiency assessments were not new, but that the request for imposition of the 50 per cent evasion penalty was a recent step based on Mr. Fox's alleged attempts to "defeat and evade" his tax responsibilities by "false and fraudulent means."

Two items in the 1929 return are made the subject of demand for imposition of the evasion penalty, one being a claim for deductions amounting to $4,749,850, as representing losses from 1929 sales of stock of various corporations in connection with which the government claims the loss was but $3,265,492, resulting in an overstatement of deductions of $1,484,358.

The other claim is based on the allegation that Mr. Fox "knowingly and wilfully failed to report in his federal income tax return in 1929 the net profits derived by the petitioner of $2,369,125 or any amount, resulting from the transaction between the petitioner and one Harley L. Clarke, whereby the petitioner exchanged certain properties, which had a cost basis to petitioner of $480,874 and certain promises of petitioner which had no cost basis to the petitioner, for $2,000,000 in cash and 25,000 shares of capital stock of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., having had on date of receipt by petitioner in 1929 a fair market value of $850,000. There was not reported in petitioner's federal income tax return for 1929 any income as having been derived from the transaction, referred to hereinabove, nor was there disclosed in his return any information with respect thereto. The petitioner in 1929 paid in cash $2,000,000 to Grandeur, Inc., for 50 per cent of its capital stock, the other 50 per cent of the capital stock of Grandeur, Inc., having been issued in 1929 for $2,000,000 in cash. The said 50 per cent of the capital stock of Grandeur, Inc., acquired by petitioner, had a fair market value at date of acquisition by petitioner of $2,000,000."

Examination of the 1930 return, the government's brief disclosed, led to the development of a number of items on which the government should impose the evasion penalty, many of them being based on Fox's stock transactions and the operations of the All Continent Corporation, according to the Revenue Bureau.

"The petitioner in his federal income tax return for 1930, which was filed on his behalf for 1930 with his knowledge and consent," the government alleges, "knowingly and wilfully made claim for deductions amounting to $8,047,853 for losses resulting from transactions claimed to be sales in 1930 of shares of capital stock of various corporations for cash, whereas in fact and in law the petitioner exchanged the said shares of capital stock of various corporations with the All-Continent Corporation, a corporation organized in 1930, the stock of which being at all times in 1930 owned by the petitioner, for capital stock of All-Continent Corporation, the transactions being such that for tax purposes neither loss nor gain could result."

It was set forth that while he owned all the stock, Mr. Fox's name did not appear in the records of the corporation as an officer, director or incorporator, but that he was appointed attorney-in-fact to act on behalf of the corporation and as such had authority to deal with several brokerage firms.

Federal Case Centers Chiefly Around the Tax Return for 1930; Transactions Aired in the 1933 Wall Street Inquiry

The transactions with these brokers ran into millions of dollars, Mr. Fox claiming a total loss of more than $8,000,000 in his 1930 return, and the relationship between the film magnate and All-Continent Corporation, the government's brief disclosed, was discovered by a United States revenue agent in checking Mr. Fox's account with Loeb-Alsberg and Company, who noted that no commission was charged by the broker on the transactions.

"A deliberate attempt," the government charges, "was made by William Fox, who signed certain letters written to Loeb-Alsberg and Company, referred to hereinabove, and took an active part in the transactions hereinabove set forth, and by Herbert Leitstein, who signed each of the letters written for the All-Continent Corporation to the Commercial National Bank and Trust Company, and took an active part in the transactions hereinabove set forth, and who is also the same person who signed and filed the federal income tax return of William Fox for all years from 1924 to 1931, inclusive, to handle the said transactions between William Fox and the All-Continent Corporation in a way that the true facts would not be discovered for the purpose and with the fraudulent intent of William Fox evading the payment of federal tax due of William Fox on his income for the year 1930 by making claim of deductions for losses as resulting from the sale of stocks purporting to have been for cash, whereas the transactions were in fact and in law exchanges of stocks for capital stock of All-Continent Corporation, William Fox at all times in 1930 owning all the capital stock of All-Continent Corporation.

"William Fox and Herbert Leitstein wilfully and with the fraudulent intent to evade tax due of William Fox on his income for 1930 made claim of a deduction in the income tax return filed by Herbert Leitstein for William Fox for the year 1930 of $8,047,853 as representing losses from the sale of stocks, whereas the transactions reported in the tax return as sales were in fact and in law exchanges of stock for stock of the All-Continent Corporation in which William Fox owned at all times during 1930 all of the capital stock of said corporation," the brief continued.

Large sums, which the government charges were grossly overstated, were involved in Mr. Fox's transactions in the Class "B" common stock of Fox Film Corporation and Fox Theatres in 1930.

In his return, it is alleged, Mr. Fox made a claim of $5,010,100 as a basis for determining taxable gain from the sale of 50,101 shares of Fox Film stock, whereas, as computed by Revenue Bureau agents and, it is charged, in the petitioner's knowledge, the actual basis was "substantially less" than $501,010 and "an excessive claim was knowingly and wilfully made with the intent to evade tax due of William Fox of at least $4,509,090."

BLUE LAW REPEALS AID 1,885 HOUSES; KANSAS PLAN WINS COMMUNITY

Liberalization of Laws in Many States Opens New Business for Theatres; Broadway Sees First Sunday Stage Show in Years

Liberalization of laws and public sentiment in several states and numerous communities with respect to Sunday shows is making it possible for an estimated 1,885 theatres this fall for the first time to reap the advantages of operation on the Sabbath, which is usually the most profitable day of the seven for box office receipts.

The tendency to abandon the Puritanical Sabbath and allow public amusements was noted in several state legislatures this year, notably in Pennsylvania (1,208 theatres), Maryland (211), Alabama (233) and Tennessee (233), while in New York the assembly let down the bars to stage performances on a day that has been traditionally closed to this type of entertainment.

New York Sees Sunday Stage Show

New York City, by conforming its local ordinances to the state laws, was added to the list of cities where seventh-day dramatic and musical stage performances are now legal, and an experiment conducted at the Golden theatre last Sunday night in the nature of the city's first Sabbath opening of a play in years proved successful from an attendance standpoint.

Broadway film theatres, however, need have no cause to worry about competition from this source, because the rulings of Actors Equity Association and the union crafts regarding double pay for Sunday performances make their cost prohibitive, and it is doubtful whether Sabbath showings in legitimate houses will be frequent.

The novelty of a Sunday night performance drew a standout crowd to the Golden, off Broadway, for the premiere of "A Touch of Brimstone," with Roland Young. Under the Equity ruling, as well as the state law, one day off must be given the actors and employees, and on Monday night the theatre was dark to compensate for the Sunday performance.

While about $2,100 was taken in as a result of paid admissions on the opening Sunday night, the Golden management said there was no definite way of checking the commercial value of the Sunday night playing from the initial experiment. A canvass of other managers indicated that none is planning Sunday night performances at this time, for the reason that the double pay for actors, stagehands and electricians would increase the cost of production a week by about 30 per cent. And considering that only six days of playing is permitted, the managers can see no commercial advantage in inaugurating Sunday shows at the increased expense.

Sunday Shows Circumvent Laws

Several managers gave Sunday night performances of plays a few years ago to develop a test case of the question. In those instances a large percentage of the receipts were turned over to charity to avoid conflict with the existing law.

Sunday shows ostensibly for charity have been resorted to by film theatres to circumvent prohibitary laws in a number of states. The tieups frequently are with the American Legion or local welfare or relief organizations, and in these instances the admission is slightly increased—such as a 25-cent price raised to 35 cents—the excess over the normal tariff going to the charitable cause.

The largest straw for years in the liberal wind was the decision of the Pennsylvania legislature to permit local referenda in the November elections on the open Sundays question, and exhibitors are stirring up Sunday show sentiment in advance of the election. While church elements are conducting a counter-campaign, theatre men in the larger centers, at least, are confident of a victory. Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, Chester, York and other cities will vote on the proposal November 5th, while others will determine the issue on subsequent dates in November.

A stipulation in the Pennsylvania statute provides, however, that no vaudeville will be permitted on the same bill with Sunday films, and, according to the legislative reference bureau, exhibitors will be subject to prosecution and liable to a fine if they present vaudeville either alone or in conjunction with motion pictures.

Alabama, which formerly had stringent closing laws, liberalized the Sunday status at the last session of the legislature, and Sabbath films are now legal in Alabama towns falling in the classification of from 15,000 to 40,000 population, under a bill signed by Governor Bibb Graves. The repeal makes Sunday shows possible in Anniston, Dothan, Gadsden, Tuscaloosa, Bessemer and Huntsville.

Three States Refused to Act

Tennessee passed a bill permitting Sunday shows by local option, and while the Blue Laws are still effective in Texas, the Sunday situation there is also governed now by local option in the various towns.

Other legislatures, however, refused to act on open Sunday measures or turned them down, as was the case in Delaware, Massachusetts and Kansas. Strict Sabbath closing laws in the Bay State are rigidly enforced. Churches in the state have been permitted to stage exhibition dances on Sundays, but theatrical acts have always been banned except in a few instances where they can be interpreted as an acrobatic performance.

While the bill in the Kansas senate was introduced at the request of an exhibitor, theatre men in the state were diffident about supporting it because they deemed it advisable not to disturb the status quo under which Sunday film shows are permitted by local authorities where public sentiment seems favorable. The issue in Kansas has been raging for many years, and when state and county officials took the matter to the courts, a ruling was given that Sabbath performances could not be stopped by injunction, but that the offending theatre managers should be prosecuted on charges of violating the state six-day labor law and tried before a jury. Since no jury could be found in the larger centers that would convict an exhibitor on this offense, the officials abandoned their campaign altogether and acquiesced to a policy of local tolerance.

Since then Fox Midwest and other theatres and circuits have operated on Sundays in a number of communities, the latest to start Sab-

Anti-Sabbath Show Proponents in Kansas Won Over to Open-Sunday Cause by Owners Who Vest in Them Right to Pick Films

A workable method of assuring community support in the operation of Sunday shows is in effect in Manhattan, Kan., a college town where the issue had been bitterly contested for years, in a state in which Sabbath amusements have never legally been permitted.

Although the citizens of the town, which has a population of 10,000, approved Sunday films by a majority of 900 out of a total of 5,500 votes cast in an election last November, there remained an aftermath of ill feeling in the wake of the referendum, and to appease the hostile elements and to enlist their support, the local theatre managers gave the assurance that the Sunday performances would be of a type not to offend, and, furthermore, that the community would be given a voice in the selection of films.

"Advisory" Committee the Solution

This was accomplished by setting up an advisory committee representative of the church and college elements, which had led the opposition to Sabbath shows, this group to serve as a quasi-official censoring board. For the last several months, the committee has been selecting the films for Sundays and has been advising the managers on bookings generally, with an eye single to the moral welfare of the community, chiefly the college students, with respect to what is exhibited on the screen.

The chief results, say the managers, are that opposition to Sunday films has disappeared and attacks on pictures which were frequent before have abated materially. Weekend patronage has not been affected.

The members of the advisory committee are: Monsignor A. J. Luckey, pastor of the Catholic church; C. M. Correll, assistant dean of the Kansas State Agricultural College, and the Rev. David J. Arnold, who is chairman. Mr. Arnold is also a member of the city welfare board, which had opposed Sunday shows vigorously and which has the power, under the Kansas welfare law, to regulate all amusements and to close them arbitrarily if it so sees fit.

The advisory committee meets once a month with the managers to inspect the bookings, approve or reject, recommend changes or suggest specific films with a view to obtaining the most wholesome entertainment available for the weekend, when juvenile attendance is heavy. Thus, while the managers have familiarized themselves with the views of the committee members and frequently of their own accord date pictures in midweek that normally would play over the weekend, the responsibility has been shifted to the board.

For this service the members receive $10 each per month, which is paid by the theatre operators, Sam L. Sosna of the Varsity theatre and Glen W. Dickinson of the Dickinson and Wareham theatres.

It is perhaps significant that since this system was inaugurated, the board has banned outright only two films. "The Affairs of Cellini" (20th Century-United Artists), and "The Devil Is a Woman" (Paramount), according to Mr. Dickinson.

bath films being the Fox Eldorado and the Harris in Eldorado, Kan. At the same time, church elements continue highly antagonistic.

In several states retaining closing laws, the officials take cognizance of local sentiment and wink at violations. Such is the case in Florida and Arkansas, where the Blue Law is enforced in only a few small towns, and in Georgia where the supreme court decided two years ago that theatres may operate on the Sabbath provided the proceeds go to charity after deduction of expenses.

No Sunday restrictions of any kind exist in the states of California, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, Rhode Island, Utah, Wisconsin and Washington.

The argument made by exhibitors in closed Sunday towns bordering on open states is that they, as well as local merchants, lose considerable revenue by the exodus of amusement seekers on Sunday, as instanced with respect to Philadelphia and Camden, N. J., and Kansas in relation to Missouri, where a Blue Law is on the statute books, but seldom if ever enforced.

Recently, the American theatre in Roanoke, Va., succeeded in forcing an open Sunday for all houses in the city following a test case under Roanoke ordinances in which a jury determined that the theatre was within its rights in operating on the Sabbath. It was brought out that the theatre had agreed to turn over 10 per cent of its receipts to a local charity as a means of getting around a Virginia law which prohibits Sunday labor "except in household or other work of necessity or charity."

Exhibitors would seem to have a basis for urging that Sunday films are a "necessity," it is pointed out, by virtue of the fact the nation's leaders established this definition with respect to motion picture shows during the war, from the standpoint of maintaining the public's spirit and national morale.

"The changing Sunday" recently was a subject of a treatise in the New York Times Magazine, which found that "Sunday has somehow ceased, fairly suddenly, to be the day it used to be."

"One of the oldest of human institutions and one of the slowest to yield to change, Sunday has edged astonishingly to the left in a single generation, as if making up for lost time," said the article. "No supreme court speaks out to correct its drift. No amount of veneration for the ideas of the founding fathers is able to preserve the old-style American Sunday intact in most parts of the United States and Canada.

"Strangely, the 'Continental Sunday' now invading the country is slowest in arriving, legally, in the eastern states, notwithstanding their large foreign-born populations. It finds hard going also in the middle west, where the early influence transplanted from New England is still felt. But not even in those strongholds of traditional ways of life is Sunday the staid and conservative day it once was."

"The 'New York Sunday,' though never so repressive, thanks to the convivial Dutch influence, as the New England Sunday, clung long to the appearance of decorum," continues the writer, and "a generation ago, most indoor public entertainment had to describe itself as either 'sacred' or 'educational' to escape the police. Sacred concerts flourished at Koster and Bial's, the Metropolitan and elsewhere, and John L. Sullivan sometimes exhibited his muscular perfection between 'sacred' musical numbers. Sousa's Band and Theodore Thomas's orchestra could be heard, and the 'Panorama of the Battle of Gettysburg' seen. To those in quest of a rollicking time, the Eden Musee offered its 'American and foreign topics in wax, also views of the whole world,' and there were, besides, the Hungarian band and Ajeeb, the chess automaton, who was then 'a mystery yet.'

"'Grand musical and dramatic testimonial' performances were frequently used by the theatre as a means of getting around the Fourth Commandment lawfully; but their dramatics were done in proper Sunday evening garb, never 'in costume.' Bowling contests and strictly amateur boxing bouts were permitted in the sporting clubs. That new marvel, the phonograph, was allowed to give Sunday auditions, and lantern-slide lectures got by safely. Sunday vaudeville remained unseen in our midst until 1914, and then at first was carefully denatured, nothing resembling circus stunts being tolerated. The Sunday motion picture made its bow to us only in 1919.

Bicycle, Automobile Blamed

"The bicycle of the nineties is accused of starting the change in Sunday that we note today, and the automobile comes in for still more reprehension, though they have merely been instruments in the hands of human nature. For good or ill, the multitude has called for the change, and the multitude, as usual, has its way. The Lord's Day Alliance thinks the multitude has been deluded by amusement enterprises hungry for profits and by lawmakers seeking revenue for the state through taxes on permitted pleasures. The Alliance would 'rescue Sunday from commercialism and restore it to God,' but the swing away from the old-time observance of the day goes on.

"Twelve states and many cities in the present decade have seen fit to revise or repeal their Sunday laws to comport with a tendency that appears to be irresistible. They have made Sunday theatres, picture shows and baseball respectable. One state, Missouri, has even legalized Sunday hunting. A New Jersey grand jury has declared: 'Non-observance of Sunday law is a sign not of any desire to break the law, but of a change in conditions and customs, making the law obsolete.' A playground survey of 80 cities finds the executives of 58 in favor of Sunday opening.

More Stores Open

"More and more stores of various sorts that used to lock up on Sunday now run seven days a week. A few department stores still lower the curtains of their show windows on Sunday, on the principle that 'Sunday is a day for things unseen'; but they are almost unique. Most communities still insist that Sunday morning shall be inviolate; there is that much concession to Sabbatarian opinion. After church time, however, the tale is otherwise.

"It was stated in the hearings at Albany last spring that, in cities allowing the legitimate theatre to present Sunday plays, Sunday is second only to Saturday in theatre attendance. Governor Lehman was only citing a known fact when he said, in approving the Sunday theatre bills: 'Nowadays the New Yorker can find as much to do for recreation on a Sunday as on a weekday—with a great deal more time to do it in.'

"Thus has Sunday changed within the memory of most of us and become a day of legitimate play."

Another "Better Pictures" Group

Prominent figures in Manhattan's social, music and literary life have formed a committee to urge the public to support artistic motion picture productions. The new group, called the Committee for the Advancement of the Screen, has its headquarters in New York and is headed by Deems Taylor, Mme. Lucrezia Bori, Giovanni Martinelli, Mrs. James Leeds Laidlaw, Mme. Lottie Lehman and Richard Watts, Jr. The personnel of the committee also includes Mr. George Washington Cavanaugh, Mme. Elizabeth Rethberg, Charles Hanson Towne, Lauritz Melchior, Mme. Alma Clayburn, Ezio Pinza and others.

The committee has announced that "with the assistance of Will H. Hays and his office it will aim to preview those films of special distinction announced for the coming season, and to excite the public about them, as we have done in the case of 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' our first selection."

Admission Taxes Rise Half Million

Reflecting a sharp improvement in theatre business are the latest admission tax figures that have been divulged by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in Washington which reported revenue from this source, principally from motion picture theatres, for July and August, first two months of the fiscal year, ran to $2,590,466. This is an increase of $550,587 over the $2,039,879 reported for the corresponding period in 1934.

Receipts for August showed an increase of nearly 50 per cent over the same period of last year, collections for the 1935 month being $1,313,552 as against $993,717 for the same month a year ago.

August receipts also showed an increase of nearly $37,000 over the July collections of $1,276,914 which, in turn, were some $65,000 ahead of June.

Court Fines Dickinson For Placing Posters

Carleton Dickinson, son of Glenn W. Dickinson, has been found guilty at Lawrence, Kan., by Police Judge Oscar Learnard of placing theatre posters and advertising on poles and property belonging to others without their consent. The judge assessed a fine of $25 and costs, but Mr. Dickinson's attorney announced he would appeal.

Donald Hults, attorney for the defendant, contended that friction between the police and the Dickinsons was responsible for the charges, while the city attorney claimed the trial was the result of a violation of a city ordinance.

200,000 ETHIOPIANS SHOT!

10,000 SQUARE MILES TAKEN!

Cameramen Beat Mussolini to the Punch; Invade Unknown Sections of Ethiopia; Get the Inside Dope

Flying across the northern mountain defenses of Haile Selassie's kingdom, cameramen have invaded the very heart of Ethiopia to collect the most complete picture of the African powder-box ever taken.

The result for exhibitors, of course, is a feature picture whose box-office appeal at the present time is absolutely incalculable. In fact, it is safe to say that this picture will rank as the most important real-life picture from a box-office standpoint to be released this year.

The entire country is crying for information about this little nation in the mountain fastnesses of Northern Africa which may very well become the Belgium of another world holocaust. The potential appeal of the first inside picture on Ethiopia is obvious to the entire industry.

The simplest shot of a native maiden required bribes of beads and trinkets. And only the most careful work on the part of an interpreter succeeded in winning sufficient confidence to get desired pictures of native life.

Haile Selassie Tells His Story

The royal family at Addis Ababa, however, were more than willing to allow the expedition to take real candid camera shots of life at the ancient court of the King of Kings. Invading the royal gardens, the expedition collected intimate pictures of Selassie's family. And to top it all, Selassie himself consented to make a personal appearance and speech, excellently recorded in the picture.

Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia

Army Stages War Games

While guests of Selassie the expedition had the good fortune to catch pictures of a review of Selassie's army. But the most informative pictures for those interested in just how modernized the Lion of Judah's army really is are the ones taken in the very center of an actual sham battle where thousands of the Emperor's men engaged in open field maneuvres as well as anti-aircraft warfare.

Ethiopian Soldiers at Target Practice

Not a News Reel

The feature is in no sense just another news reel. It is a thrilling, dramatic, full length picture that will give the spectator a complete and well rounded knowledge of this little country which is making world history. Through a special tie-up with the Ethiopian Government, and through a hard-won acquaintance with the savage inland chieftains, the expedition was able to get MORE THAN A NEWS STORY. It assembled a really graphic and startling picture of Ethiopian life, from Selassie's ancient court to the wild hill tribes.

By Plane, Motor, and Camel!

To take such a picture required months of dangerous, laborious work. The hill country of Ethiopia is absolutely impassable even to the most rugged motor car. The cameramen had to fly wide stretches of mountain terrain to get pictures of the country across which an invading army must march. To reach into the mountains themselves for intimate pictures of the savage Ethiopian warrior tribes, it was necessary to hire camel caravans and to advance at the risk of life itself where few foreigners had ever trod. (See next page)

LION OF JUDAH CAPTURED!

Paramount's New Picture Gives All The Facts of Haile Selassie's Empire!

Theatre managers all over the country have been begging for a real first-hand complete account of Ethiopian life and customs to show to their patrons. Paramount has beaten the industry to the gun with exactly the kind of picture they've been shouting for. In it Paramount has the first complete and authentic picture of Ethiopia and its people, from the ancient and exciting capital of Addis Ababa to the savage hills where primitive tribes still carry on their aboriginal customs.

Native Musicians and Dancers

Strange Religious Rites

Most people believe that Ethiopia is a Christian country. This picture shows the Christians in the high court circles and reveals their unusual and ancient ceremonies. But it further shows that the mass of Ethiopians are of Mohammedan and other faiths and discloses the weird practices of the native cults. An actual wedding in the wild hill country is photographed in one of the most fantastic episodes ever screened.

Detachment of Ethiopian Troops on March

Ethiopian Manpower

One of the questions asked by Americans is: What kind of soldiers are these Ethiopians? This picture shows not only the picked bodyguard of the king but a tremendous cross-section of the Ethiopian army as well as the savage hill tribes who will defend their barren heights by guerilla warfare against the invader.

Market Place at Addis Ababa

Britain on Guard

To show clearly the military problem to the north, the expedition flew over the Soudan collecting an amazing air view of the huge English camel corps which guard the waters of the Blue Nile, one of the factors in the present scrap. Thousands and thousands of camels and their soldier riders are shown on guard.

Ethiopian Industry

Native Ethiopian industries are revealed in intimate shots of the market places of Addis Ababa, in close-ups of the natives at work in the field, and in the hills. This is, of course, the first comprehensive picture of the economic side of Ethiopian life . . . an ancient economy which dates from Bible days.

Warrior Chief of Hill Tribe

The Primitive Touch

Few people in thinking of Ethiopia remember the simple fact that this country is in Africa and has all the tomtom pounding primitive life of a country close to the jungle. This picture shows the actual tribal dances, the primitive ceremonies of the savages of the hinterlands.

Twenty Years A-Going

by TERRY RAMSAYE

THE first frost of the autumn of '35 is upon the meadows of the Silvermine Valley of Connecticut. There is the glow of seasoned chestnut in the fireplace and before it, damn his complacent assurance and Scottish imperturbability, a terrier, far behind his woodchuck quota for the season, nods, eyeing now and then with disapproval this chattering typewriter which wins him victuals that conscience says should feed some human probably not so worthy.

It is a time for looking into the fire, for considering the decanter, for thoughtful packing of the pipe, for turning old papers, for remembering—with a smile.

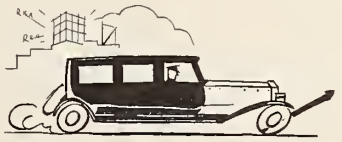
By now, it seems, our art and industry of the motion picture have come somewhere, almost from nowhere, and we have seen it happen. "Happen" seems to be the all too accurate word. In truth, two decades of observation make one know that no man has seen beyond the end of his nose, and often not so far. And yet we seem to be getting somewhere. That somewhere is today the complete dominance of the amusement world—which, when we consider that it is the world of heart's desire for all the multitude of those who must buy their dreams readymade, is perchance the biggest world there is.

The grace of good fortune is upon all of us who have the luck to live by this industry of the making and purveying of dreams.

There is an inevitability about this dream industry, a certainty and a substance that does not pertain to grosser, more material merchandise. Coal and iron and wheat, for instance, are realities of ponderable value, but dreams and shadows, emotions, are worth more—and are more enduring. Because they are filmy, imponderable they are indestructible. We of the motion picture are rich in the nothingness of our wares.

It has been said somewhere and quoted by Shakespeare that love laughs at locksmiths. But it would not be permissible to say what movieland says about bookkeepers.

WHEN the sun came up on our era there was a hell of a noise of hammers at 42nd street and Seventh avenue. The Rialto was coming into being, with contractors, as usual, racing against the date of a belated opening. Some of the hammer noises pertained to building, and some were the attacks of skeptics who thought the movies were rather fresh and presumptous with their invasion of Broadway, which had begun only the year before with the opening of Mitchell Mark's Strand and the Vitagraph theatre.



Just to be sure we are remembering the period, may it be mentioned that Diamond Jim Brady was to be seen in all his effulgence nightly at Castle Cave, Bustanoby's, Rector's, Churchill's. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton appeared resplendent in emeralds from cuff links to scarf pin. Arthur James, of Metro, was driving a Locomobile and Harry Reichenbach was distributing mimeograph copies of his employment contract with World Film Corporation so the world could be informed that he was drawing $200 a week. Paul Gulick was already a veteran of some two or three years at Universal, and P. A. Parsons and Randolph Lewis were spokesmen for Pathe Freres, while Ben Schulberg was just crossing the line from publicity responsibilities into general executive functions at Famous Players, with John Flinn rising in the publicity picture there.

Terry Ramsaye had just come on from his motion picture activities and melange of editorial and circulation affairs with the flamboyant Tribune in Chicago, to serve the new John R. Freuler-Kuhn, Loeb administration in the Mutual Film Corporation's publicity matters. His predilection for rolling Bull Durham in brown papers had drawn a gallery in the lounge at the Astor and there were whisperings that this brash lad from the untamed Middle West would never "get away with it" in a field ruled by "the metropolitan manner."

Edwin S. Porter, producer of the not-yet-classic "The Great Train Robbery," first story picture, had cashed in his interest in Famous Players and signalized his success with a Rolls Royce. In another new Rolls, Harry E. Aitken was seen a deal on the Avenue. He had guessed right on that mad project of David Wark Griffith and held a handsome share in "The Birth of a Nation," which the board of directors of Mutual had tossed out and back on Mr. Aitken's personal responsibility as a desperate speculation.

"A Million Dollar Mystery," the great serial success that followed upon the pioneering of "The Adventures of Kathleen," was just winding up its playdates and nearing the closing of a set of books which were to show no less than 700 percent profit for the Syndicate Film Corporation, enriching thereby many investors, including John Cuneo and Robert Eastman, of Chicago, W. E. Wilbert Shallenberger, and an array of the personages about and pertaining to the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, where the serial was made.

Through investors' enthusiasms, and many of these investors were persons who had never previously been admitted to the placer mining profits of the young movie business, Wall Street was beginning to hear that here was a business, maybe.

Mr. Aitken's new project, Triangle, which had snatched up Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett to be its master producers, was loudly heard from in the press.

Meanwhile at Mutual there was a representative of Wall Street on the board and listening to the exciting promise, projects and problems of the period—that painful period in which the industry and the art both had so swiftly to reorganize for the new feature picture policy that Mr. Zukor had thrust upon it as a consequence of his having to look about for something to do when he had left the Marcus Loew theatre organization, only three years before.

That observer at Mutual, the first "downtown" financier to look into movieland since J. J. Kennedy had come up to Fourteenth street, in 1907, to rescue Biograph, was Felix Kahn, brother of the late Otto Kahn, of Kuhn Loeb. The tall and solemn Felix carried his tobacco in a golden snuff box and rolled his own at Mutual meetings while movie men held the floor.

Uptown, in the Mecca Building, Universal was consolidating into an all-Laemmle concern by hectic and exciting stages of internal conflict, prospering the while, during altercations, with a production policy addressed in two opposite directions, program and feature. R. H. Cochrane had come to town and had begun the production of that line of copy that has characterized Universal expression in advertising ever since.

Carl Laemmle was talking "straight from the shoulder" and pleading in pages in the trade press to exhibitors, and everyone else, "to use the brains God gave you."

This inspired Lewis J. Selznick, of World Film Corporation, to announce: "This business takes less brains than any other I have ever seen."

There was a great deal in the circumambient atmosphere of the industry to give great warrant to the expressions of both of these volatile gentlemen.

Mr. Zukor's Famous Players was not so vastly conspicuous then, but already the notion had percolated into financial quarters that he was pioneering a project of great promise. While the Triangle pot was brewing, with internal difficulties that began almost as the corporation began, an offer, with a view to consolidations, was made to Mr. Zukor, one million, cash, for his stock in Famous Players.

When he had problems in those days Mr. Zukor worked them out walking, walking hour upon hour, alone. He took some very long walks, and refused to sell.

"A million," he remarked many a year later, "was a lot more than I had expected to ever have. It was all that I needed for myself and my family—but, if I sold out, what would I do next? It wasn't going to appeal to me to quit the pictures and start a shoe store or something like that. There I was, with a million in the game, all on one ace."

The ace he had in mind was Miss Mary Pickford.

There were already schemes afloat aimed at trumping Mr. Zukor's ace.

The motion picture scene got extremely lively, not to say vociferous. The advertising media of the day were many, varying in their tempo from self-assurance to voracity. The list of papers which the motion picture industry took, often all too seriously, included: Star, Clipper, Billboard, Variety, Dramatic Mirror, New York Review, Moving Picture World, the haughty old dreadnaught, Motion Picture News, Motography, out in Chicago, and, rising just over the horizon, Exhibitors' Herald. New York's Morning Telegraph, a somewhat different paper in those days of William E. Lewis, presented the writings of that peerless two-gun stylist Mr. Bat Masterson. It also rejoiced in an amazing motion picture patronage, under the auspices of H. A. Hallett and Charles Geigerich, the same who today promulgates the tidings of Comicolor cartoons and related product. The masters of the movies took vast space in the Telegraph each Sunday to tell each other what they wanted believed. It must have all been amazing indeed to the 30,000 racehorse followers who bought the paper for the data of their speculations.

Meanwhile the big prospering picture department of the Telegraph was homing, housing and developing contributions to the industry's personnel, including Agnes Smith, Allison Smith, and Katheryn Hilliker, who became in time the first and founder of the school of the wisecrack screen title and first aid to limping continuity.

The daily press was only beginning dimly to be aware of the screen. A city editor by the name of Robert McAlarney, on the New York Tribune, took a job at Famous Players, and his successor put a note on the bulletin board to his reporters saying: "Remember we are competing with the movies now. Make your stories move."

Out in Chicago, the Tribune, circulation hungry, with Walter Howey, city editor, and Max Annenberg, circulation manager, conspiring to snap up the paper, had instituted the first motion picture review department under John Lawson, rewrite man. John walked out of a poker game at the Press Club into a dumbwaiter shaft, and his assistant, the slight Miss Audrie Alspaugh, signing as "Kitty Kelly," succeeded to the post and became very shortly, by reason of her all too intelligent candor, exceedingly well known and poignantly mentioned in motion pictures offices.

The New York World, beginning in the advertising department, started to see the movies as something, and it became possible now and then as a special favor, to get a piece about a picture written by Bide Dudley. Also, very special arrangements could be made for the inclusion in the Sunday World of an "art picture," a star portrait in many colors, "suitable for framing." The present writer did some of the framing.

The New York Times was quite firm in an attitude of very slight recognition for the art of the screen, so slight in fact that the best that could be done was to get some solid agate attention in a miscellany column that Brock Pemberton tossed into the dramatic pages to take care of things almost too insignificant to mention.

When this writer suborned a traffic jam by issuing ten-thousand group passes to a preview of "Damaged Goods," with Richard Bennett, at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre, the showing was covered exclusively by police reporters. In view of the fact that the added feature of the bill was a lecture on syphilis, by Dr. Carleton Simon, it should have been covered by Morris Fishbein.

"Damaged Goods," incidentally, cost $23,000 to make, $17,000 to sell, and did a gross on the state's right market of $600,000. It was either too good or too hot for Mutual's program. It gave rise to a flood of prophylactic pictures that afflicted the screen with venereal troubles for years. It is not entirely well yet.

Meanwhile there was a minor problem down in Twenty-third street at the Mutual offices concerning one Samuel L. Rothafel.

The outstanding showman of the day, he had been taken from his post at the Strand and put under contract by the Rialto Theatre Corporation, and, it seemed, a bit too early. The theatre was not done yet and the Rialto stockholders had him on their hands, $200 worth each week, until he could open the house and go to work.

It chanced that the stockholders and officers of the Rialto made up a roster that resembled the board of directors of Mutual. Mutual was a going concern, going one could not be sure where, but going rapidly. It was plain then that Mutual ought to use the services and genius of Mr. Rothafel until such time as his theatre was ready.

In those days, and probably yet, it was the law of the motion picture business to refer all miscellany and troubles to the publicity departments. Roxy was bestowed upon Mutual's publicity department. The ensuing dialogue was about as follows, according to the memory of one present:

"What shall we do with him?"

"That is for you to work out—anything so we use him."

"Do we have to?"

"We have to pay him."

"Would you mind if he went on a long journey?"

"That would be all right."

And so it came that there was a huddle with a traffic expert from the Pennsylvania System. The prescription was: "I want to send a man around the country to lecture on our pictures. He must be in each of these twenty-eight key cities for either luncheon or dinner—we'll let him have breakfast by himself—and the trip must cover the country and end by a month from today."

Two days later Mr. Rothafel took train for Philadelphia and points west. There was a press agent ahead of him and one with him to remind him of the titles of Mutual pictures, which he had never seen. There should have been one behind him.

Roxy's Mutual tour was a great national success—especially for Roxy. Due to his familiarity with the output of the General Film Corporation, the stenographic reports, secretly acquired by his friend in the Mutual home office, indicated that the great exhibitor was at least giving the competition a break. Anyway, the Mutual was mentioned as often as it deserved, in the papers, which were supplied wth a speech slightly more closely attuned to its selfish purposes.

Fifteen-Cent Pieces for Admission

Roxy covered the nation's twenty-eight key cities in twenty-seven days, never missed a train and came back to his Broadway fifteen pounds lighter and with only enough breath left to present his compliments to the designer of the tour in lucid, poignant phrases acquired from the polishing contact of the U. S. Marine corps on foreign duty. By far the hottest talk of the tour was delivered to and enjoyed by one man. That man was not invited to the opening of the Rialto.

The star shouting and the realignment of the business from studio to screen, as the motion picture theatre replaced the nickelodeon, and as the feature supplanted the program service of one, two and three-reel pictures, met as many obstacles and oppositions in this period as the coming of sound later.

Admissions were a problem. Too many of the exhibitor customers were nickel-minded in the opinion of distributors with higher priced product to sell. Out in Chicago, Joseph Finn, head of a lively advertising agency representing various film interests, seduced the present writer into the authorship of a booklet on "How to Increase Your Box Office Receipts," decorated with tables of statistics and figures evolved and invented by the indefatigable Paul R. Kuhn. The result purported to show that it was as easy to get a dime as a nickel.

It was only two years later that the same author developed a campaign of some national effect and attention advocating the coinage of a fifteen-cent piece, so that movie admissions could be paid in one piece of money. The campaign came to a climax with the circulation of a too widely printed pictorial suggestion for design of the coin with Helen Holmes in relief on one side and Charles Chaplin on the other. It began to suggest publicity about then.

One of the current excitements of the scene was "Carmen." When the Lasky studios announced Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," it was almost inevitable that William Fox and Winfield Sheehan would do something about it. They announced, and jolly well made and delivered, a "Carmen" with Theda Bara. Since Miss Bara was already of movie fame, her operatic picture did rather better in comparison with the great Farrar than was forecast. There was no registration of titles, on the classics or anything else in those open-minded days.

And it was about then that Mr. Fox had come to victory in his end of the "independent" war on the Patents Company and its General Film Company.

Having fought mightily to vanquish the trust, the while maintaining General Film service to his Greater New York Film Rental Company, and his theatres, the Fox organization was, with the waning of the General program and the rise of the feature picture, rather put to it to go heavily into production to get supply.

The industry will long remember the Herbert Brenon production of "The Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellerman, pictures in Jamaica at vast price, and the ensuing differences between Mr. Fox and Mr. Brenon. The director was barred from the opening of his picture in New York and attended in a full beard make-up. It was a picture for his whiskers, too.

General, once so mighty, was going into rapid decline. It was difficult to get its presidents to stay. After Frank Dyer, Edison attorney, left the post, there was a swift succession of them, including the late Ben Hampton—the same who had Hampton's Magazine on which Ray Long started to success and fame, and the same Ben Hampton who, as advertising manager of the American Tobacco Company, tried to make Star Plug a fashion by his billboards on "the men who chew are the men who do." For a while, J. A. Berst, who had come over from France years before to found American Pathe, was president with hopes of rehabilitating the moribund General. Last of its presidents was Frank Tichenor—Manhattan Slide, Great Eastern Films of Providence, friend of Postmaster General Hitchcock, today publisher of Aero Digest and The New Outlook, which Al Smith used to edit. General died about 1919, with, as its last contribution to the industry, that aggressive young salesman, Sidney R. Kent.

There were, of their fashion, successors to General, as, firstly, V.L.S.E., with Walter Irwin conspicuous in management, and, later, K.E.S.E., motivated mostly by the late George Kleine of Chicago. It is hard now to remember what they tried to do. The contribution of the General group had been made, completed and paid off. For them the show was over.

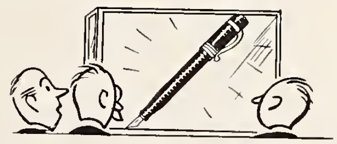
But speaking of Chaplin—he was, despite the fact that his appearances had been only anonymously in Keystone one-reelers in 1913, and in the ensuing year-and-a-half in one and two reel production by Essanay, he was the world's greatest box office draw, not too well recognized.

John R. Freuler, of Mutual, was still in exhibition, and, incidentally, had information on how many thousand pirated prints of Chaplin Keystones were in circulation. He determined to get Chaplin. It was a long campaign. George K. Spoor, of Essanay, was as determined to keep his comedian. In fact, he would do anything but pay him the market. Guards were set up about the Essanay studio at Niles and Chaplin was as difficult to approach as a crowned head on May Day.

One of the outriders of the Joseph Finn organization of the period was Mr. Jay Casey Cairns, who was currently in California to see how much publicity could be issued to confuse the customers about which one of the Pickford girls was playing the lead in "The Diamond from the Sky," the world's most elongated serial. Casey got orders to see Chaplin and delicately suggest that money was waiting in New York.

After Casey had been tossed out and escorted to El Camino Real a number of times he changed the tactics of approach and, made up in chaps and spurs, rode into the Essanay studio ahorseback along with a crowd of mounted extras.

Fortune overtook Chaplin on a calico pony. The end of that negotiation was the signing of a contract with the Lone Star Film Corporation for twelve two-reel comedies in a year for a total of salary and bonus in the sum of $670,000.



The deal was signed one Wednesday night, on the mezzanine of the Hotel Astor, and at its conclusion Nathan Burkan, employed by Chaplin for the one day of closing only, neatly concluded the meeting by selling the fountain pen that did the job to Mr. Freuler for $35.

Just a few weeks before that same pen had signed a contract whereby Miss Billie Burke was to appear in George Kleine's vast super-serial, entitled "Gloria's Romance." It was the supreme floration of the serial era and practically ended all serials for quite a while. The principal result of "Gloria's Romance" was that a couple of production attaches got enough mahogany veneering from the sets to line their homes.

It was just as well that the pen in the deal was retired from trade by Mr. Freuler.

Swiftly, the Zukor dominion extended and spread out across the picture map. As Triangle disintegrated Mr. Zukor surrounded box office talent until he controlled not less than 85 per cent of the names that drew.

The old program selling waned as features arose, and from Mutual, straddling between its old heritage and its new ideas, went into star series selling, tending to split up the market.

Then Lewis J. Selznick seceded from World Film and went South. When he appeared again it was with the World's principal star, Clara Kimball Young, announced in a series to be sold on a franchise plan. And quickly Mr. Selznick added others, including the Talmadges. He became quite a menace to the Famous Players-Lasky-Paramount plan of operation.

Lewis J. fell ill and took to bed at the Hotel Astor. Mr. Zukor went to call.

"He offered me $5,000 a week if I'd go to China and stay there," Mr. Selznick reported later. "But I wasn't that sick."

It is, of course, to be remembered how Mr. Zukor presently overtook the situation by acquiring a partnership in Selznick Pictures, which almost immediately became Select Pictures, and how displeased Mr. Selznick became at not seeing his name in the lights of Broadway. It cost him several millions to put his name back there.

'Anna Christie' Triumph

And it is an exciting memory of the period to recall how, somewhat before the rise of Selznick, Mr. Zukor again had to fight for Mary Pickford, his ace. It seems that when the world was told, as it was, about Chaplin's $670,000 salary there were a number of other persons who thought they were not at the moment being properly recognized. Among them were D. W. Griffith and Miss Mary Pickford. There were negotiations with Mr. Freuler and with Miss Pickford they reached an agreement of a straight cash salary of $14,000 a week.

Miss Mary agreed in conference with Mr. Freuler's lawyer, the sage, firm and grey Sam Field, of Milwaukee, one afternoon at four.

That evening Miss Pickford and Mr. Zukor had another talk and in the morning the $14,000 deal with Mutual was off. Mr. Zukor, it developed later, had made arrangements on the basis of $7,000 a week, and a share in the profits.

Along about this time a set of agents' lawsuits over Miss Pickford's arrangement were started, to no profit save to the lawyers.

Star and director prices were going up. Then came Mr. Zukor's Artcraft, a method of segregating product.

Exhibitors felt pressure, and just about the time that Tom Tally, of Los Angeles, was getting superheated on the subject along came J. D. Williams, back home from Australia, and wishful of things to do. When Tally and Williams got through their caucus the First National Exhibitors Circuit idea was born and under way. That really was the beginning of something.

Competition was coming a hell-whooping and shooting up the settlements along the canyon.

First National went after Mr. Zukor's ace, Miss Pickford, and got her. First National also got Chaplin against an offer of a million dollars a year salary from Mr. Freuler for twelve two reelers. Chaplin promised First National eight, and delivered "The Kid" and a new deal.

And thinking of pictures of the time, there was the triumph of "Anna Christie." Tom Ince had done the piece, an O'Neill play, for First National. Colvin Brown, then vice president of the Ince organization and representing it in New York, forecast a success and presently supported it with figures that showed it making a considerable profit.

Mr. Ince, while not precisely annoyed, was at least shocked.

"Why, damit, I didn't mean to do that," he apologized. "That was my answer to the critics who are always saying I'm all commercial, all box office. That one was art for art's sake."

However, they took the money.

Pictures to remember—along about then—"The Covered Wagon," the James Cruze-Jesse Lasky triumph from the story by Emerson Hough. It all began, one may fancy, way back there in Chicago when Julian Johnson, then of Photoplay, and the pungent old greyhead, Mr. Hough, became friends across the table at the White Paper Club at DeJonge's, the scene of the Wednesday lunches. Mr. Johnson, as story editor for Famous Players, remembered the Hough story and acquired it casually one day. When the picture, first shot for the program, reached the projection room, so the story goes, it so fired Mr. Lasky with enthusiasms that it went into heavy retakes, with more wagon, and emerged the classic.

With a hit like that from the Lasky studios it was inevitable that there should be another magnus opus. It came, under the title of "The Ten Commandments," a picture so big that they had to shut down the studio afterwards for a "breathing spell," as they say in Hyde Park, in which to permit the home office to collect some rentals.

You remember the Abe Lincoln story of the steamboat—it had a ten-horse boiler and a twenty-horse whistle. Every time they blew the whistle they had to stop the boat. "The Ten Commandments" was at least that big.

Also there was "Passion," which came out of Germany as "DuBarry" and emerged from the editorial fingers of Katheryn Hilliker as an American sort of job, that was the making of Pola Negri. And there were "The Last Laugh" and "Variety." And from Russia, "Potemkin," a fluid, vivid technique, overrated, of course, but vivid.

Mr. Zukor, moved by the First National invasion, went after theatres, first with stealth, then vigorously in the open. There was a deal with The Stanley Circuit, with Southern Enterprises. The Rialto and Rivoli on Broadway were purchased.

Warners, destined to loom large in years to come, had been heard from in this period with the spectacular "My Four Years in Germany," a project in which that sturdy single-taxer and pioneer, Mark Dintenfass, had a hand.

About now Marcus Loew was revising some of his earlier estimates of Mr. Zukor. Mr. Loew also was wondering about just where he was going to get pictures. That's why, of course, he took over Richard Rowland's Metro, and obtained with it an unexpected prize in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which had been put into production on Mr. Rowland's hunch inspired by a New York Times book section advertisement of the twenty-first printing of the novel. When Mr. Rowland tried reading the novel a few years later he threw it under the radiator at the middle of the first chapter. He was right both times.

And that brings to mind the sensational rise of Rudolph Valentino, and that sad demonstration of public mania accompanying his funeral. Among stars flaming up in the period there was Gloria Swanson, who began as an exponent of clothes and came into the status of attainment on unexpected merit.

Along came the big boom era in theatre circuiting. The Publix deal with Paramount, and all the katzenjammer that followed. The gay expansions, including everybody.

Warners, rising from an impetus that began in the vicinity of their "School Days," had come to a size and importance, and problems. Destiny and enterprise, adventure, sent them in pursuit of the talking picture, a notion that had been on the way and feebly supported since the beginnings of the art. Radio devices and the new science of sound in communication had made the tools available at last. The Telephone company entered by way of Western Electric and Vitaphone, then Electrical Research Products. "The Jazz Singer" broke upon the apathetic, hostile industry, an industry as always clutching at the comforts of the status quo.

The impact of sound on the art is something to remember with aspirin. The endless bickerings about "interchangeability," with John Otterson of Erpi, silent, difficult, hard to get. The hectic fever of policies. Paramount almost decided on RCA. There was a shindy at a Hays office meeting where David Sarnoff talked about the home movie field.

The picture gets blurred with too much action—Fox, Movietone, Sheehan, Clarke and presently Katz, Hertz, Zukor, Kent. And receiverships, decentralizations, bankers, more bankers—at last rehabilitation, the motion picture industry thinking about pictures again—.

COMES the dawn over Connecticut hills. The fire is low and Angus McTavish-the-terrier stirs uneasily in his sleep, mindful no doubt, as his master is, of many a woodchuck caught, of buried bones, chickens chased and such matters as may bedevil a dog's conscience.

'Tis also the end of our own first twenty years a-going in this business of the motion picture—the last five of them with this brave, proud HERALD.

There's only a wee nip left in the decanter is, of many a woodchuck uncaught, of whose passings have been recorded in this busy half a decade of editorializing—Thomas A. Edison, George Eastman, George Kleine, J. J. Kennedy, Lewis J. Selznick, Mark Dintenfass, Sam Rork, Ben Hampton, Harry Reichenbach, Jim Quirk, J. D. Williams, Sime Silverman, Frank Wilstach.

Hearing on Skouras Plea for Clearance Injunction Monday

The first clearance and zoning dispute to reach the courts in the New York area in many months will be given a thorough airing by Justice Hofstadter in the state supreme court on Monday when Skouras Theatres Corporation will press its application for a permanent injunction to restrain Twentieth Century-Fox from dating any of its releases into the RKO 81st Street theatre. The decision is expected to be of major importance.

Justice Hofstadter granted Skouras Theatres a temporary injunction following filing of the action on the plea that the Skouras' Riverside and Nemo theatres were damaged by an alleged breach of franchise and protection agreement by which they had seven days' protection over RKO houses in the zone. The complaint is against day and date showings at RKO houses.

In his decision on the temporary order, Justice Hofstadter said the evidence favored the contention that the plaintiffs, Fox and RKO, are violating and nullifying the rights of Skouras Theatres.

While serious injury is being caused, continued the judge, in view of the issues in the case no definitive determination of the respective rights should be made prior to the trial, and he granted the temporary writ on condition that the plaintiffs agree to an early trial, which he set for Monday.

From Kansas City this week came word that independents are chafing under the delay of setting clearance for the season, which is occasioned by the fact the film companies are completing product deals with Fox Midwest prior to starting selling to other subsequents. No plan of clearance exists, and it is generally agreed that last year's will not be used.

To Install New Officers at Sea

The Lieutenant A. Vernon Macaulay Post, 270, American Legion of Massachusetts, known as the "theatrical post," will hold its installation of officers on the high seas on the S.S. Acadia over the weekend of November 2. The election of new officers will be held October 1 under the present commander, Charles Heath of the RKO exchange in Boston.

The party is scheduled to leave Boston the night of November 2 and steam down to New York, installing the new officers en route. The ship will sail back to New England after a day at Manhattan. Many features have been arranged for the trip, including a beauty contest, in which the captain of the boat will pick the prettiest girl on the trip.

Casey Motion Before Court

The motion made by Pat Casey to examine Frank Kolbe, of Pathe, and other officers, before trial, has been placed before Justice John F. Carew in the New York Supreme Court, and a decision is expected early next week.

FEDERAL COURT ACTIONS PROCEED ON SIX FRONTS

Justice Department Is Studying Single-Bill Contracts as Way Is Paved for St. Louis Trial

Motion picture legal issues now being fought, or threatening in the federal courts, government-sponsored and otherwise, this week caused counsel for the various conflicting interests to continue their merry chase through court corridors in several places, and lead to the following new developments:

1. Majors' contracts prohibiting dual billing were being studied by the Department of Justice for their possible bearing on anti-trust prosecutions.

2. Federal court at St. Louis refused the plea of distributors for additional bills of particulars in the government's anti-trust suit, thereby paving the way for opening of the trial September 30.

3. Meanwhile at Washington the Department of Justice abandoned its plan to have a special federal court hear the St. Louis case in order to expedite determination of the issue.

4. W. N. Youngclaus, independent Nebraska exhibitor, was reported to be considering a continuance of his old federal court fight against distributors.

5. Competitive exhibitor defendants, with distributors, demanded more details in explanation of a $1,353,000 federal court suit filed in Nebraska.

6. The "dime" admission test case in Minnesota's federal courts against distributors was nearing a climax.

That the Department of Justice is studying single-bill contract requirements of distributors was indirectly admitted Monday when it was stated that the department is interested in everything going on in the industry that might have a bearing on anti-trust prosecutions.

Single-bill agreements being made by the majors are stirring protests of independent exhibitors, it was said at Washington.

The department, it was indicated, is thoroughly conversant with every move in the industry through exhibitors and others. There is a steady flow of complaints, all of which are studied.

It was intimated that if the majors are forcing any single-bill agreements which might violate the anti-trust laws they will be thoroughly studied. It is indicated that if the government is successful in its St. Louis prosecution, other suits will be filed almost immediately.

Decision Paves Way for St. Louis Trial

The action of United States District Judge George H. Moore, at St. Louis, on September 21, in rejecting the motion of Jacob M. Lashly, local counsel for RKO and its president, Ned E. Depinet, for additional bills of particulars in the government case charging RKO, Warners, Paramount and some of their affiliated companies and officials with conspiracy to violate the Sherman anti-trust act by refusing to furnish first run pictures to the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres there apparently removes the final obstacles to opening of the trial of the case on September 30.

Judge Moore apparently had his mind made up on the question when Attorney Lashly had concluded almost an hour of argument in support of his contention that the bills of particulars furnished to his defendant clients by the Department of Justice on September 11 did not comply with Judge Moore's order to furnish the defendants with specific information as to when, where and through whom they had participated in the alleged conspiracy, for he cut short the reply arguments of Russell Hardy, Special Assistant United States Attorney General in charge of the prosecution of the case, to announce that Mr. Lashly's motion had been denied.

Prior to this action by Judge Moore, Mr. Hardy had voluntarily agreed to slightly amend his bills.

Under the change it is contended that Mr. Depinet and RKO did not do the things charged except through the other defendants named in the indictment.

With the prospect that Judge Moore will not permit a further postponement of the trial, the Department of Justice has side-tracked its announced intention of asking for a special three-judge court to hear the case. From a source close to Attorney General Cummings it was learned that the Department will hold back the request for the special court to ascertain whether the defense will seek further delay in the trial. What effect this subtle pressure on Judge Moore will have may come to light on September 30. It is possible that the attorneys for the defense may raise the question of whether the Department of Justice is not closely approaching the point of endeavoring to intimidate or coerce the federal bench. Such pressure may be interpreted as a step toward the executive branch of the government dictating to the federal bench as when and for what reasons it can grant postponements in trials in which the government is interested.

Youngclaus Threat Reported

Senator W. H. Thompson in Nebraska was reported interested with W. N. Youngclaus in Mr. Youngclaus' reputed determination to continue his court fight against large distributors, arising out of alleged aggressive practices against him in his independent theatre operations in Nebraska.

Meanwhile the Nebraska federal courts heard further in the matter of the $1,353,000 anti-trust suit filed by Lincoln independent theatres against the competitive Lincoln Theatres Corporation and Robert Livingston, and Paramount, Vitagraph, Warners, United Artists, Universal, RKO and MGM.

The defendant Lincoln Theatres asked the court to demand more particulars from the plaintiffs. Hearing is scheduled in October.

After several postponements, hearings on charges of conspiracy in the "dime show" dispute brought in Minneapolis by the Shubert Theatre Players company, operating the Palace, Minneapolis and the Lyceum, St. Paul against distributors, was scheduled to get under way in federal court at Minneapolis.

Rothacker Vice-President Of Paramount Productions

Watterson R. Rothacker, engaged for a quarter of a century in the laboratory and production branches of the motion picture, has been elected a vice-president of Paramount Productions, Inc.

Operator Unions Declare a Truce As Scale Is Set

With a truce declared after years of bitter rivalry, the three motion picture operators' unions in New York City were moving toward a merger, and while Local 306, of the IATSE, reached a compromise agreement with Loew's and RKO on a new basic wage scale calling for a reduction, negotiations in at least two cities in the field resulted in increases.

Frank Tichenor, representative of New York's Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia in the contract negotiations, confirmed that discussions have reached a stage where a merger of Local 306 with Allied and Empire State was a distinct possibility, but said nothing definite would be done until a new contract with the circuits has been signed. A consolidation would bring together 1,854 members in Local 306 and a total of 800 in the other two, and, if effected, immediate unionization of New York City's 600 theatres would be undertaken.

Meanwhile the warring groups have agreed to discontinue the struggle for control of the field which has kept the city in turmoil for years, and, pending further moves, have ended the cross-picketing of theatres which resulted in some 500 arrests.

A wage pact may be consummated with a majority of the circuits and independents late this week, on the basis of the compromise reached late last week through which RKO and Loew will save approximately $200,000 a year, according to an estimate in computing the effect of a cut of 26 cents an hour in operators' pay.

The agreement with the two circuits calls for $1.86 an hour in place of the former $2.12. The circuits asked for a reduction to $1.25. The new rate does not apply to the nine Broadway houses, for which a higher scale is expected.

Negotiations are contining on agreements with Skouras, Randforce, Fabian, United Artists and Paramount, and no contracts will be signed by RKO and Loew until the smaller circuits have agreed, it is understood.

The proposed alliance between the unions was furthered when Allied refused to send its men to the Astor on Broadway after Local 306 members walked out rather than accept a cut from $2.12 to $1.80 an hour. Mr. Tichenor induced the Local 306 men to return, however.

Reinstatement of stage shows at the Paramount may be delayed while wage negotiations between the musicians and operators are worked out. The musicians are seeking a $10 weekly raise.

At the same time, from Akron came word that operators were given a $5 weekly increase for one year, a boost of about eight per cent, beginning December 1, and in Cleveland operators settled with exhibitors on the basis of a seven and one-half per cent increase for two years to August 31, 1937, the operators making overtime and other concessions.

In Richmond, Va., major circuit and independent houses signed a one-year contract with stagehands and operators, with but few changes in the terms. In Philadelphia the Earle and Fox are in their fourth week without stage shows while the musicians' union is holding out for two orchestras for each theatre, each to work part-time to alleviate unemployment.

A jury at Grand Island, Neb., found four union operators guilty of illegal picketing and they were fined $10 each on complaint of William Youngclaus that his Empress theatre suffered from these activities after he had discharged an IATSE operator. This was the first test of the new anti-picketing law.

Academy Completes Five-Year Writer Pact

Completion of a revised five-year basic writer-producer working agreement and code of fair practice was announced in Hollywood on Tuesday by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, ending almost a year of collaboration between the producer and writer groups.

At the same time the Academy launched its first important drive in opposition to the Screen Writers' Guild effort to force recognition, and announced it would fight this issue if the Guild offered opposition to the contract. This is contrary to the Academy's previous policy of ignoring the Guild's negotiations with the producers.

More Tax Bills Face Exhibitors

Exhibitors in several sections were concerned this week over new developments in the tax situation which threaten to add to the burden of imposts already carried by theatres.

In Ohio, a statement by Governor Davey was construed as meaning an attempt will be made to reinstate the 10 per cent admission tax, suspended January 1.

State sales taxes with probably levies on admissions were urged at a taxation commission hearing in Boston. Similar legislation was defeated in the recent session.

Theatres may be taxed three per cent in special sales levies sought for enactment in a special session to be called in Minnesota next month, according to Al Steffes, Allied leader.

Fred Wehrenberg in St. Louis warned exhibitors against absorbing the one per cent sales tax as establishing a precedent for revival of a 10 per cent amusement tax.

Hearings slated for Monday in New York on Universal and United Artists protests against the impost of the two per cent city sales tax on film rentals were continued to October 1. Distributors contend films are rented, not sold, and therefore not subject to the tax.

In Montreal, exhibitors are demanding that the city pay them a commission of five per cent to cover handling expenses in the sale of amusement tax tickets, the proceeds from which go to charitable institutions. Amusement tax revenue from Montreal theatres during the past fiscal year totaled $335,000.

De Wolf Hopper, Comedian, Dies

De Wolf Hopper, comedian whose stage career spanned more than half a century, died unexpectedly in a Kansas City Hospital early this week. He was 77 years old.

Mr. Hopper had broadcast a radio program the afternoon before his death and appeared to be ill before he went on the air.

Mr. Hopper, who was known also for his many marriages and divorces and for his recitations of Ernest Lawrence Thayer's "Casey at the Bat," cared little for picture work, declaring at one time that "movies are immoral," and records show he appeared in only a few short subjects, principally for Vitaphone.

Authorities Act Against Chance Games in Court

In a test case which is expected to have far-reaching effects in Iowa, a district judge at Des Moines held Bank Night a lottery last Monday and issued a permanent injunction against the Des Moines Theatres Company and A. H. Blank, president, stopping operation of the plan.

Held illegal also in North Dakota, Bank Night was under scrutiny by the attorney general's office of South Dakota with a view to statewide prohibition, while in Milwaukee and New York officials moved against alleged lotteries at theatres. Clouds were also gathering elsewhere.

Bank Night was suspended at five Tri-State (Blank) houses in Des Moines pending outcome of the trial on a petition of the county attorney's office, which District Judge Russell Jordan sustained, saying "the fact that one might win without paying consideration would not deprive the scheme of its character as a lottery." This decision may be appealed to the state supreme court. Action against Blank houses at Clinton, Ia., is pending.

Postal officials in Minneapolis have denied the use of the mails in Bank Night promotion, and in Milwaukee theatres are reported to have discontinued the game following a jury verdict in which Bert Nathan, exhibitor, was fined $15 for alleged lottery law violation.

Validity of chance games in New York theatres is expected to be decided in Special Sessions, where the case of Kings County against the Winthrop, Brooklyn, comes up October 17. Several cases are pending in magistrate courts in New York. While police activity has subsided and many theatres are featuring the games several times weekly, Loew's and Consolidated Amusements are holding off until a decision in the test case. Cases against five theatres on Staten Island, N. Y., scheduled for Tuesday, were continued.

A recently enacted California law making it illegal to give away anything for the purpose of injuring competition, if held constitutional could be evoked to sweep out all forms of business promotions of a giveaway nature, according to exhibitors.

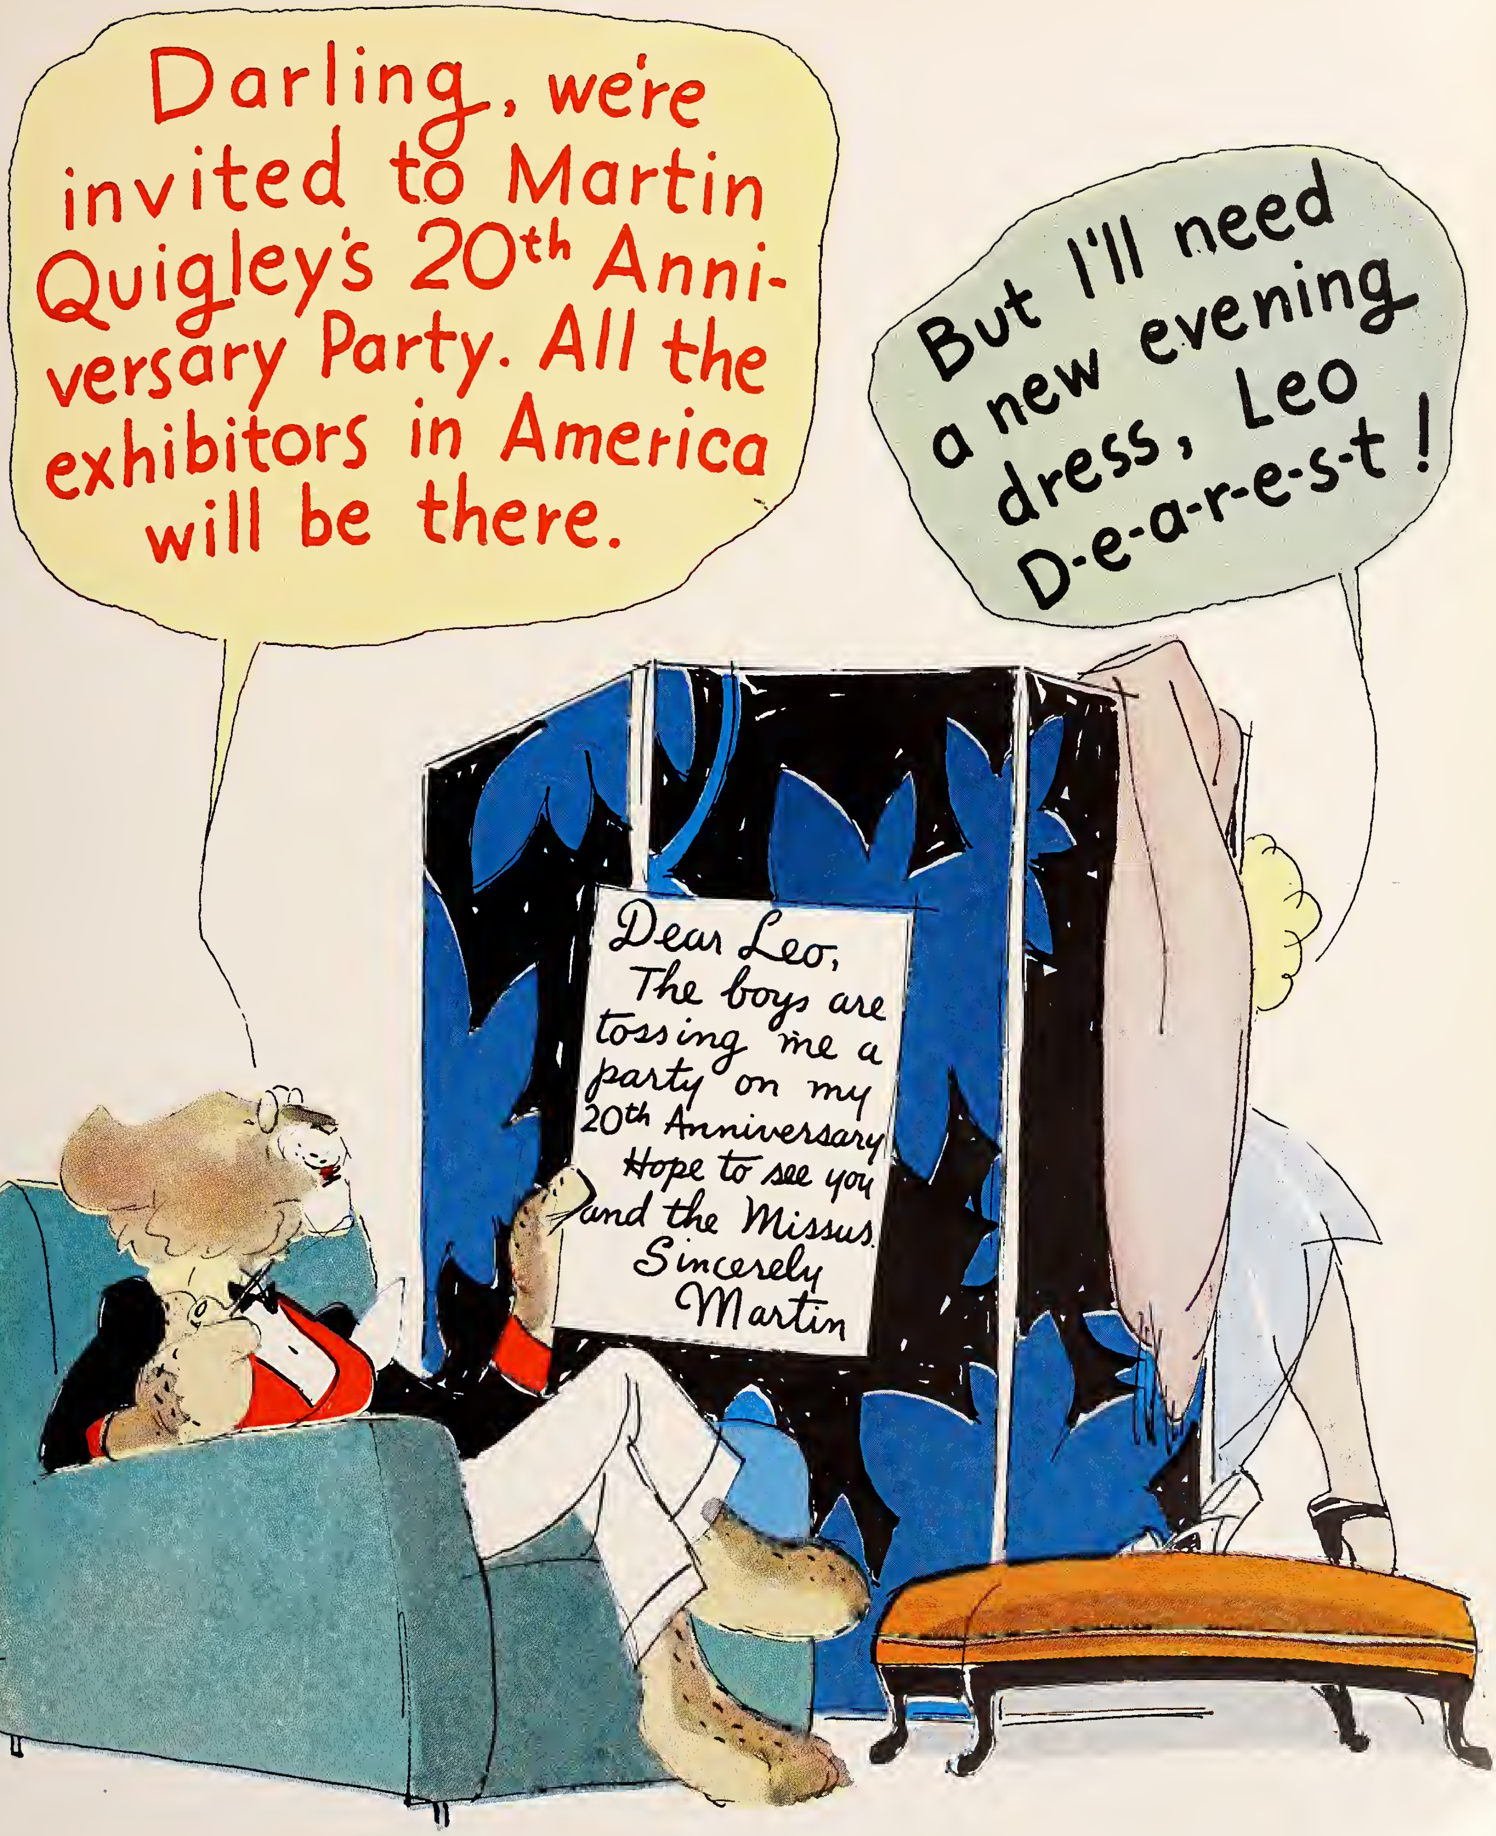
Rene Brunet, operator of the Imperial, New Orleans, this week announced himself in favor of a state law to ban all prizes and premiums.

Meanwhile the National Theatre Gift Stamp Company was signing houses in southern California for its giveaway plan, and has a deal pending with Fox West Coast for northern California houses.

All Fox Midwest houses in Kansas City are now using Bank Night, with introduction of the game at the Uptown, first run, and the Plaza, de luxe suburban theatre. It appears unlikely that the practice will be curbed this season. Fifty-seven houses are using Screeno in the Kansas City territory, said George Hartmann, local distributor for the game, when in New York this week. This includes the Publix Newman, which also uses Bank Night.

Chance promotions were also spreading around St. Louis, where Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, is the latest to install Bank Night, claiming he was forced to it by competition.

A cash giveaway of their own devising is in effect at all theatres in the Tri-Cities, Davenport, Ia., and Moline and Rock Island, Ill., where a $500 cash award is split up and given every few weeks. Sometimes an automobile is awarded.



Darling, we're invited to Martin Quigley's 20th Anniversary Party. All the exhibitors in America will be there.
But I'll need a new evening dress, Leo D-e-a-r-e-s-t!
Dear Leo, The boys are tossing me a party on my 20th Anniversary Hope to see you and the Missus. Sincerely Martin

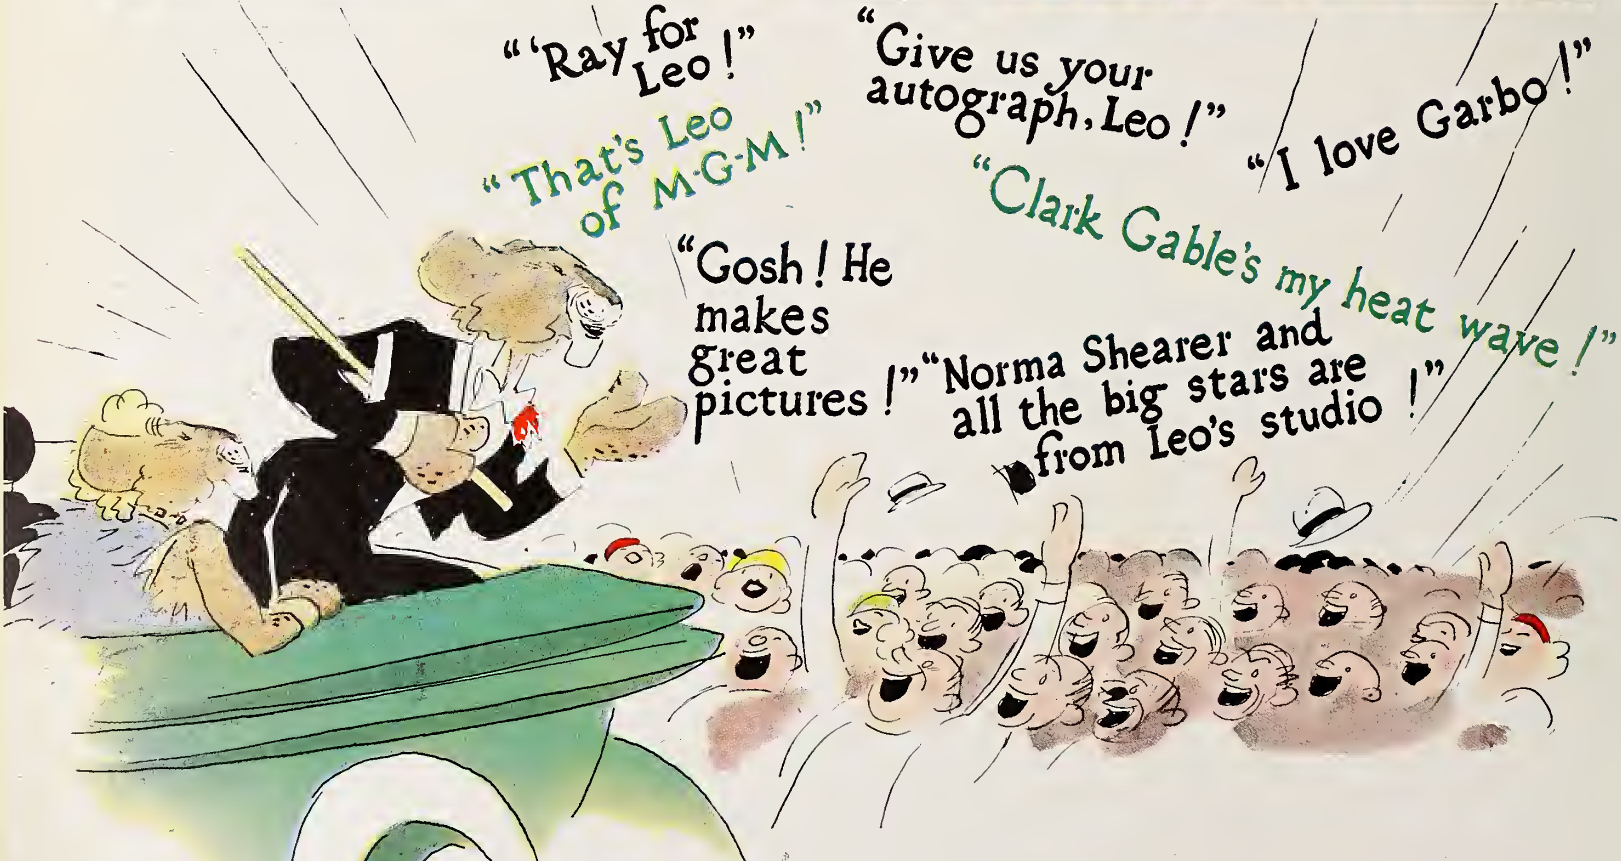
BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936
CAPITOL



"'Ray for Leo!"
"Give us your autograph, Leo!"
"I love Garbo!"
"That's Leo of M-G-M!"
"Clark Gable's my heat wave!"
"Gosh! He makes great pictures!"
"Norma Shearer and all the big stars are from Leo's studio!"

BUT LEO FINALLY GOT THERE! He always gets there!

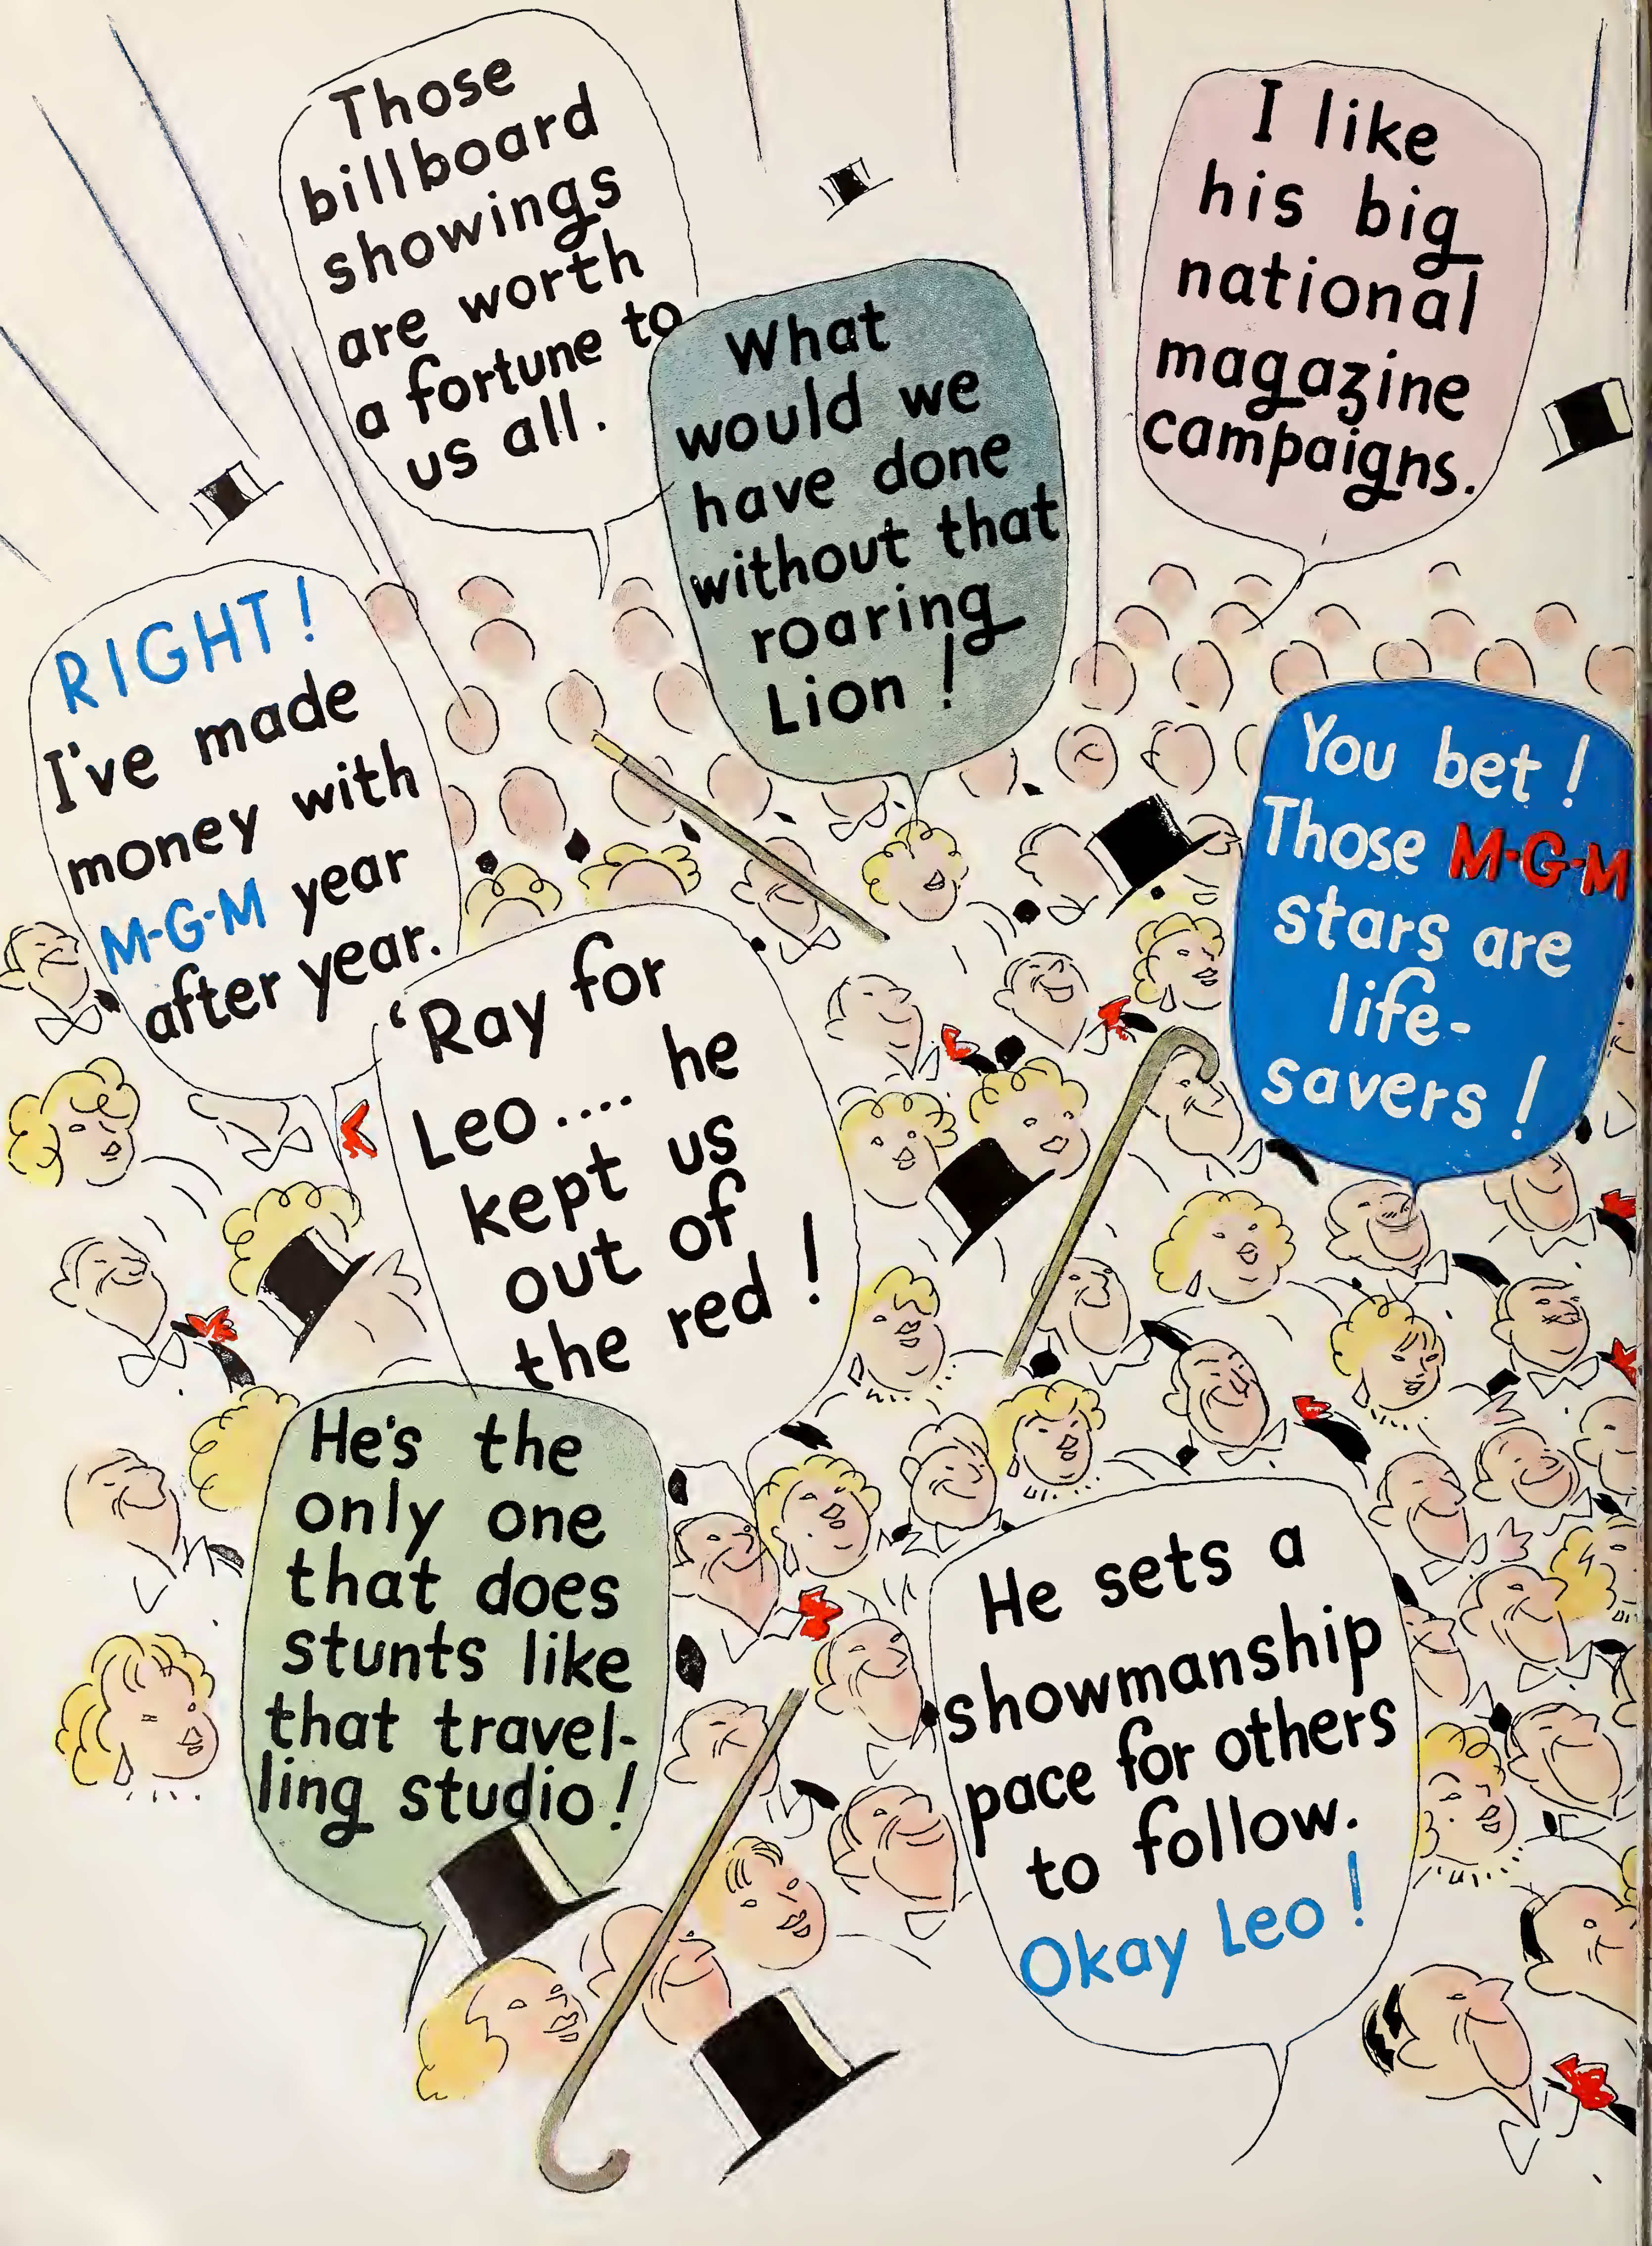
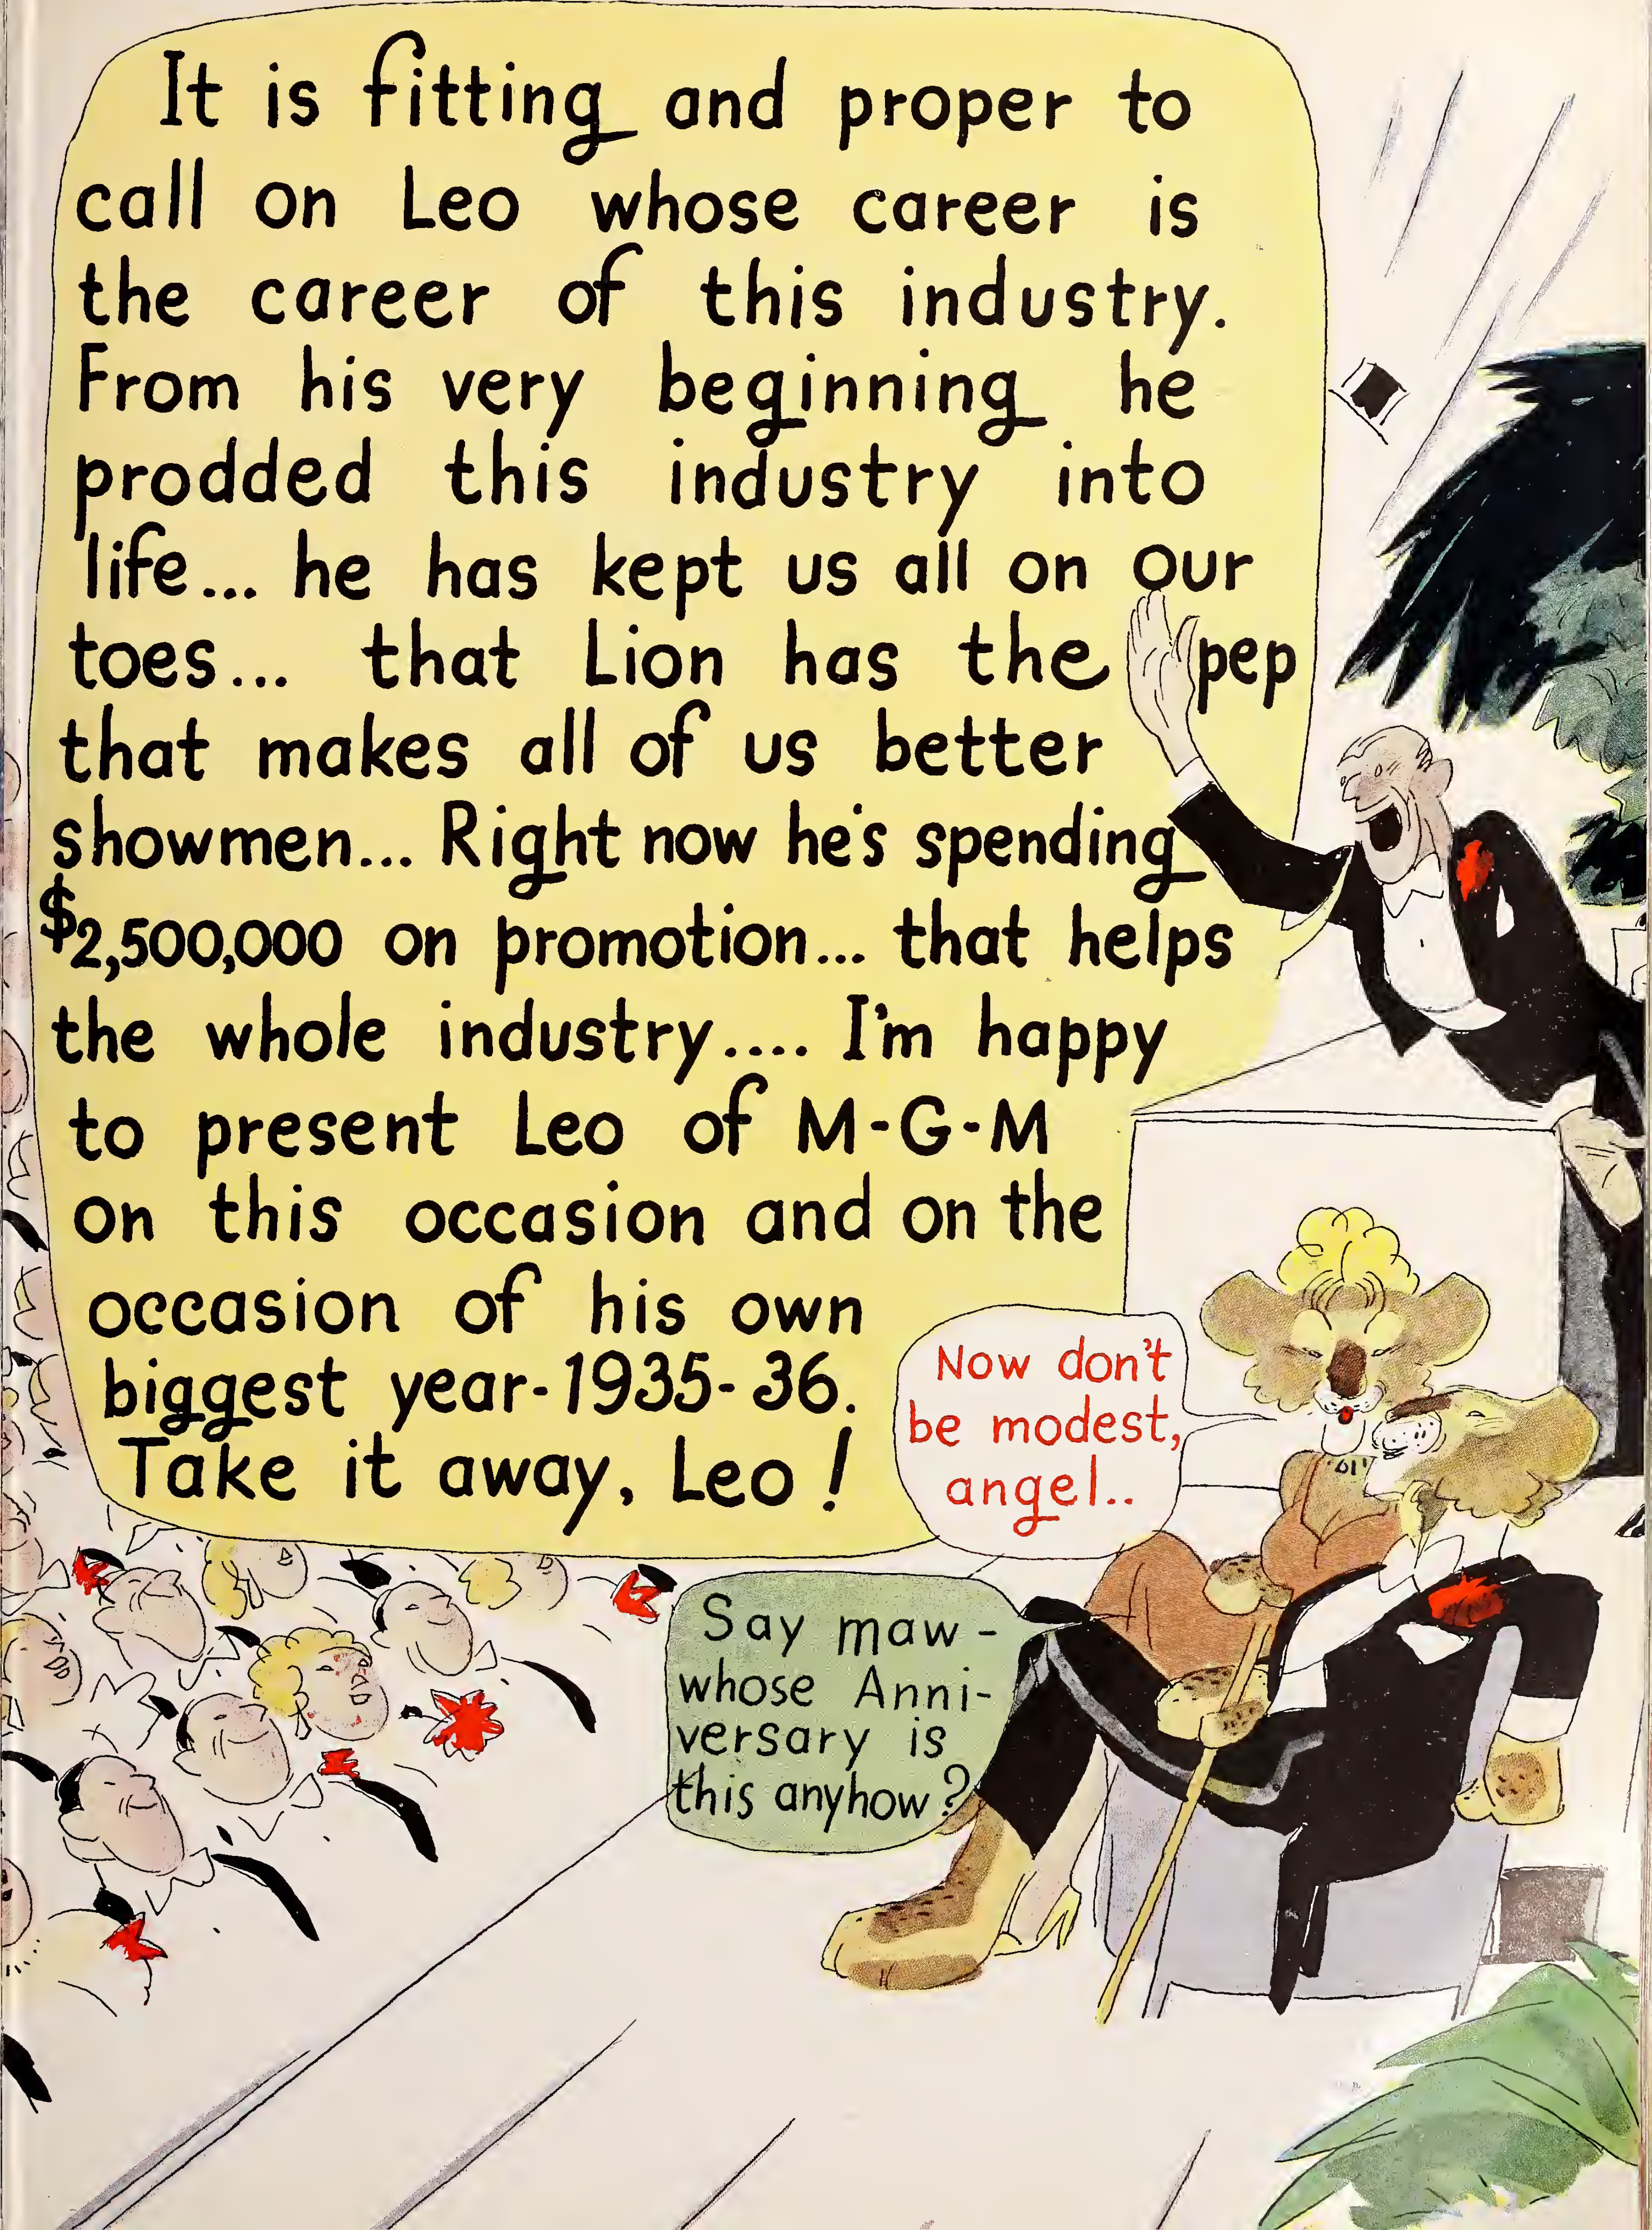
Welcome Leo. We're waiting for you. Will you say a few words to the exhibitors of America?
Thanks, Martin. I'll be delighted! Glad to see you looking so well and prosperous!

Of course Leo ate the swell food (with extra helpings) and then he was called on—



Those billboard showings are worth a fortune to us all.
What would we have done without that roaring Lion!
I like his big national magazine campaigns.
RIGHT! I've made money with M-G-M year after year.
You bet! Those M-G-M stars are life-savers!
'Ray for Leo.... he kept us out of the red!
He's the only one that does stunts like that travelling studio!
He sets a showmanship pace for others to follow. Okay Leo!



It is fitting and proper to call on Leo whose career is the career of this industry. From his very beginning he prodded this industry into life... he has kept us all on our toes... that Lion has the pep that makes all of us better showmen... Right now he's spending $2,500,000 on promotion... that helps the whole industry.... I'm happy to present Leo of M-G-M on this occasion and on the occasion of his own biggest year-1935-36. Take it away, Leo!
Now don't be modest, angel..
Say maw - whose Anniversary is this anyhow?

"And when I tell you that CHINA SEAS sets the Keynote of '35-'36 I back it up with FACTS completed GIANT, NATIONALLY ADVERTISED HITS!"

Leo told them how this great drama "China Seas," starring GABLE, HARLOW, BEERY is breaking records, holding over everywhere, a wonderful start for the new season wherever it plays . . .

"I promised you GARBO's greatest... and from Coast to Coast "ANNA KARENINA" is a boon to box-offices, a delight to the fans, a joy to the critics..."

With pride LEO explained that the combination of Greta Garbo and Fredric March, as lovers, plus Freddie Bartholomew (of "Copperfield" fame) resulted in a 4-year Capitol, N. Y. attendance record and similar happy results everywhere.

JUST THEN THERE WAS AN INTERRUPTION!

(What a coincidence. Read about it! Next page)

THE PIANO PLAYER STARTED PLAYING THE HIT SONGS OF THE SEASON!

"You are my lucky star..."

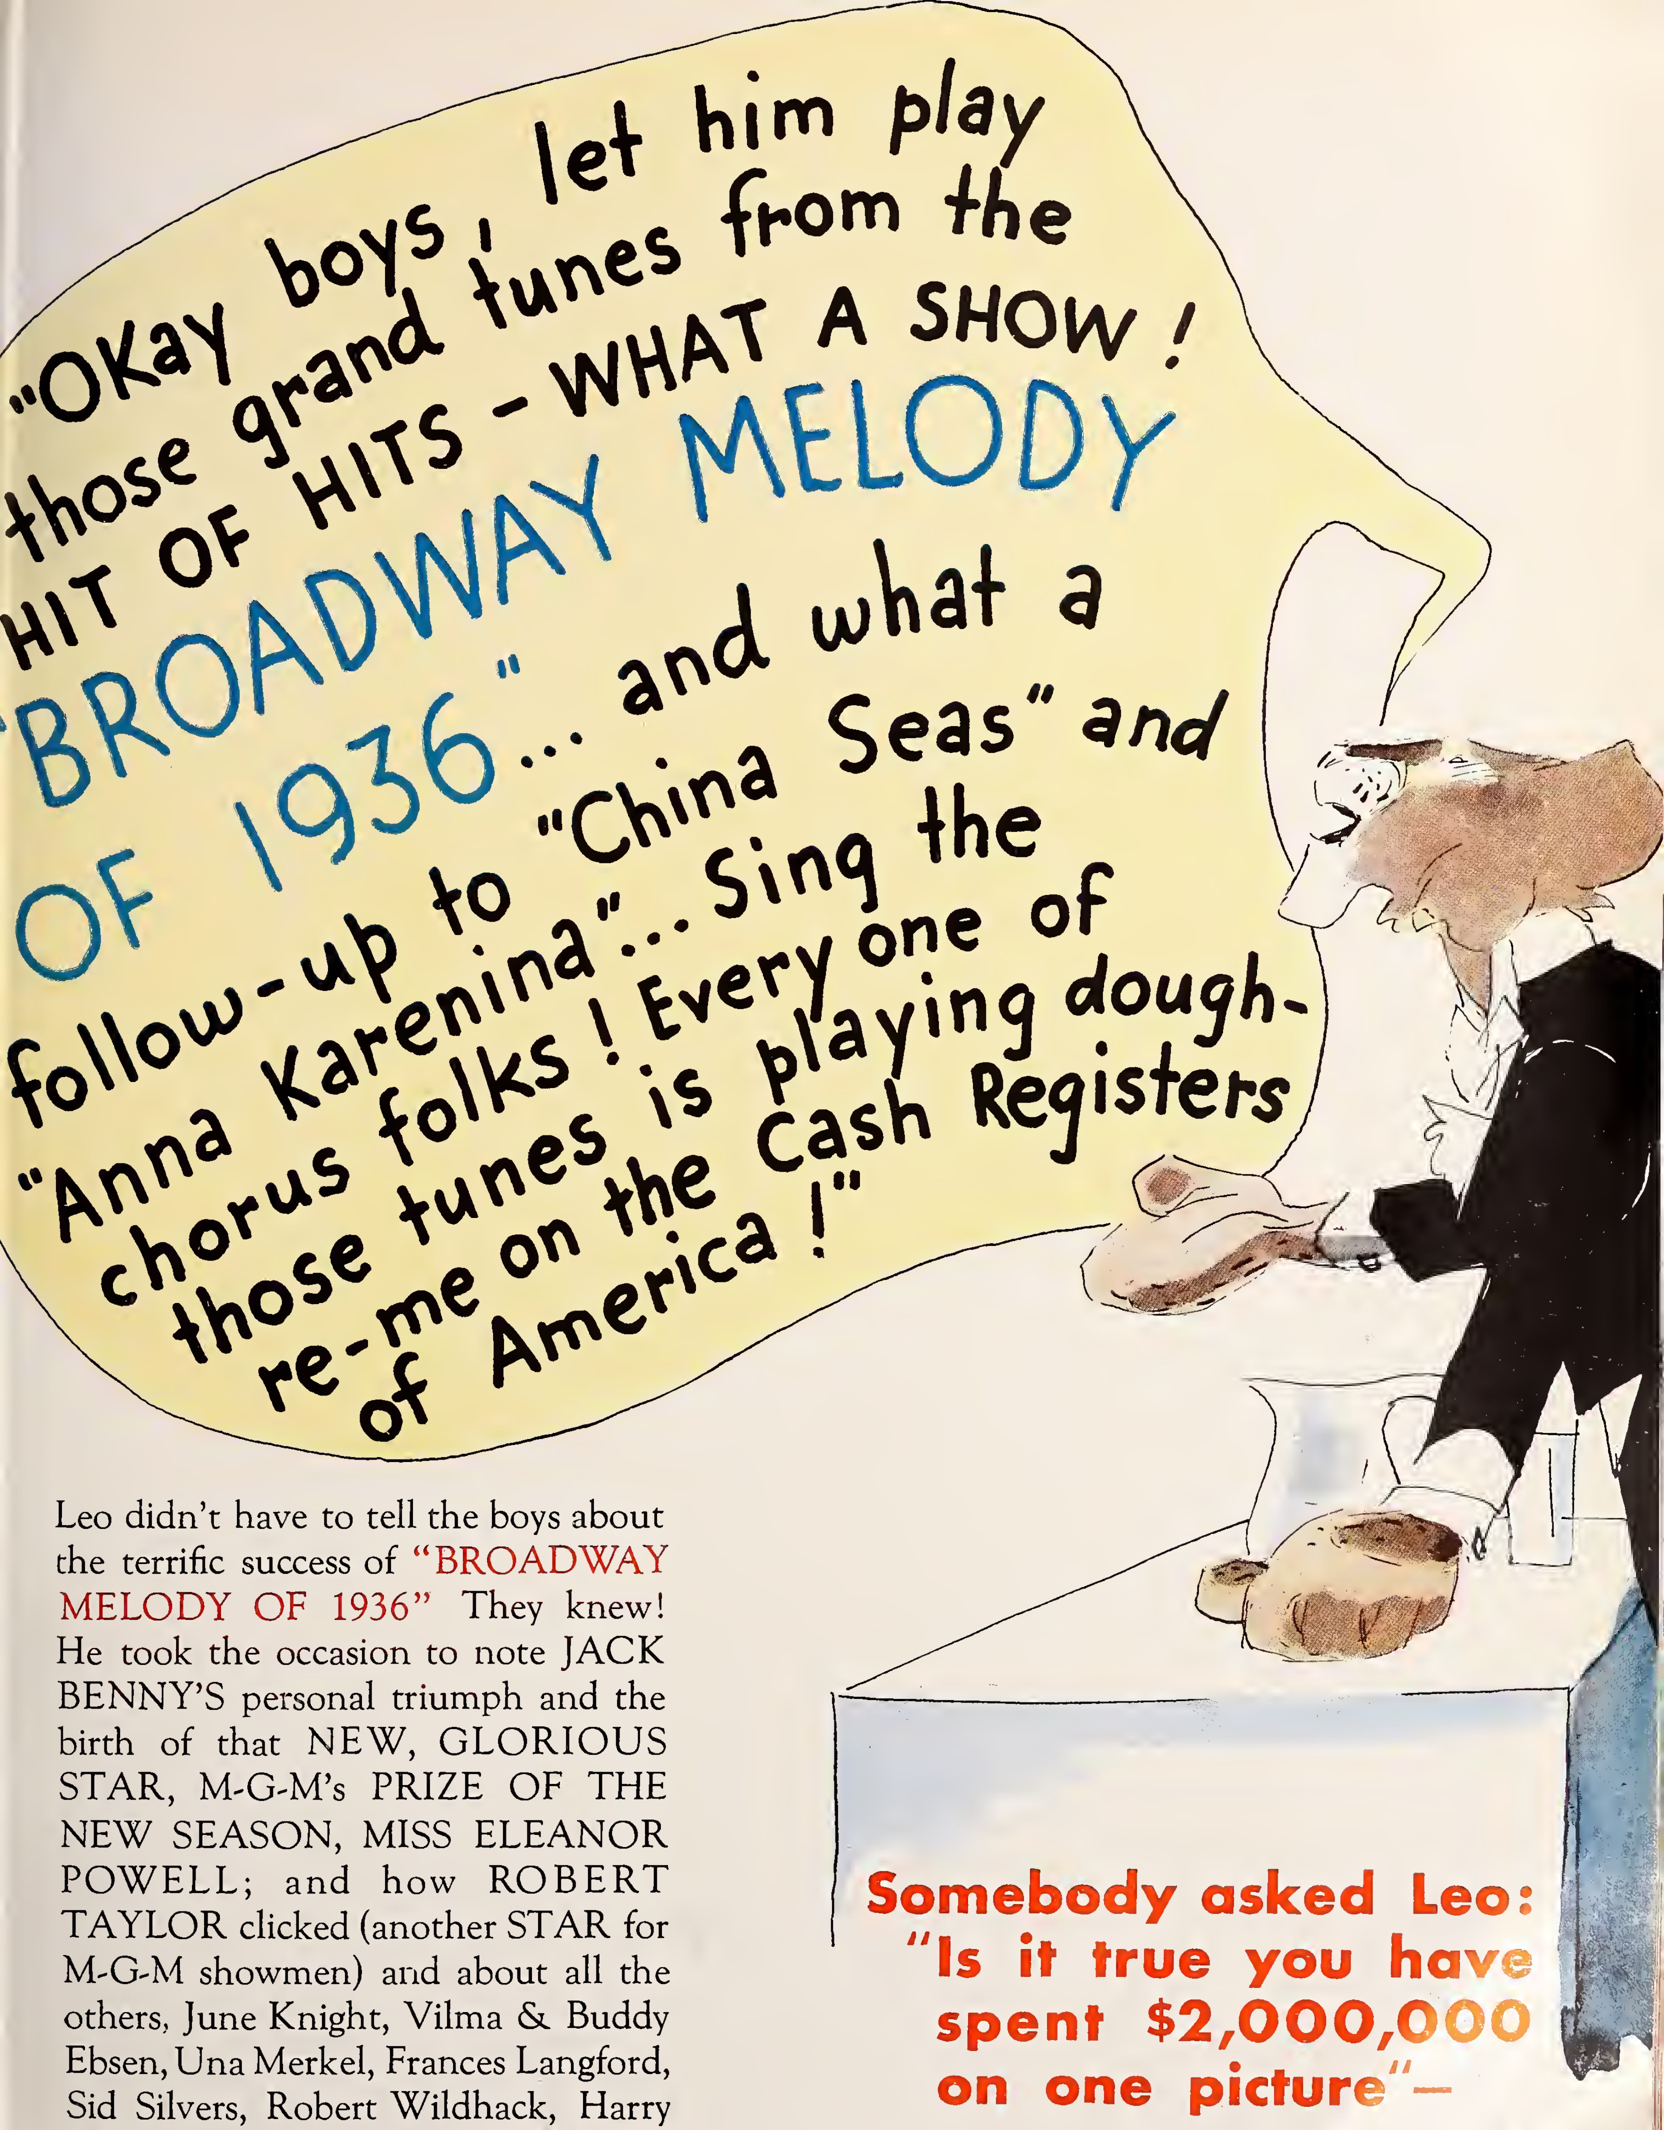
"I've got a feelin' you're foolin'"

"Broadway Rhythm"

"Sing before breakfast"

"On a Sunday afternoon"

(Sure, they're by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed, the boys who wrote those grand tunes from the earlier M-G-M "Broadway Melody.")



"OKay boys, let him play those grand tunes from the HIT OF HITS - WHAT A SHOW! "BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936"... and what a follow-up to "China Seas" and "Anna Karenina"... Sing the chorus folks! Every one of those tunes is playing dough-re-me on the Cash Registers of America!"

Leo didn't have to tell the boys about the terrific success of "BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936" They knew! He took the occasion to note JACK BENNY'S personal triumph and the birth of that NEW, GLORIOUS STAR, M-G-M's PRIZE OF THE NEW SEASON, MISS ELEANOR POWELL; and how ROBERT TAYLOR clicked (another STAR for M-G-M showmen) and about all the others, June Knight, Vilma & Buddy Ebsen, Una Merkel, Frances Langford, Sid Silvers, Robert Wildhack, Harry Stockwell, Nick Long, Jr. . . . ALL OF THEM READY FOR MORE BIG M-G-M MUSICALS!

Somebody asked Leo: "Is it true you have spent $2,000,000 on one picture"—

"When Leo told them that M-G-M was ready with a $2,000,000 picture to greet the renewed purchasing power of the public there was a spontaneous burst of applause"

—and then he told them of the huge National Magazine Campaign and described one of the ads which you see over there →

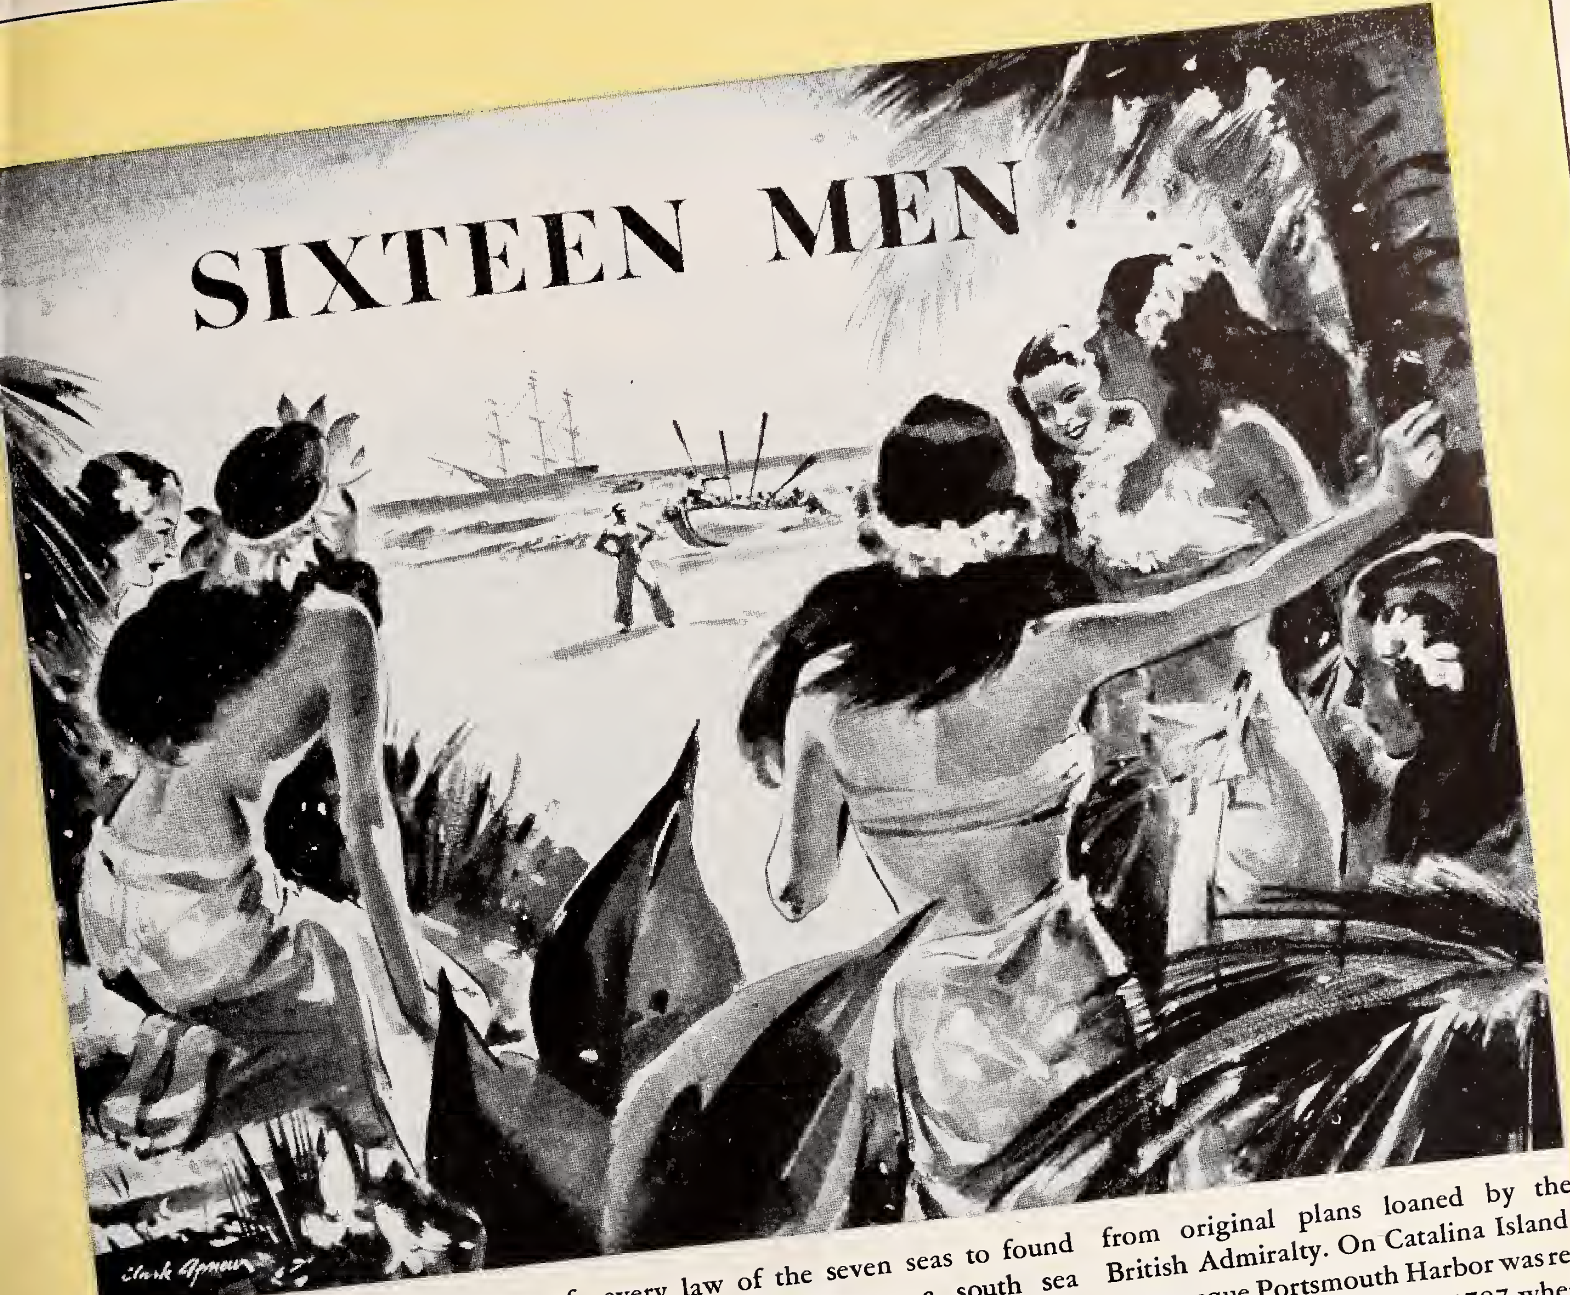
SIXTEEN MEN . . .



FROM the blood-drenched decks of a man o' war to the ecstasy of a sun-baked paradise isle... From the tyrannical grasp of a brutal captain to the arms of native beauties who brought them love and forgetfulness... came sixteen men from the "Bounty", the ship whose voyage of terror wrote a damned page in maritime history. Its red page in maritime history. Its damned record lay forgotten in the dust-covered archives of the British Museum until Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall penned the novel that thrilled more than 25,000,000 readers. Now the story of the "Bounty's" reckless, devil-may-care crew, who broke every law of the seven seas to found an island paradise on a south sea Eden is faithfully and authentically brought to the screen by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The good ships "Bounty" and "Pandora" were re-built from original plans loaned by the British Admiralty. On Catalina Island, picturesque Portsmouth Harbor was re-created exactly as it was in 1787 when the "Bounty" embarked on her historic voyage. Producer Irving Thalberg sent Director Frank Lloyd and an M-G-M production unit 14,000 miles to tropic waters to film scenes in the original locale. Six villages were erected; 5,000 natives, the total population of 40 villages, appeared in the Tahitian scenes.

Nearly two years in the making... produced at a cost of more than two million dollars, the saga of the "Mutiny on the Bounty" lives again!

ORCHIDS FOR "BROADWAY MELODY of 1936"

N. Y. Daily Mirror

"Top-notch musical. Knockout, sure-fire, ticket-selling entertainment. The dazzling feature is the generous number of new people it brings before the camera. Each gives a great show."

N. Y. American

"A show to bring joy to an group of paying guests. Metro registers triumph. Creates a new star in Eleanor Powell. 1936 a memorable year for its 'Broadway Melody'."

N. Y. Times

"Handsome, sprightly, entertaining song and dance show. Dazzling dancing by Eleanor Powell, a likeable girl. An attractive screen personality. Picture captures intimate, joyous musical comedy abandon."

N. Y. Daily News

"Recaptures the entrancing spirit of the original 'Broadway Melody'. A new star lights up the screen when film introduces a bright new face and the twinklingest pair of dancing feet that has been seen on the screen since Fred Astaire made his first appearance. They both belong to Eleanor Powell. The whole production lavishly mounted."

N. Y. Herald-Tribune

"A lively and entertaining screen musical. Eleanor Powell emerges as a definitely likeable and gay screen personage."

N. Y. Post

"Has enough sure-fire ingredients to make its country-wide success a foregone conclusion."

N. Y. Evening Journal

"Add it all up and it spells gorgeous entertainment. Everyone who had anything to do with the production can take a well-deserved bow, for this is one that justifies every superlative in the book."

N. Y. Sun

"Rousing good musical. Eleanor Powell star material. Capitol Theatre audiences watched her take her place confidently among the screen's dancing stars."

N. Y. World-Telegram

"Moves along at a terrific pace. A grand new entertainment. Beautiful, charming, talented Miss Powell is a revelation. Something to cheer about. If this review smacks of superlatives blame it on 'Broadway Melody of 1936'—it deserves them all."

AMERICANS FORCE FINISH FIGHT OF CANTON AND NANKING ON FEES

Theatre Deducts Cantonese Censorship Tax from Rental and Paramount Refuses Films; Exhibitor, Distributors Appeal

by J. P. KOEHLER
Shanghai Correspondent

Defiance of the Canton city government to the Nanking government censor rulings has reached a stage where one or the other will have to back down and acknowledge the other's supremacy.

It will be recalled that the local Cantonese government about three months ago passed a rule requiring a fee of Canton $3 a reel to be paid for each film passed. The local theatres agreed to pay this fee, but when the theatre passed it out to the distributors by deducting the fee from the rentals, the distributors refused to allow such deduction, as under the terms of the standard contract now used by all American members of the Film Board of Trade (China), all such local taxes, except when specified, must be paid by the exhibitor. Furthermore, under that contract the only censor fees paid by the distributors are those authorized by the Central government of China in Nanking, whose rules expressly state that the license certificate issued by them shall be recognized throughout the country.

This Nanking fee, which was doubled on foreign films in April, for the given reason that the expense of operating a censor board was greater than the income derived from fees, now makes the cost of censoring a program of approximately 9,000 feet from Chinese $200 up to $250, if the costs of translations, printing Chinese title, license certificate leader, transportation are added. This excessive fee has been paid, but under protests, since May 30, 1935, and there does not seem to be much prospect of a reduction.

The additional impost of the Canton censor fee is therefore justifiably resented, both from a standpoint of law and costs. Petitions have been sent to Nanking, asking the Nanking government either to make Canton abolish these illegal fees forced on the distributors, or deduct the amount from the fees paid in Nanking.

Called Subterfuge

Paramount has been "made the goat" in this present battle through the fact that a large Cantonese cinema deducted the Canton fees from Paramount's rental, and when the theatre refused to pay, Paramount shut off film supply. This immediately aroused the ire of the local theatre, which, by the way, was heavily indebted to American distributors for unpaid rentals. Thus the case is called doubly unfair to Paramount and other American distributors in that it is apparently a subterfuge to evade immediate payment of rentals already long overdue.

The Cantonese exhibitors have tried many times to put obstacles in the way of foreign films and there is a sort of Exhibitors' Guild, of which it is understood, however, that Lo Kan is not a member. The delinquent theatre appealed to the Canton authorities for aid against a foreign distributor to whom they owed money, and which was trying to collect under the terms of the contract.

American distributors in the past have been very lenient toward Chinese exhibitors and often have carried accounts for months to help out a theatre which had a ghost of a chance to carry on, as in this case. The situation grew so bad, however, and so frequently did the exhibitor try to evade payment, that steps were taken by the Film Board of Trade (China) to eradicate the evil, and now there is a rule in force that prevents delivery to a theatre whose accounts have not been satisfactorily adjusted with a distributor whose claim for rentals has been found justified.

"War" in the Open

In this particular case it does not seem possible that the distributor can lose the fight against the unjust imposition of the Canton fees. The war is in the open and it is decidedly an issue between Canton and Nanking authority. This is just what is needed to air a situation becoming increasingly confusing. It is a showdown for the Central government and the Canton government as to which is "boss."

There is little doubt that, in event that Canton does not back down and does not give Paramount its full rights, the remainder of the American distributors will refuse to service Canton, since there is no assurance that they will not obtain the same treatment, and even lose films.

The fact that certain theatres in Canton have paid the fee and not deducted it from rentals makes the situation still more difficult.

Paramount would be justified in a suit for damages against the Cantonese government should Nanking win the battle, but there is little likelihood of such a suit. The matter quite possibly would be adjusted with the minimum "loss of face" either by Nanking or Canton, as is usual in such cases. However, all Shanghai and Hongkong foreign papers have featured the story, and several editorial comments have appeared that speak strongly against the act of the Cantonese government in banning Paramount and the unjustified fees laid on the American and other foreign distributors.

The right of local censorship is not at issue, this being quite understood, but films must not be banned by local authorities once they have been passed by the Nanking censors. Even cutting is disallowed. Local taxes are covered by a special clause in all contracts, and are not obligatory upon the distributors, though it is generally understood that the local taxes up to 10 per cent may be deducted from the gross receipts before computing rentals on a percentage basis. Films sold at a flat rental charge never are subject to any deduction from the distributors' rental.

Expect Other Americans to Refuse to Service Canton If Central Government Does Not Quash Double Levy

Local abuses of cinema privilege are many and varied. In Canton it has been the practice for high authorities to demand seats for large parties, free of charge, even to the clearing out of patrons who had paid admissions. Everywhere there are abuses of that sort, but the trouble with Chinese soldiers demanding free admission is being curtailed by a rigid order in some localities by the provincial governor forbidding soldiers to attend any cinema.

The Canton business is considered a "spite" affair, engineered as an attempt to force American distributors to take it and like it; but it is more probable that the shoe will be on the other foot when the fight is over.

On the other hand, T. J. Holt, general manager of the new Shanghai Amusement Company Federation, Inc., USA, who is also a Cantonese, and is recognized as one of the leading exhibitors, the companies with which he is associated having large interests in Canton, has not expressed his opinion on the matter. This is probably a wise move, as T. J. Holt is known to be a good party man, standing well in the opinion of the Central government, besides being in the good graces of the foreign exhibitors, through his shrewd knowledge of the cinema business in China, and reputation for hard bargains but loyalty to his contractual obligations.

New Theatre at Nanking

We have just returned from a hurried trip to Nanking and while there inspected the New Capitol theatre. It's a fine job, with spacious main lobby, wide stairways curving gracefully to the upper lobby in green and silver, equally spacious, an easy slope to the balcony and loges, and from the upper lobby another wide stairway to a row of private boxes, which extend across the entire rear of the house at the top of the balcony. Decorations of the interior are in brown, buff and gold, subdued and in elegant simplicity. The 1,640 seats, throughout, are upholstered and very comfortable. The curtain is a huge, soft drape in brown shades. Lighting is indirect, pleasing and restful. The New Capitol has the latest in sound equipment and a big cooling system which, with outside temperature of 95 degrees and humidity of 87 degrees, make the house a pleasant one to sit in. This latest addition to Nanking, the capital city of China, is one of the best in the land.

Protest has been entered against the charging of double censor fees for the loss of a license card. It is bad enough to pay double fees when a film license runs out, but when the certificate is lost, as easily may happen in the mails out here, the imposition of a double fee is considered unjustifiable. An extra card is issued when a film is first censored at a charge of C $3.10. To make the charge C $200 for the loss of the card would be like asking an auto owner to pay twice the full tax if he lost or damaged a license plate! Not being a law but only an arbitrary rule of the censor board, it may be changed soon.

BE IT RESOLVED by the Executive Committee of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, speaking for the Board of Directors, that Allied States Association extends to Martin Quigley its sincere congratulations and best wishes on the occasion of his twentieth anniversary as a publisher of trade journals serving the motion picture industry.

While disagreeing with Mr. Quigley's publications from time to time as to the best methods and means of accomplishing desired ends, we are convinced that Mr. Quigley, like Allied, has been actuated by a desire to promote the stability, prestige and dignity of the motion picture business in all its branches.

We record our appreciation of the fact that regardless of editorial policy, Mr. Quigley has afforded adequate news coverage, recording the activities of those who advocate reform in the sale and distribution of films as well as of those who are the special beneficiaries of existing methods and therefore are opposed to any change therein.

RKO-RADIO PICTURES

invites you and the rest of the industry to a preview glimpse of some coming attractions:—

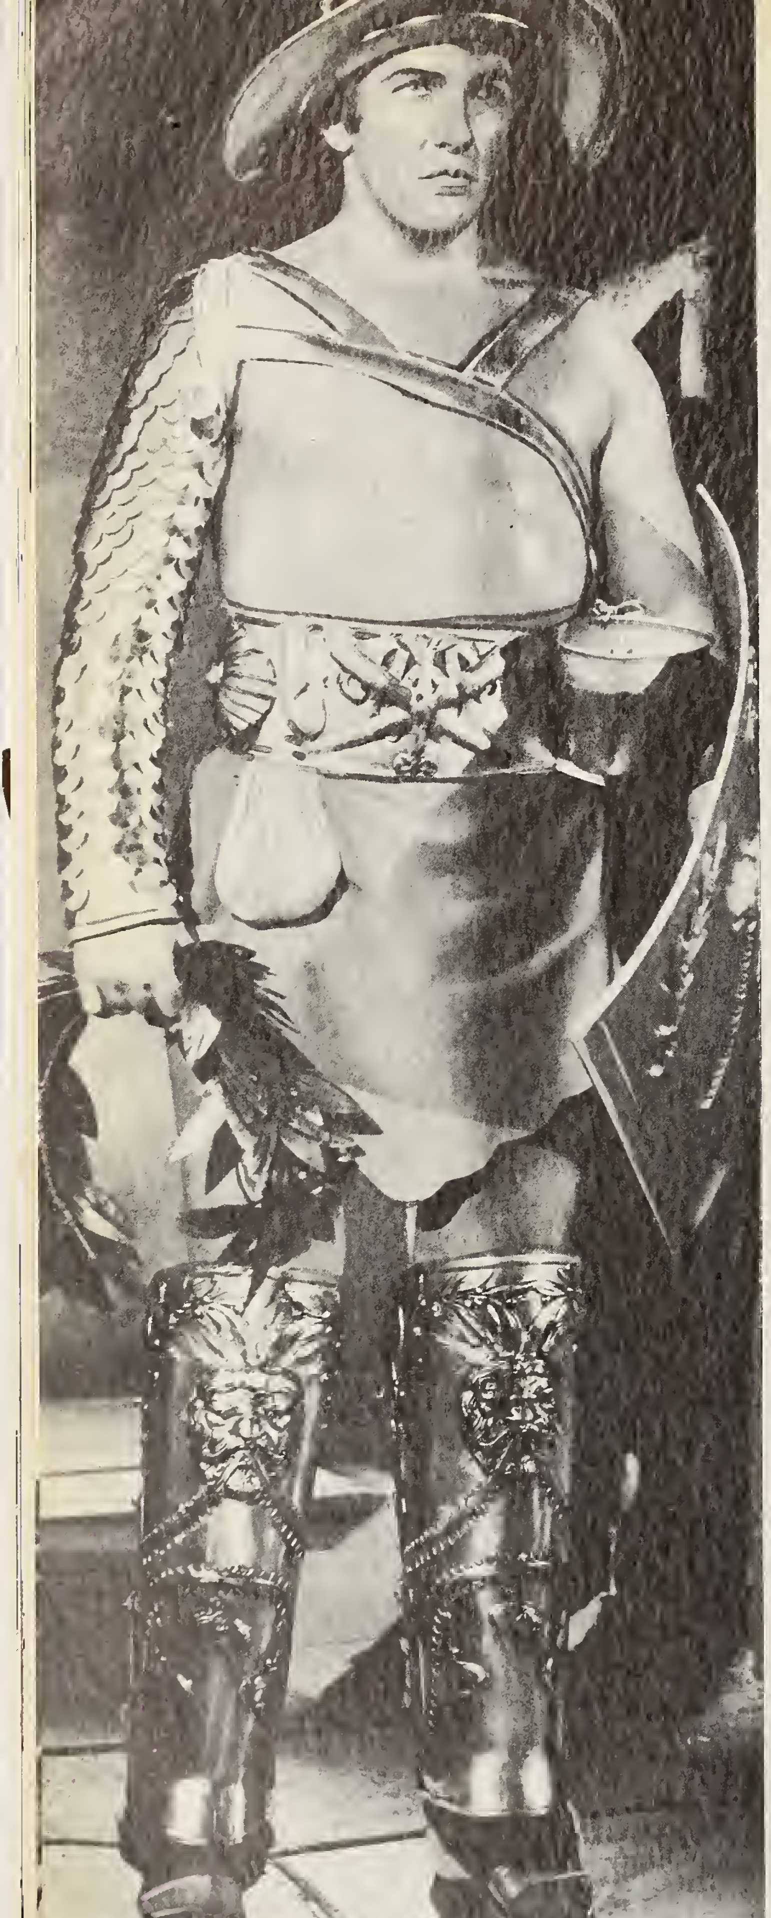
Walter Abel, Broadway stage star, a dashing, audacious D'Artagnan . . . a new screen idol to storm the heart of feminine America; Paul Lukas, as Athos; Margot Grahame, as Milady de Winter; Heather Angel, as Constance; Ian Keith, as de Rochefort; Moroni Olsen, Onslow Stevens, Rosamond Pinchot, John Qualen, Ralph Forbes, Nigel de Brulier. Screenplay by Dudley Nichols and Rowland V. Lee. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Associate Producer, Cliff Reid. Thrilling fencing duels staged by Fred Cavens.

THE THREE MUSKETEERS . . . The reckless sons of the fighting blade ride and fight and love again . . . as the grandest romance ever born from the fire-dipped pen of Dumas comes to the screen in splendor, spectacle and drama worthy of its great tradition.

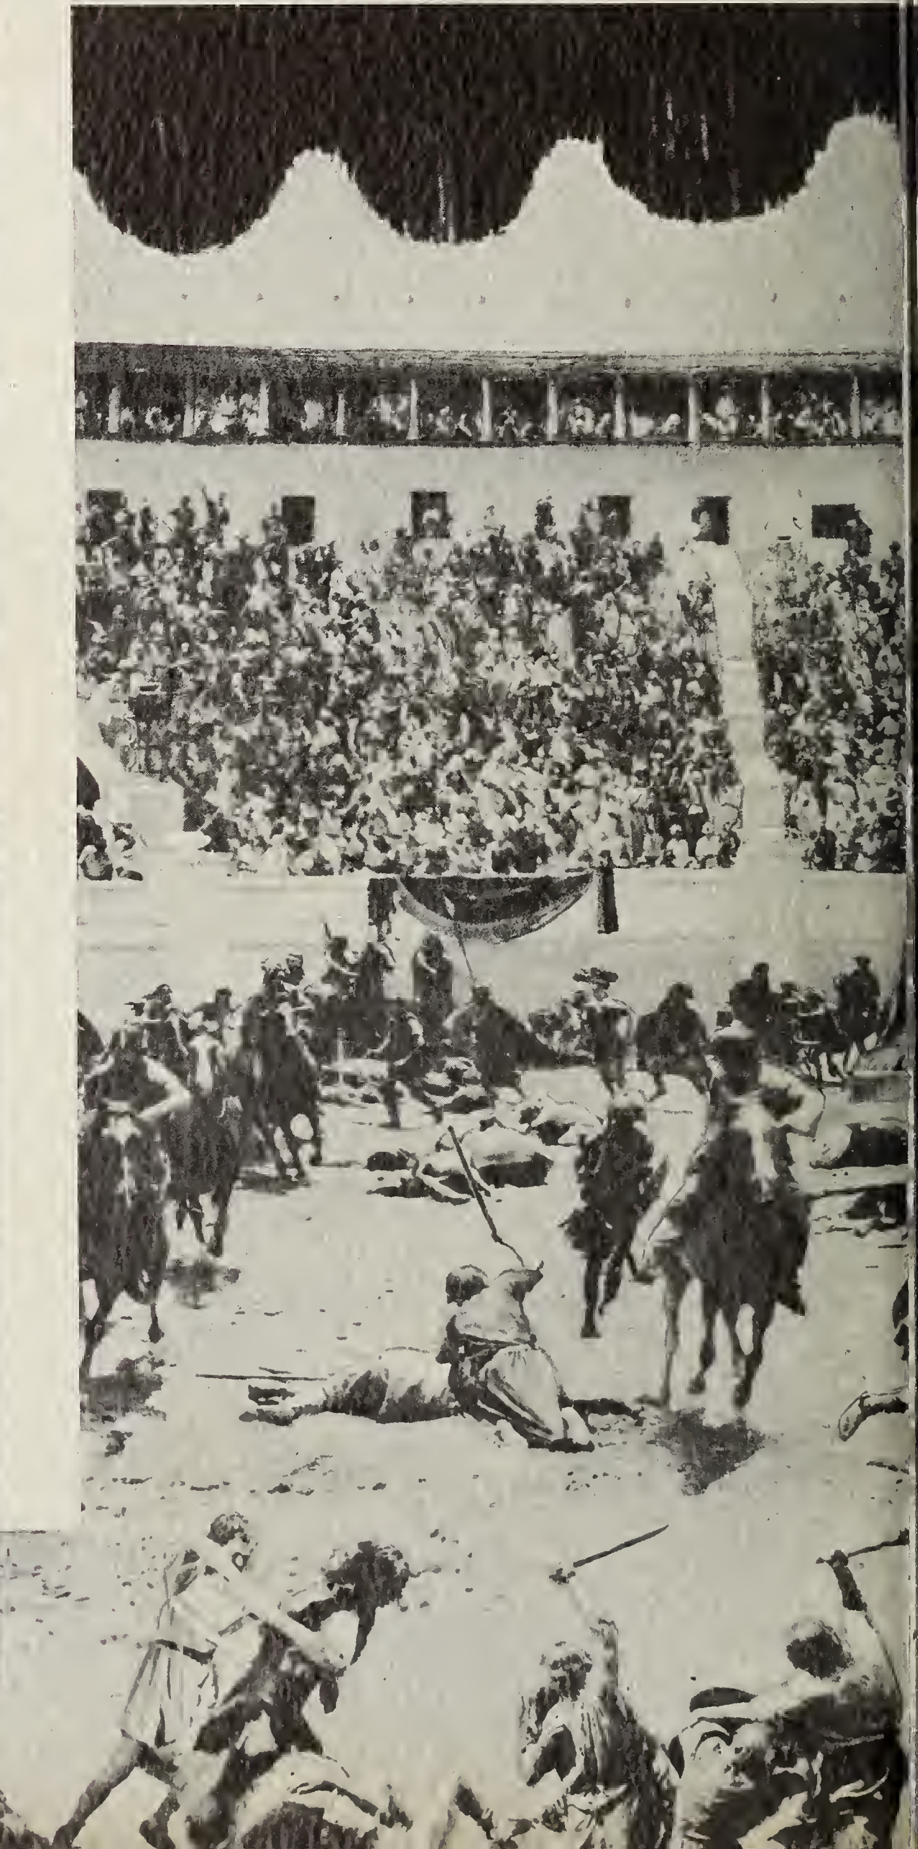
One way to tame a woman is to ignore her!

She scorned the acclaim of a world at her feet . . . but hung on his every word!

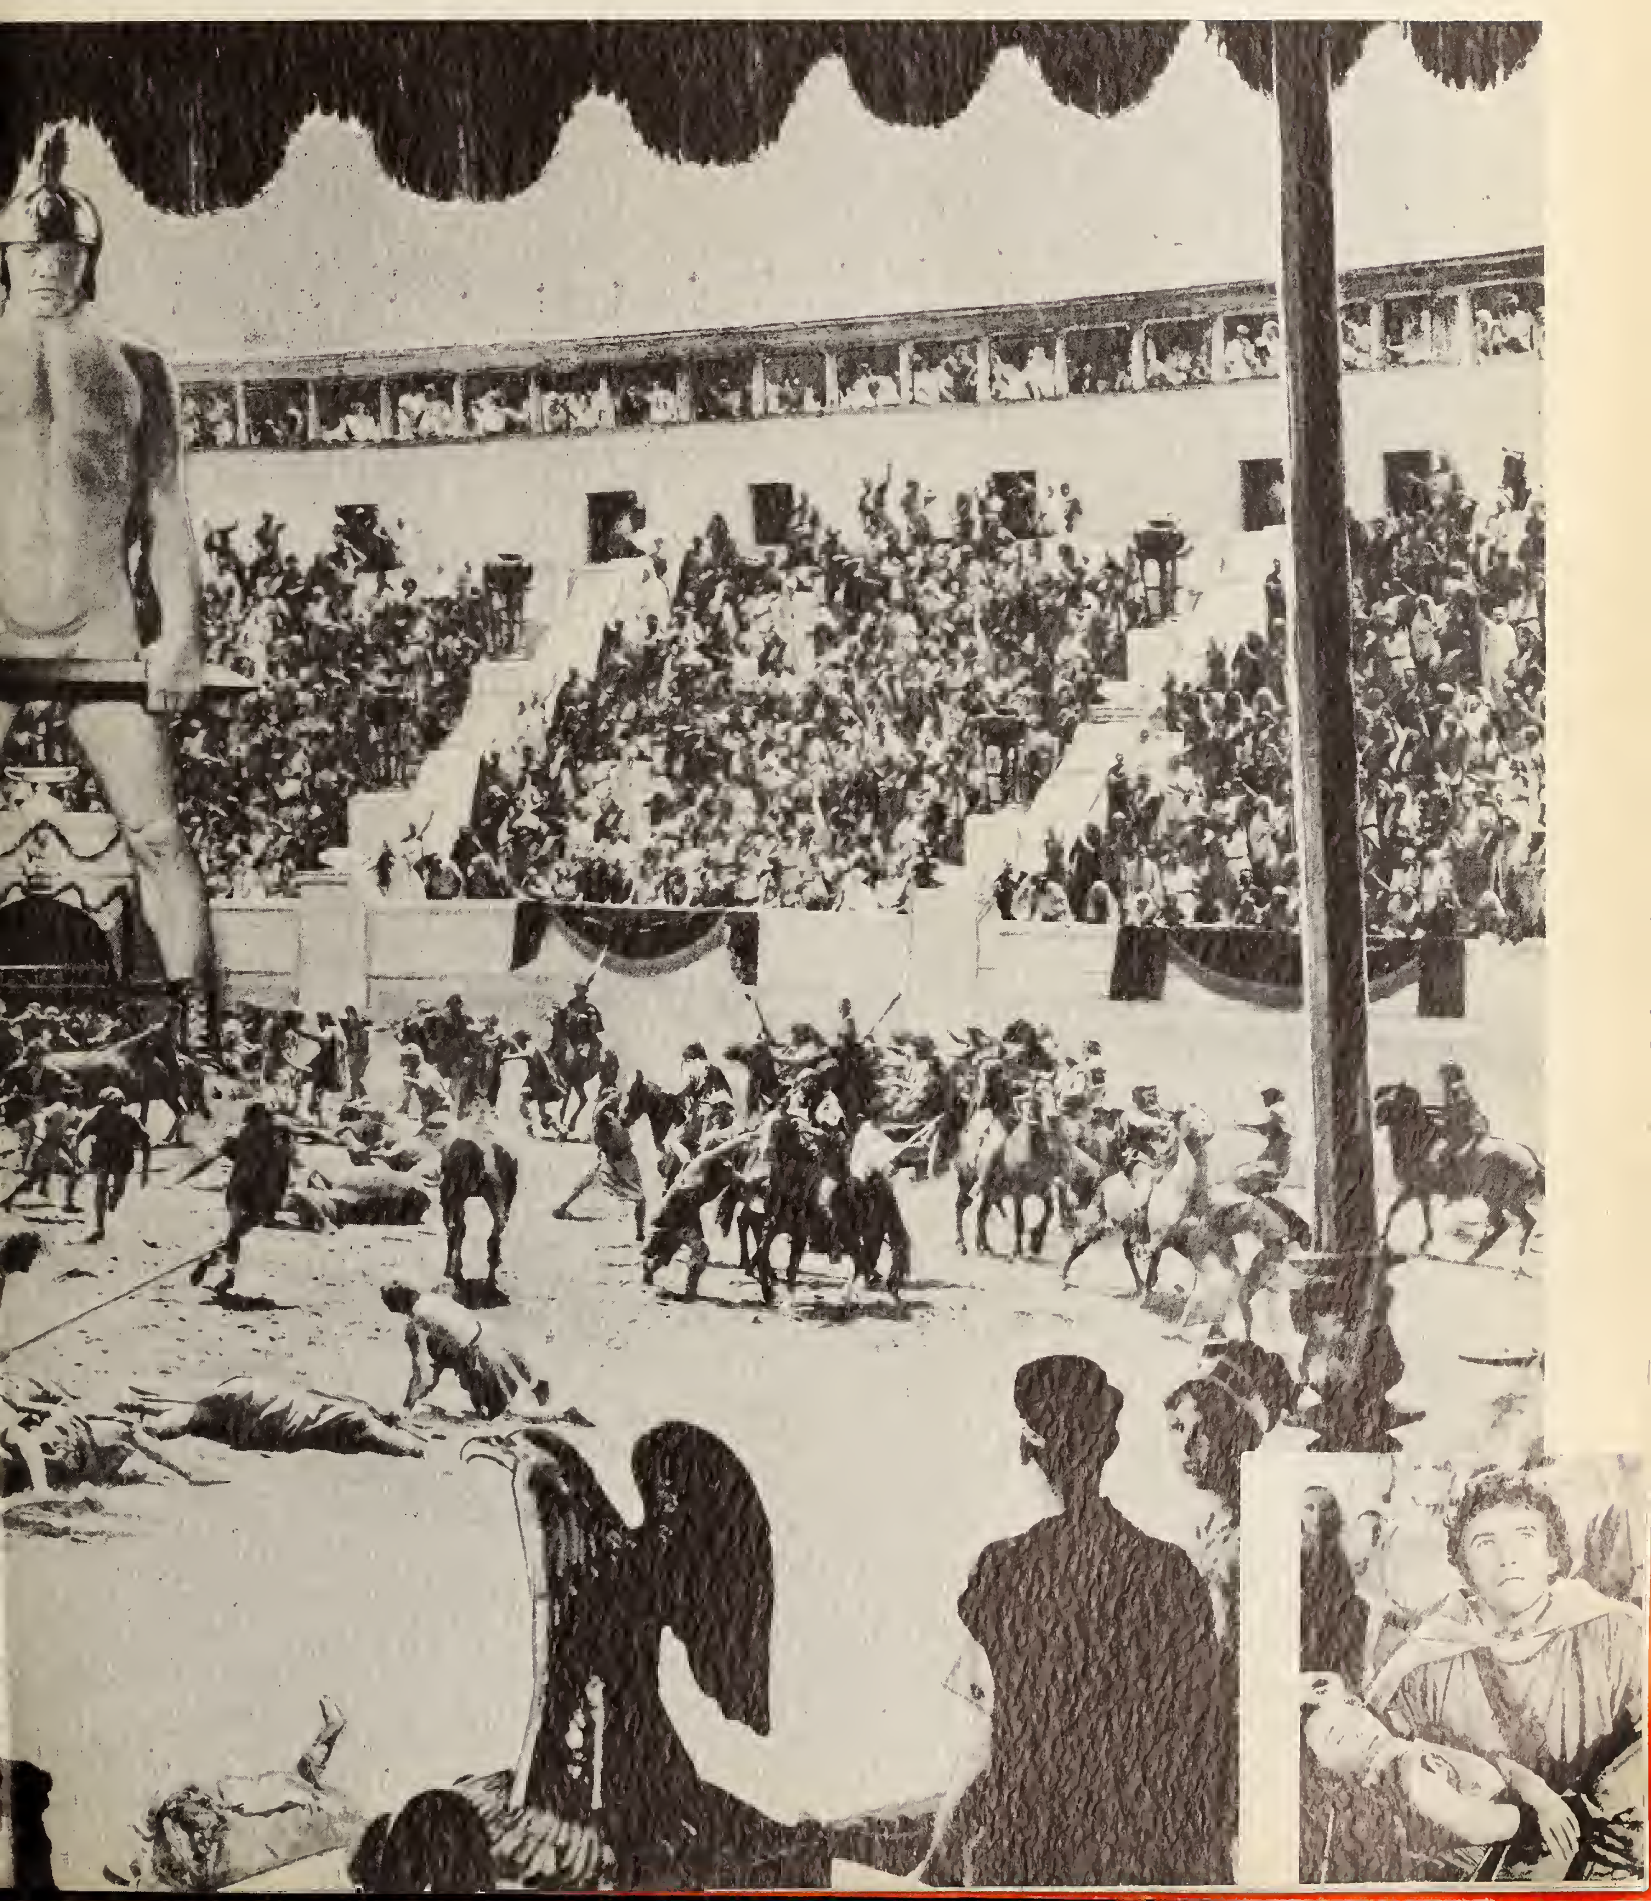
You demanded Ginger Rogers in a starring vehicle. Here it is . . . "TAMED" . . . a brilliant comedy drama by Samuel Hopkins Adams, author of "It Happened One Night" . . . An exciting romance in which a crowd-shy movie star is tamed by a real he-man . . . The he-man is George Brent. Others in the cast: Alan Mowbray, Henry Stephenson, Grant Mitchell. Directed by William Seiter. A Pandro S. Berman Production.



reston Foster, as the mightiest gladiator of all . . . The mith who rose from the smudge of his forge to the oveted throne of the Arena.



THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII . . . A dream of barbaric splendor! A feast of pagan revelry! Scenes of startling magnitude! The Pompeii of storied glory! The mighty arena with its combats! Earthquake! Seething Volcano! Mightiest of spectacles! . . . The moving background for the most human of great love stories! . . . A Merian C. Cooper Production with a cast of thousands, headed by Preston Foster, Alan Hale, Basil Rathbone, John Wood, Louis Calhern, David Holt, Dorothy Wilson, Wyrley Birch. Directed by Ernest B. Schoedsack.



A screen event the world awaits with eager anticipation . . . . the motion picture debut of Grand Opera's most glamorous diva. In a great romantic drama tentatively titled "LOVE SONG," the magnetic youthful charm of this glorious girl is given full sway . . . Lily Pons gives your screen the voice whose thrill re-echoes round the world . . . Her name gives your theatre one of the most tremendous attractions of the modern theatre. Henry Fonda is her leading man. Others in the cast: Eric Blore, Osgood Perkins, Lucien Littlefield, Esther Dale, Paul Porcasi. Music and songs by Jerome Kern, composer of "Roberta". A Pandro S. Berman Production. Directed by John Cromwell.

Annie Oakley feted by kings and princes.

Thrilling rides and raids staged by "Sitting Bull", "Rain-In-The-Face" and other famous redskins.

Here comes the troupe of riders, ropers and Indian fighters!

Preston Foster, as Toby Walker, king of the target range, who hit a bullseye in the romantic heart of Annie Oakley.

"ANNIE OAKLEY" . . . . All the pageantry of the West of yesterday . . . All the heroic figures who strode the trail toward the setting sun . . . All the lure, the color, the excitement, the drama of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show . . . all the vivid highlights of one of the most stirring chapters in the story of America . . . a background for the love story of the girl who leaped from the Ohio backwoods to the top of the circus world . . . Barbara Stanwyck as Annie Oakley, with Preston Foster, Melvyn Douglas, Moroni Olsen, Pert Kelton, Andy Clyde. Directed by George Stevens. Associate Producer, Cliff Reid.

The courage and daring that led Katharine Hepburn to masquerade as a boy in many sequences of "SYLVIA SCARLETT," and the inspired direction of George Cukor, have resulted in a picture that is indeed a worthy attraction to follow her sensational "Alice Adams." What a "boy" the electric Hepburn makes! . . . and what a glamorous woman she becomes . . . in Compton Mackenzie's absorbing novel of petty crooks and great loves! With Cary Grant, Edmund Gwenn, Natalie Paley, Dennie Moore. A Pandro S. Berman Production.

FRED ASTAIRE — GINGER ROGERS — IRVING BERLIN! Three names that have meant millions to the box-offices of America in "TOP HAT." . . . Now readying for the cameras the show that's destined to soar to the dizziest heights of all! Watch for . . . Wait for . . . Get ready for . . . "FOLLOW THE FLEET"

IMPARTIAL AND UNAFRAID

SELDOM in history have memorable events marched so rapidly, on so many news fronts, as they are marching now. Seldom has public feeling on vital issues run so high, been so sensitive. Not since the first issue of THE MARCH OF TIME has the task of selecting and presenting those events that can best be told in pictures been so exacting. Not all the events that are making 1935 a memorable year are yet ripe for telling. The beginnings of some are still obscure. The lines along which others will develop are clouded. MARCH OF TIME No. 6 photo-reports the world's most discussed problem—Ethiopia; pictures an alarming industrial crisis; examines a great contribution to the national welfare.

Against the background of these stirring times, to follow THE MARCH OF TIME regularly each month is to watch history in the making. The sixth issue promises to be more timely and telling than any to date.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS THREATEN TEST SUIT AGAINST BOOKING BAN

Subcommittee to Get Legal Opinion After Study of Cases Under Distributing Body's Action Against Book'g Combines

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

The booking controversy begins to take on the aspect of a major trade crisis with the announcement that the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association is considering the institution of a suit against the Kinematograph Renters' Association in order to test the legality of the recent action of that body against booking combines.

The official announcement from the Council of the CEA is that a subcommittee of the Legal Committee is to be appointed "to examine all cases which come under the KRS booking policy, to take the best legal opinion and, if so advised, to take proceedings to test the matter in the Law Courts."

Unofficially, it is understood that the CEA has already received legal encouragement for its view that the recent KRS resolution can be attacked as a conspiracy and an agreement in restraint of trade and contrary to public policy. It is uncertain whether a test action, if decided upon, will be taken against the Society, or against individual members, or both. At the time of the first G-B-Hyams-Union dispute it was believed that one of the parties contemplated suing every distributing company separately.

Protests KRS Policy

In announcing the decision, the CEA Council also indicates its strong opposition, on grounds of trade policy, to the attitude stated by the KRS—which may be summarized as a refusal to accept bookings for any theatre except from a party providing proof of a majority financial and voting control.

"The policy of the KRS is neither in the interests of the trade as a whole nor in the interests of the independents," says the report. . . . "If the pronouncement goes unchallenged . . . in relation to modern structures, 1,250-1,500 seaters and upwards . . . the only buyers would be the circuits. The proprietors, as competition increases, might have to decide to clear out of the business and take the best offer obtainable from the groups.

"Under the KRS policy, the circuits can extend and those cinemas affected can only stand still until they are forced to sell at a knockout price. . . . Very few individual exhibitors could today extend within the KRS pronouncement, because they have not the money themselves to acquire majority of the share capital."

The CEA further attacks the KRS policy on the general grounds that:

"It automatically stops any progress for existing independents and leaves them in a limited position, to be shot at to the ultimate detriment of the value of their cinemas. . . . It practically makes their cinemas non-negotiable, except at give-away prices, to any but the circuits with a production side."

Before this CEA pronouncement so plainly classified the dispute as an exhibitor-distributor clash on general principles, trade interest had chiefly centered on the specific case of the Gaumont-British purchase of the H. & G. theatres. The KRS has not yet advised G-B whether it accepts as a legitimate transaction the transfer of these halls to Gaumont-British Super Cinemas Ltd., and it is common knowledge that it is being pressed for a decision and for a particularized statement of any reasons which may lead it to classify the G-B-H. & G deal as a booking combine.

It is also practically certain that, if KRS members refuse to trade with the G-B-H. & G subsidiary, legal action will be taken by G-B independent of any which may be initiated by the CEA, in which case the latter may get the ruling they want without the trouble of initiating proceedings.

The Rentals Problem

Several other events of the past ten days have emphasized the fact that the booking circuit controversy is simply another manifestation of the fundamental clash between exhibitors and distributors on rentals. John Maxwell, president of the KRS, in a very significant interview in the "Cinema," freely admits that the KRS policy is designed to maintain prices and goes on to state that such action is essential in order to save the British producer from extinction. "If rentals fall in this country, the American renter would lose only part of his profit, but the British producer-renter . . . is working on a very small margin of profit and if his rentals are reduced he is going to be put out of business."

The Maxwell statement, with its emphasis on the identity of interest between British and American distributors, is calculated to deprive the CEA of a very useful controversial weapon; the predominance of American companies in the KRS, which before now have been quoted in order to give a suggestion of "American dictation" to any policy not favored by the British exhibitor. The suggestion has underlain many proposals that exhibitors should ask Parliament for relief from too-onerous trading conditions. This threat of "going to the Government"—once again revived in connection with the booking circuit dispute—has never been regarded as over-serious and it is difficult to see what force it has if the British film producer lines up with the "foreigner."

Gaines Joins Agency

William P. Gaines, former New York columnist for the Associated Press, has joined Kenyon and Eckhardt, Inc., 247 Park Ave., New York, as director of publicity. Mr. Gaines has been connected with motion picture magazines in the past, having been assistant managing editor of Photoplay and executive editor of Screen Play.

Kennedy Resigns Commission Post

The resignation of Joseph P. Kennedy as chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, submitted some time ago, has been accepted by President Roosevelt and Mr. Kennedy has announced he is "out of politics and public offices for the rest of my natural life."

The resignation of Mr. Kennedy was marked by an exchange of correspondence that attested strong personal ties between himself and the President. The SEC chairman seldom went to the President's office but was a frequent dinner guest at the White House.

James M. Landis, professor of legislation at Harvard Law School, has been elected by members of the SEC as Mr. Kennedy's successor.

Mr. Kennedy, a Boston banker, entered the film business by purchasing FBO, later selling the company to the Radio Corporation of America, which changed the title to RKO. He then became active in Pathe Exchange, subsequently becoming producer of the Gloria Swanson pictures for release through United Artists. When Pathe sold out and merged with RKO, Mr. Kennedy retired in 1933 from the business.

Reservations Heavy For "Dream" Opening

Approximately 650 requests have been received for reservations for the opening of Max Reinhardt's production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Hollywood Theatre in New York on October 9th, according to Warner Brothers executives.

The film will be shown at the theatre twice daily starting the day after the opening and tickets will be sold on a reserved basis only.

Many of the stars in the picture are expected in New York for the opening, including James Cagney, Joe E. Brown, Dick Powell, Jean Muir, Victor Jory, Verree Teasdale, Hugh Herbert, Anita Louise, Frank McHugh, Ross Alexander, Ian Hunter, Mickey Rooney, Olivia de Havilland, Hobart Cavanaugh, Grant Mitchell and others. Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, is also expected to come on from Hollywood for the opening and Mr. Reinhardt is sailing soon from the continent to be present.

New Hungarian Film Decree Changes Quota

Under the new Hungarian government film decree, which requires theatres to show ten per cent of all films in the Hungarian language and allows one-half of this quota to be dubbed foreign films, the quota for the year starting Jan. 1, 1936, will be raised to fifteen per cent Hungarian language films of which two-thirds may be foreign pictures dubbed in Budapest.

Distribution Began with Complex And It Still Is Complexing

Twenty Years of Cycles, and Program Wheel Keeps on Grinding

Distribution's story is a series of cycles and circles.

Distribution began with program buying, or selling, and after 20 years of cut-and-try experience, the motion picture industry is back at programming, under other labels, and with various variations—but it is still programming.

The autumn of 1915 ushered in the era of star dominance in film production. Those were the days when the question, "Who's in it?" arose as the initial query about any picture. It is still an important question now, but it was the only important one then.

The industry had had about ten years of program evolution then. The General Film Company, the Mutual Film Corporation and Universal Film Manufacturing Company were selling "complete service," programs. Up to that point motion picture concerns had set themselves up on the assumption that customers, theatres, were to be exclusive customers, to know no other source of pictures. Features, breaking through the ceiling of convention, "Quo Vadis," "Judith of Bethulia," "Cabiria," "The Birth of a Nation," and the like, disturbed the pattern, could not and did not conform to the pattern. They started outside the formulated nickelodeon industry and percolated downward into it and breaking it open at the top.

A tremendously distraught period ensued. The exhibitor has to have programs to assure continued operation. He had to have features to keep abreast of the developments of the day forced upon him by competition. He bought programs—service—and betimes shelved it to give playing time to features that were "spot-booked." The program makers strove mightily to turn out a flow of feature product from the grind studios that had grown up to make a flood of one and two-reel pictures, and the feature concerns strove to make the equivalent of a program flow of feature product. General disintegrated under the old policy, losing its producers the while, Mutual went into a deceptive decline with a management that did not have the courage of its convictions, and Universal went through the ordeals of rebirth.

Rise of Feature Companies

Feature concerns arose and became program companies, first and foremost Paramount, distributing Famous Players and Lasky products, taking in such other passing items as Bosworth and kindred feature beginnings, and in the picture were Triangle Film Corporation, born of a secession from Mutual, World Film Corporation, which came into being because Lewis J. Selznick was tired of selling diamonds, and, among others, V. L. S. E.—meaning Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig, Essanay—the endeavor of a group of Patents Company participants to outlive their own stubborn inelasticity as epitomized in General Film Company. Also there came now Metro, largely because Richard Rowland still had capital and ambition left after selling his exchanges to General.

Competition had come to the boiling point. There were too many alleged programs of features and not enough real product to support so many programs. Out of this came the selling of something less than all-time, exclusive program service, in two forms: booking of blocks of product and bookings of star series. It began to be admitted that the exhibitor might be permitted, even expected, to do business with more than one.

The star series selling and various other related applications of the less-than-complete-service notion took no small part of its precedence and inspiration from the fracturing of selling tradition by the impact of Charles Chaplin, as the first, and probably only, star of weight and footpounds of box office energy to overwhelm the time-established system of an industry. Chaplin began as an obscure player in Keystone comedies, released on the Mutual program. He was taken by Essanay of the General group and soon became a special release outside the General program, in the chaotic later days of that concern. In 1915 a general pursuit of Chaplin by many producers ensued and at the end of it John R. Freuler, president of Mutual, had Chaplin on a contract for 12 two-reel pictures to be made in a year at a total of salary and bonus in the sum of $670,000, which was very much more than the Mutual program could do anything about. Chaplin's Lone Star Mutual comedies in consequence were sold on a basis still unique in film distribution, first-run to all applicants, regardless of programs and affiliations, 50 dollars a day, and scaling downward, but always open to any and all customers

Then Mutual's Star Series

The Chaplin Lone Star selling had hardly demonstrated itself as a method of distribution when Mutual followed with star series. Its idea was better than its stars. Lewis J. Selznick, outgrowing World Film Corporation, departed and disappeared, emerging presently with Clara Kimball Young, the World's best, in a star series sold on a franchise plan. He not long after added Norma Talmadge, then Constance Talmadge and others. The Mutual star series had been a mere annoyance to Adolph Zukor in his rapid rise with Paramount's program, headed by Mary Pickford, but the Selznick attack, with Selznick high pressure behind it, was more than an annoyance. It was a menace. From Mr. Zukor came Paramount's Artcraft, a device for series selling of a group of major star products, a cut above Paramount's average, and Reelart, which was intended to sell star series a shade below. Selznick was thereby to be surrounded. Artcraft was not so powerful as expected, Paramount did very well on the average and Reelart was not quite. The next step followed the old pattern of "if you can't lick 'em join 'em." Mr. Zukor bought into the Selznick concern and made it Select, which became somewhat more programish.

Meanwhile Mr. Zukor's control of box office values put so much pressure on important first-run exhibitors that they began to think of methods of escape and relief. First National Exhibitors' circuit was born, a direct result of the distributors' endeavor to get as much as possible and the exhibitors' endeavor to buy for as little as possible. First National began as a syndicate of buying power engaged in direct dealing with stars—Pickford, Chaplin and others—who were thereby made producers. Presently First National became, as a result of inevitable forces inherent in theatre buying habits, a franchise concern selling, in terms of franchise, a program, without exhibitor coloration.

While all this was going on there came Goldwyn Pictures, with star series promotions, and numerous variants of selling methods, and Metro rehabilitated under the auspices of Marcus Loew, whose theatres were feeling selling pressures from the producers. The competition of star series and feature programs was getting more complex, more intense. Series and programs gave way to "blocks" of product.

Still Complexing

Concurrently when the problem of how much the traffic would bear in rentals fetched up against fact, when the irresistible force of necessary supply hit the post of defended demand, percentage selling came into the picture. The distributor who insisted the picture was worth more met the answer that he could have more in the ratio in which the product got more. That was a simple answer with complex consequences. It is still complexing.

Today the result of the struggle between seller and buyer finds distribution interest in varying degree in something close to a third of the theatres on this continent, the theatres which take in probably close to two-thirds of the gross revenue of the industry, with endless interlocking deals and relations. Production still tends to stand slightly apart as a well defined field by itself, while exhibition and distribution run through an array of patterns varying from surviving independent examples of the simplicity of 1915 to the confusion of circuits and affiliates that officers, stockholders and courts are these days trying to explain to themselves. Distribution of motion pictures is burdened with considerable duplication of physical equipments and labors, not however in greater degree than commonly obtains in American industry.

Currently the trend is toward more intensive effort, in production, distribution and mayhap in exhibition where it is closely linked to distribution—but the great institution of the motion picture theatre, exhibition, the exhibitor, demands a flow of product, a flow that promises to keep the box office busy all year—and that is a program.

Two Decades of Exhibition Tell Story of Changes Overnight

Theatre Grows Despite Gas and Colic from Conflicting Feeding Formulas

by A-MIKE VOGEL

The length of 20 years is relative.

That span of time in the usual business may match the speed of a growing tree but the progress of motion picture exhibition in the past 20 years can be measured in terms of almost overnight change and growth.

The year 1915 saw the nation's exhibition map fairly well established. Circuits had developed rapidly from the converted storeroom movie days when for five cents Captain John Smith could be viewed escaping from his Indian pursuers across the tennis courts of New York's Central Park. The industry, still in its since widely publicized infancy, fared well despite conflicting feeding formulas, some of which produced varying degrees of gas and colic.

In New England were to be found the Gray Theatres, even then itching for the soothing hand if not the probing finger of Harold B. Franklin. Mr. Franklin was manager of the Hippodrome theatre in Buffalo. He reported quite a few of his campaigns to the exploitation departments of the trade publications.

Twin Features Are Born

New England, too, is credited with the birth of double features which, after many vicissitudes, in 1935 reached the screens of the major circuit houses on Broadway and other of their metropolitan units.

It is also to be noted that in 1915 the Gem theatre, in Haverhill, Mass., which competitors sometimes called the "Germ," was operated by an exhibitor named Louis B. Mayer.

Out in California, about to become "golden," there were other names whose influence even then was being felt. Sol Lesser, the Gore brothers and Adolph Ramish were traveling by different paths to a mutual meeting point where in 1920 they came upon Harry Arthur. The meeting eventuated in West Coast Theatres with Mr. Arthur as the general manager. Later the property of William Fox, West Coast was to be headed by Harold Franklin and still later, during the Harley Clarke regime, again by Harry Arthur. Now in other banking hands, West Coast is operated by Spyros and Charles Skouras, who originated in St. Louis, where Mr. Arthur, through his connection with Fanchon & Marco, plaintiff, is currently engaged with the federal courts of law in a Government suit against Warner, RKO and Paramount.

The Skourases in St. Louis

The Skouras brothers, including the younger George, now directing the circuit in the New York area known as the Fox Metropolitan Theatres, helped to make exhibition history in the Missouri city. They were among the original First National franchise holders and among their proud possessions was the Grand Central, ace uptown house.

Featured here was the late Gene Rodemich, leader of one of the early "hot" orchestras, the heat being turned on for the newsreels and custard-pie comedies.

That pie-throwing short subjects knew no class distinction is indicated by the booking as far back as 1914 of these pastry-heaving divertisements by Joseph Jefferson McCarthy at the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia. Here was first introduced the two-a-day reserved seat motion picture at a dollar-top, the policy inaugurated with "Cabiria."

The reserved seat policy still clicks today in certain spots such as the Mullin and Pinanski Oriental in Boston, at Charles Picquet's Carolina at Pinehurst, N. C., and at the Radio City Music Hall, where W. G. Van Schmus, former advertising executive and business man, is proving an able "friend of the Sweeneys."

The Stanley Operation

Mr. McCarthy with long years of successful legitimate road show handling was brought to Philadelphia by the Keith interests to co-partner the operation of the Chestnut Street Opera House.

Neither vaudeville or legitimate attractions being available, Mr. McCarthy turned to pictures but found his way blocked by the Stanley circuit, which had tied up tightly and completely all available product.

The beginnings of the Stanley operation trace back to Sigmund Lubin, producer of Lubin Pictures in the gala Patents Company era. Forced to discontinue his exhibition interests, Mr. Lubin turned over his houses to the late Stanley Mastbaum.

> ### TRIED ONE EPISODE BEFORE BUYING
> There was a grocer in a Rhode Island textile center years ago who also ran the town movie upstairs above the store and operated only when a sufficient audience showed up to make it worthwhile building a fire to warm the auditorium.
>
> Passing through one weekend, we noted he was advertising the eighth episode of the then popular "Perils of Pauline" and asked him how the previous chapters of the serial had gone over.
> "Don't know," he said, "this is the first one I'm playing. Couldn't get the others that come before so took this one to see how the folks like it before I buy the rest."

With the advent of J. J. McCarthy in the Philadelphia exhibition picture, the Stanley circuit expanded. Other names associated with it included the late Harry Schwalbe, John McGurk, Abe Sablotsky. These also were concerned with the upbuilding of First National Pictures, the first exhibitor-enfranchised producing company and organized by the late J. D. Williams.

Mr. McCarthy, having no other alternative, turned to the dollar-top scale and following "Cabiria," which had met with success, came Selig's "The Spoilers," each engagement accompanied by carefully selected Keystone comedies featuring that bakery "heave-ho." Both pictures were commercially sequels to George Kleine's importation of "Quo Vadis."

Incidentally, it is announced that Warner Brothers, recognizing the amusement-vitality of the famed Keystones are about to release a new series with many of the original pie-throwers in the cast.

It remains to be seen whether the present generation of picture fans nurtured on an unlimited diet of machine-gun screen fare will accept the innocuous custard-pie as a satisfactory substitute.

"Birth of a Nation"

Having established the success of the dollar-top picture show, Mr. McCarthy was called upon by producer David Wark Griffith in 1915 to handle "Birth of a Nation" nationally. The success of the picture is too well known to need repeating here. Through Mr. McCarthy's insistence, the top was raised successfully to two dollars and the picture's influence on the technique of exhibition lived long after it.

Among the "Birth's" company managers was Claud Saunders, later to be labeled with the title of "father of motion picture exploitation."

In passing it may be noted that one evening during the Chicago engagement, a young newspaperman, Martin Quigley by name, took his place in the long line at the name, took his place in the long line at the box-office. (P. S. He paid for his ticket.)

The Lynch Banner

Covering the Southland like the fabled dew were the activities of the S. A. Lynch enterprises, headed by that vigorous exhibitor, distributor, manufacturer of Tanlac and among other things owner of the Atlanta ball team franchise. In 1915 the Lynch banner had enlisted a host of followers, many eventually to march at the head of their own legions.

There was Y. Frank Freeman, at that time concerned with the distribution of Famous-Players product in Atlanta, the pictures of that company and Realart being distributed in 11 southern states by the Lynch organization. In 1920 Mr. Freeman became general manager of the company, which had then become Southern Enterprises, and today sits with Mr. Lynch at the council table of Publix Theatres.

Dan Michalove, now assistant to S. R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, started with Mr. Lynch in 1915 at Ashville, N. C., and in 1920 became general manager of the Lynch theatres.

Others of today's circuit heads, then Lynch men, include E. J. Sparks, R. B. Wilby, H. F. Kincey, Wm. Jenkins and Louis Dent. Their careers are as colorful as that of their leader. Also writing theatre history in the South were the Saenger brothers and E. N. Richards. And M. A. Lichtman, fresh out of Cornell, started as an exhibitor at Muscle Shoals. He tired of waiting for the Government and in partnership with Tony Sudekum built up the present Malco circuit.

Mr. Michalove instituted revolutionary changes in circuit booking and aided in making workable the percentage system of rentals inaugurated in 1919 at Southern Enterprises and put into operation eventually by all major distributing companies.

And that's why checkers were born.

Harold Franklin, Theatre Surgeon

Southern Enterprises was bought by Famous-Players Lasky in 1922 and soon after came Harold Franklin to continue his theatre pruning and general surgery.

Mr. Franklin, seeking an outlet for his ideas on circuit operation, was first given an opportunity by S. R. Kent, then general manager of Famous-Players Lasky and its affiliated theatre interests, to work some magic upon the Gray circuit of theatres in New England.

He did a satisfactory job for Mr. Kent and his duties were widened until he was placed in charge of all the film company's theatres, which later were to become a prominent part of the Publix organization. Shortly after that came about Mr. Franklin transferred his activities to Fox West Coast and afterwards dabbled in production, sponsoring a number of artistic stage and screen successes.

Publix really started in Chicago, where the five Balabans and the single Katz were rising from a circuit of camp-chair nickelodeons to national de luxe prominence.

The first of the B & K de luxers was the Central Park theatre, opened only after a hectic period of construction when weekly the tills of the outside businesses of the partners and their relatives were tapped to meet impatient payrolls.

After many disheartening setbacks, the Central Park threw open its doors to a delighted Chicago. Among its early patrons was the former Mrs. Julius Rosenwald, who, stopping at the box office one afternoon, discovered she had mislaid her purse. The doorman on duty recognized Mrs. Rosenwald and ushered her immediately to a seat in the mezzanine. Pleased with the reception, upon returning home the wife of the late mail-order tycoon related to Mr. Rosenwald an account of the afternoon's adventure, including a kind word for the management.

THE CRASHING BOTTLE DID NOT FAZE ORGANIST

At the Missouri Theatre, in St. Louis, during the regime of Bill Goldman, featured organists were an important part of the program. And it so happened one week in the prohibition era while the maestro was doing his stuff, the silent house distinctly heard the familiar crash of a bottle upon the stone lobby floor.

Without batting an eye, the organist switched over from his vox humanas to a minor key rendition of "How Dry I Am" while the house laughed and applauded.

Mr. Rosenwald was interested, especially in those details concerning the luxury of the theatre and the long lines at the boxoffice. He made it a point to observe the operations of the B & K partners. When they went out for financing a chance approach to Mr. Rosenwald found him interested and willing.

Other banking interests scented the delicate and enticing odor of theatre dividends and soon the sound of hammer and saw was heard in the land as three and four thousand-seat houses lifted their heads in the nation's key cities.

With the advent of these de luxe theatres, cathedral, temple and shrine, terms generally applied to the church, were placed in their files by theatre advertising men.

With the gargantuan auditorium came a need for specialized entertainment suitable for such wide open spaces. Vaudeville as was would not do entirely, and if it could, the supply was fairly well confined.

Straight vaudeville shows were more or less the property of the Keith-Albee interests, controlling a string of big time and junior houses all over the country.

In New York, Marcus Loew was thriving upon his original policy of vaudeville and pictures. About 1915, E. A. Schiller, then a leader in the stock-company presentation with headquarters in Atlanta, threw in his lot with Mr. Loew and starting with the old Grand Opera House, expanded to a string of modern houses throughout the South. Col. Schiller then came North to direct the construction of other Loew theatres in various key cities.

The Interstate theatres of Louisiana and Texas under Carl Hoblitzelle also featured vaudeville, as did the Pantages circuit on the Coast headed by Alex Pantages, who brought his "poke o' dust" out of the Yukon to Seattle to found his theatre fortunes.

Colonel Butterfield in Michigan, M. E. Comerford and Mike Shea in New York state, Jones, Linick and Schaefer and the Asher Brothers in Chicago, and N. L. Nathanson in Canada were some of the other prominent showmen using vaudeville in individual situations. Musical tabloids were also popular entertainment.

But that was before the era of the prologue and stage presentation and of course the sponsored radio program.

"Roxy" the Ex-Marine

The house manager of the Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis, in 1913, was an ex-marine with the formal handle of Samuel L. Rothapfel, but known to his familiars and later to the nation as "Roxy." Having disagreed with his superiors over certain then radical ideas in the field of exhibition, Roxy traveled toward the rising sun, in twenty years to cover a New York theatre path extending from the Regent to the Strand, to the Rivoli and Rialto, to the Capitol, to the theatre that bears his name and then to the Radio City Music Hall.

The arrival of this showman on the Big Time also marked a flush period of great prosperity for uniform manufacturers until then reserving their fanciest offerings for South American generals. With the advent of the Roxy epoch, ushers and doormen were so bedecked that attendance at the movies took on the aspect of a formal diplomatic reception. The heel-clicking and saluting had not yet arrived, for at that time a West Point graduate could look forward only to the Army for his career.

Roxy is also credited, and perhaps blamed, for the rise first of the "atmospheric prologue," and then the more ample stage presentation without which, in the succeeding years, no theatre, regardless of its size, could lay claim to local recognition.

The stage presentation gave birth to new industry providing employment for scores of incipient Reinhardts and paid the rent for hundreds of dancing schools which in a trice or even less could and would produce hordes of budding ballerinas, tap dancers and torch singers as added attractions (mostly promoted) to the picture program. That oft times the picture was lost sight of in the overwhelming surge of presentation numbers was a tribute to the promotional glibness of the local theatreman.

McCormick and Symphony

S. Barret McCormick, now director of advertising for RKO Radio, is another name to bring up in the development of this species of entertainment. At the Princess, Denver, in 1915, McCormick with many soothing words and kindly handling convinced the director of the Denver Symphony that an association with the theatre would not permanently impair his professional standing.

WHEN JENSEN TURNED CAMERAMAN

Twenty musicians of the symphony personnel were induced to follow their leader to form one of the first picture orchestras providing better music, a movement that no doubt has done much to extend the popularity of the classics among film patrons.

Much of this popular liking can be said to have been brought about by the omnipresent stage offering which seasoned spectacularly such overtures as "1812" with a finale of the burning of Moscow that caused fire horses to stir uneasily in their sleep and Tschaikovsky perhaps to turn slightly in his grave.

Later, in Cleveland, at the Allen, Mr. McCormick suggested to Phil Spitalny, his music director, that worthwhile trying might be an encore after the overture, this to consist of a symphonic arrangement of a popular number somewhat along the lines of what Paul Whiteman was then doing with dance music.

Spitalny tried it. The encore went over very well and the idea took hold nationally. It also established some sort of a high at a western theatre where the publicity man, seeking for a name to identify the "hot" house orchestra with symphonic music, struck on the title of "Sympho-Maniacs," which happily was discarded in favor of something else.

Sid Grauman of Los Angeles was in this era shaping a course toward his spectacular niche in exhibition history. The Hollywood premiere, since adopted internationally, may be set down as Grauman's creation. And still in the headlines are those occasions when newly-elected-to-fame stars are invited by him to register their footprints for posterity on the concrete of the Chinese theatre forecourt.

The Pacific Coast entrepreneur also helped write the history of prologues, placing on the stage any number of performers up to 150 at one time to thoroughly steep his audiences in the atmosphere of the screen attraction.

Partington and the "M. C."

The Grauman influence was felt along the entire Pacific coast and among those vying with him in nearby San Francisco was Jack Partington, producer at the Granada and Imperial theatres. Mr. Partington, now vice-president of Fanchon & Marco Stage Shows, Inc., is credited with first bringing to fame the first of the hand-clapping masters of ceremony, Paul Ash.

Fanchon & Marco, starting as a team of dancers and musicians, began producing for Harry Arthur in 1919 at the Warfield, in San Francisco, and were later to flood the country with their unit shows, having at one time as many as 50 on the road.

Other California stalwarts included Eugene Roth, Turner and Danken, T. L. Talley, Fred Miller, Herbert Rothschild, Wm. Clune, Leon Netter and the brothers Wobber, headed by the genial Herman, now affiliated with Fox Films distribution on the coast.

In Portland and Seattle, there were Claud Jensen and J. Von Herberg, de luxe operators and pioneers of the old school. Of Jensen, there are many stories told, the following of which is typical.

An orchestra leader engaged to direct at the Liberty theatre, in Portland, became temperamental and in the course of events was chastised gently by Mr. Jensen. The musician, exceeding wroth, left his employ swearing vengeance and some months later returned to the city and took over a closed theatre, featuring himself at the head of a large orchestra. He vowed to run Mr. Jensen out of town.

To signalize his opening, the leader had the local Pathe News representative film his arrival at the station and this was included with the regular newsreel showing.

Some six months later, his venture unsuccessful, the musician-exhibitor closed up shop. A few days later he received a phone call from allegedly the Pathe newsman, and was asked how he liked the welcome shot made on his arrival.

"All right," was the answer. "Why?"

"Oh," replied the pseudo-filmer, who really was Claud Jensen, "I thought I'd like to make one of you leaving town."

Out of Bellingham, Washington

The town of Bellingham, Washington, is here mentioned for the purpose of identifying first, Fred Walton, an independent exhibitor known for his presentations, and also his opposition, Al Finkelstein, now the Portland, Ore., partner in Evergreen Theatres.

The latter circuit, prominent in the Pacific Northwest, leans on such strong arms as those of Frank Newman, formerly of Kansas City, who never minded running a patron down to the station to make a train; John Hamrick, the Blue Mouse man; the Rosenberg brothers and J. J. Parker, who have also pooled their extensive theatre holdings in the Evergreen pot.

TOO MANY 24'S POSTED TOGETHER

The story is told of the early days of the producer home office exploitation staffs about an executive just returned from an out of town trip. In Chicago, he had witnessed the extensive posting of the company's picture then being locally exploited and was a bit critical of the efforts of the staff who were laboring valiantly to put over the date.

Featuring the campaign was a smash of five 24 sheets posted side by side in a Loop location previously almost impossible to obtain. Picture and theatre were spread across the five posters and could be seen for blocks away. The smash indeed caused comment, but the executive's main peeve was that so much paper had been used in one spot.

He thought it a bit of a waste especially when there were so many available stands outside the downtown area.

The Northwest in the early twenties rang with feats of exploitation in which many of the above-mentioned were leaders. But not at first. The intricacies of exploiteering were hard to understand in certain quarters and one of these quarters was the office of Mr. Von Herberg, to whom this writer endeavored to sell a campaign in 1920 on "Forbidden Fruit" to cost some three thousand dollars, for the date at the Coliseum, in Seattle.

Finally convinced against his will, Mr. "Von" okayed the expenditure and a tasty campaign was contrived. It may be well at this time to mention that snow is rare in Seattle and when it falls all the ticket buyers remain home.

For the first time in six years it snowed—and how it snowed—on the opening day of the picture nobody came. Mr. "Von" was hard to sell for some time thereafter.

A Significant Date

The last quarter of 1919 marked a date, and a very significant one in the history of motion picture theatre advertising. For at that time, Claud Saunders, mentioned above, took over the newly created post of director of exploitation for Paramount Pictures, and launched a movement that spread worldwide, caused newspaper editors to shy at their own shadows and police chiefs to blanch at a ring of their telephones.

Saunders was thoroughly sold on the box-office advantages of sending forth special "exploiteers" to aid local managers in advertising their coming Paramount attractions. He had an excellent opportunity to prove himself on "The Miracle of Man," the silent version when box-offices in situations worked by Saunders' disciples showed much higher grosses than other dates. For detailed accounts of individual campaigns readers are referred to the trade papers of 1920. Suffice it to say, the original Saunders crew did so bang-up a job that orders went out immediately for additional men.

Among the early Paramount exploiteers are recalled the following present day industry executives: Leslie Whelan, Oscar A. Doob, John P. Goring, Rick Ricketson, John Friedl, Al Boasberg, Hal Horne, Leon J. Bamberger, Walter Eberhardt, John Kennebeck, Lester Thompson and others.

Hoaxing the Press

Hoaxing the newspapers and police was quite fashionable in those days, and much fantistic though often effective exploitation resulted. For instance, the "suicide" gag was a pet stunt and pulled so often that finding of a heap of clothes and farewell note on the banks of local waters would bring the police with grappling irons in one hand, and John Doe warrants for lurking exploiteers in the other.

However, the exploitation forces outgrew

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

DANCE DIRECTORS BUSY STALKING TALENT
UNIONS IN FINISH FIGHT OVER WAGNER BILL
RUNNING TIME INCREASING ON NEW FILMS
NINE FILMS STARTED, SIX ARE COMPLETED

DURING the past few weeks, since the advent of the new season, the motion picture industry has experienced a prosperity comparable to or even greater than any previous period in its history. Not only have outstanding pictures reaped enormous profits, but additionally, and what is probably more important, they have served to create a new prestige and public good will. In relation to conditions prevailing until about eighteen months ago this new-found commercial and entertainment status is a source of amazement to producers, exhibitors, the public and everyone who has the interests of the industry at heart.

Some weeks ago, in analyzing the 1935-36 schedules, the writer ventured the opinion that the programs, as a whole, marked the beginning of a new big picture era. A glance at the record, of pictures recently released and features set for early production and distribution, is convincing proof that that assertion is becoming actual fact.

The citing of a few examples is illustrative.

MGM started its ball rolling with "China Seas," "Anna Karenina" and "Broadway Melody of 1936." Early and not by any means complete reports of financial returns of these expensively and carefully made features are only forerunners of what to expect from such equally treated productions as "Mutiny on the Bounty," "A Night at the Opera," "Robin Hood of El Dorado," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Rose Marie."

Other Topliners Promised

What is true of this organization also applies to United Artists, which in presenting "Dark Angel" and "Red Salute" to take their place in the record establishing parade also has "Barbary Coast," "The Melody Lingers On," "Splendor" and "Robin Hood" to become their successors.

When Radio's "Top Hat" and "Alice Adams" complete their part in adding to the golden flood of box office dollars and erection of new popular prestige, there are such productions as "The Last Days of Pompeii" and "The Three Musketeers" to come.

Universal blazed its new big picture trail with the outstanding "Diamond Jim." It has a number of similarly entertaining and popular interest creating features on its future program, the first three of which probably will be "Magnificent Obsession," "The Great Impersonation" and "Remember Last Night."

Its list of business-prestige pictures fully comparing in all phases with MGM's, 20th Century-Fox has presented "Curly Top," "Farmer Takes a Wife," "Here's to Romance," "Steamboat Round the Bend," and "In Old Kentucky" and "Way Down East" will be seen shortly. These establish a standard which the reorganized management of this company will spare no effort, expense or intelligence to match with "Metropolitan," "Thanks a Million" and "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo."

Pressure for Big Pictures

Warners, with a flock of features recently released that shine in the new order, certainly will not be down the line with "Doctor Socrates," "Captain Blood," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Frisco Kid," "Enemy of Man" and "Charge of the Light Brigade." Neither will Paramount, with a noteworthy recent record that includes "The Crusades," be found far from the front as it presents "The Big Broadcast of 1936," "The Milky Way," "So Red the Rose" and "Rose of the Rancho."

While this resume of present and near future product is far from complete, it is a striking consensus of a completely altered condition that immediately precipitates a question. What is the reason for this sudden flux of so many good pictures? The answer is neither hard nor evasive. The producers were actually forced into making good pictures.

Substantially there were two causes leading to the rebirth of the motion picture industry as the world's dominating entertainment medium and as a commercial establishment. The first is divided into two parts. With the passing of the exploitation value of sound, quality of screen entertainment so deteriorated that exhibitors, caught in a universal business depression, instituted the economically illogical double bill practice. This failing to provide the anticipated remedy, and as producers seeking the easiest way in an era of business uncertainty fell into line and made pictures almost solely adapable to dual presentations, exhibitors were compelled to transform their theatres from their proper function as centers of entertainment into headquarters for the plethora of chance games and giveaways currently infesting their branch of the industry.

Patrons' Boycott

Second cause, the one that fundamentally inspired so many present and future fine pictures, and which eventually will eliminate the first, was the open rebellion of a great segment of theatre-goers which led to threatened and in some cases actual boycott. So vivid had become the general tone and character of pictures—so little consideration given to moral ethics and good taste—that a menacing crisis arose.

For years voices within the industry, those of far seeing understanding and influential individuals associated with it, as well as those of social, civic and religious leaders, had been sounding a stern warning. They were like voices crying in the wilderness. Those who should have heard either didn't care to listen or preferred to ignore them until they got a punch in the nose or where it hurt more—in the pocketbook—as the Legion of Decency was organized.

The days following this were devoted to experiment. With little enthusiasm, but with much antagonism, clean pictures were tried. The box-office results of what producers were forced to do amazed them. Formulas previously rigidly taboo were resurrected. Came the honest love stories to the eventual exclusion of the ultra-sophisticated feature; followed the down-to-earth romances, dramas and whimsey comedies. Followed costume pictures, historicals; those featuring child stars, but no longer to be kid pictures; those which adapted operatic music to their story and the revival of the glamorous singing-dancing musicals. Nothing considered necessary was lost but much was gained. Shown, the public rushed back to the theatres. Hardly a week now passes that some picture or other—the kind producers were forced to make—succeeds in establishing a new record. Pictures have come to be really big, and following the present trend will continue to be big, good and clean enough to thrill the hearts of its best friends who have so successfully launched the industry on a new path.

Dancing Girls Scarce

With big musicals ready to start or already shooting at every major lot, Hollywood is experiencing keen competition for the services of dancing girls. Dance directors are searching everywhere for talent. Literally thousands of beautiful girls are here in Hollywood, but the number who can qualify as experienced dancers, plus beauty, is relatively small.

Productions which are now assembling their ladies of the ensemble include: "The Great Ziegfeld" at Metro, "Shoot the Chutes," at United Artists, "Anything Goes," "Coronado" and "Collegiate" at Paramount, "Stars Over Broadway" at Warners, "Follow the Fleet" at RKO, "Thanks a Million" at Twentieth Century-Fox, and others.

Each of these pictures will use between forty and fifty girls, and will keep them employed from six to fifteen weeks. Figuring roughly, about four hundred dancers will be "tripping the light fantastic" between now and the end of November. According to a check-up, there are hardly more than six hundred young women in town who can meet the requirements of the big league dance directors, which scarcity is forcing dance maestros to step fast themselves to garner the dancing ladies.

Slowly, but very surely, important pictures are growing longer. In this fact, exhibitors see an automatic threat to the double bill and a bid on the part of Hollywood for the return of the road show.

Cecil B. de Mille's "The Crusades" runs

News from the Hollywood Scene

two hours and twenty minutes. "A Midsummer Night's Dream" takes two hours and twelve minutes to unreel. "David Copperfield" ran two hours and fifteen minutes. "Little Women" held audiences in seats for just five minutes under two hours.

"A Tale of Two Cities," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "The Green Pastures," "Anthony Adverse," "Samson and Delilah" are only a few of the films which are expected to run two hours or better when completed.

Looking into the future, one Hollywood producer said he could imagine films with running times of three hours as a perfectly practical possibility.

Film men here have found that as long as the subject matter is interesting, audiences do not become restive. In fact, MGM has had a number of complaints over the shortness of "David Copperfield," many persons feeling that had the film run longer it would have been more absorbing and would have had better opportunity to cover the vast field of characters and incident contained in the Dickens' novel.

Appeal to Discriminating Audience

An interesting angle on this matter is that the longer films appeal in subject matter and treatment to audiences with discrimination—the audiences which choose entertainment carefully, for quality rather than quantity. For this audience, the roadshow has an especial appeal.

Long films are not new. D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" ran something over three hours when it played roadshow engagements in 1914. And those were the days when the average film was five reels in length.

Many exhibitors look forward to the time when films as long as or longer than stage plays will be the rule for certain houses. These same men feel that intermissions, orchestras, and the formality of a legitimate theatre presentation will follow. And when that day arrives, they say, the picture theatre will rival the stage as a center of social event.

SAYS FILMS RETARD WORLD UNDERSTANDING

Rev. Dr. Edgar Franklin Romig criticized the newspapers of this country for news distortion and assailed the film industry for retarding world understanding in his sermon last Sunday morning at the West End Collegiate Reformed Church, New York.

"When motion pictures give superficial ideas of certain foreign peoples we cannot hope for world understanding," he said. "The public of this country has, from various screen versions, the idea that all Englishmen are impolite and unrefined. That is just one instance of depicting foreign peoples falsely."

Nine Films Start, Six Finished

Production maintained its normal seasonal pace as nine pictures started and six finished in the past week. On the new schedules all but one of the features are but regular run-of-the-mill product, while those completed include at least two that should match the class of some of the more recently finished outstanding productions.

Paramount started two features. Included is "Desire," which will feature Marlene Dietrich and Gary Cooper with Alan Mowbray, John Halliday, Ernest Cossart, Akim Tamiroff and William Frawley in the supporting cast. Frank Borzage is directing. Also in the work is "Millions in the Air." The cast includes Ray Milland, Wendy Barrie, Benny Baker, Willie Howard, Eleanor Whitney, Samuel Hinds and Inez Courtney. Ray McCary is directing.

Two pictures also were started at Radio. The first, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," will feature Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan, Moroni Olsen, Eric Blore, Ray Mayer, Grant Mitchell and Emma Dunn. Ed Killy and William Hamilton share direction. In the second feature, "Husk," Preston Foster, Jane Wyatt, James Gleason, Moroni Olsen, John Arledge, Jane Darwell, Arthur Hohl, Harold Huber and Mischa Auer will be seen. Direction is by James Flood.

Republic also has two productions underway. "Forced Landing," a Trem Carr feature, will present Esther Ralston, Onslow Stevens, Toby Wing, Sidney Blackmer, Eddie Nugent, Barbara Pepper, Willard Robertson, Bradley Page, Kane Richmond, Barbara Bedford, Ralf Harolde and Lionel Belmore. Melville Brown is directing. "$1,000 a Minute," a Mascot, presents Roger Pryor and Leila Hyams.

Preliminary location work ended, "Ah, Wilderness!" moved into the stages at MGM. With Clarence Brown directing, principals listed are Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Aline MacMahon, Eric Linden, Cecilia Parker and James Stewart.

Under the direction of Louis King, Warner Brothers started "Desert Schooner" which will feature Dick Foran, George Ernest, Alma Lloyd and Julian Rivero.

With Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, Gloria Stewart and Gloria Briggs featured under Lambert Hillyer's direction, Universal put "Invisible Ray" before the cameras to complete the list of newly started productions.

Universal Completes Two

At Universal two productions were comleted. In "Remember Last Night," previously titled "Hangover Murders," a Carl Laemmle, Jr., feature was transferred to the cutting rooms. The cast lists Edward Arnold, Constance Cummings, Sally Eilers, Robert Young, Robert Armstrong, Reginald Denny, Monroe Owsley, George Meeker, Edward Brophy, Jack LaRue, Louise Henry, Theodore von Seyffertitz, Gregory Ratoff, Arthur Treacher, Rafaela Ottisno and E. E. Clive. James Whale directed. Also completed is "East of Java," in which Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young, Frank Albertson, Leslie Fenton, Seigfried Rumann, Ivan Simpson, Clarence Muse, Charles McNaughton, Fraser Acosta, Ray Turner and Torben Meyer will be seen. George Melford directed.

Warners finished "Frisco Kid." James Cagney is starred supported by Margaret Lindsay, George E. Stone, Ricardo Cortez, Donald Woods, Joseph King, Robert McWade, Joseph Sawyer, Estelle Taylor, Robert Strange, Barton MacLane, Joseph Crehan, Claudia Coleman, John Wray and Fred Kohler. Lloyd Bacon directed.

Radio's contribution to the completed work is "Shooting Star." The cast lists Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster, Ray Mayer, Andy Clyde, Moroni Olsen, these salad days and at one time there were sixty Paramount publicists scattered across the face of the land. Encouraged by the Paramount grosses, many other major companies sent forth squads of exploitation missionaries and the next few years saw high-powered showmanship developed to its utmost.

All in all, they did a powerful job, though no local civic officer or main street merchant considered himself entirely safe while visiting exploiteers roamed the streets on tieups bent.

It may nevertheless be said that the efforts of these swashbuckling crews set much of the pattern for today's exploitation, and from accounts of their activities in the trade press from 1919 to 1923 can be lifted bodily sufficient box office information for the basis of an authoritative textbook on motion picture theatre advertising and publicity.

Personal Appearances

The early twenties also marked the spread of star personal appearances encouraged by the wide publicity gathered on these occasions by traveling publicists in cooperation with local theatremen. Of course, the personal appearance was far from new even at that time, but stars of that day such as the late Wallace Reid gave it added importance, as did the public response which, though gratifying, was sometimes overwhelming.

For instance, in 1919 Reid was prevailed upon to lend his presence as guest of honor at a widely advertised public ball sponsored by the exhibitors of Seattle and vicinity.

Anticipating mass action by the star's worshippers, local police were posted almost elbow to elbow in the ballroom and instructed to be especially vigilant during the progress of the grand march led by Reid and his partner.

But in spite of these precautions, the onlookers, mostly feminine, broke through the police lines and descended upon the terrified Wally. Eventually he was rescued with clothing torn to shreds, most of his hair missing and sundry body wounds inflicted by the maddened amazon souvenir hunters who came armed with scissors and knives.

Some fifteen years later, on the platform of a Chicago railroad station, Clark Gable was similarly beset by autograph hunters and shoved into the path of an incoming train. The engineer's presence of mind prevented casualties and the railroad officials immediately constructed an iron barrier between the platform and tracks.

Of course, not every public appearance was accompanied by such perils and for quite a stretch topline stars and featured players headlined many a bill. Frequently an immediate intimacy was brought about between star, audience and local dailies by the star's confession that he was born and raised in that very city. This information invariably was dug up by truth-seeking publicists and the device began to fail only after too many succeeding studioites pulled the same gag in the same spots.

Radio broadcasts have now preempted the personal appearance, but it is questionable whether anything has been gained by the exchange.

The Atmospheric Theatre

When in 1922 Famous Players-Lasky was busily engaged in buying up and buying into circuits in various parts of the country, a vigorous expansion program was going on generally which continued up to 1930.

Theatre building was pushed. Every school of architecture was called upon, including plans which had never seen a classroom. These found expression in spectacular if somewhat amazing edifices. There was also the atmospheric theatre.

The atmospheric theatre was created by patterning auditoriums to resemble Mexican or Italian villages, streets and suchlike. Moons, twinkling stars and moving clouds were projected against theatre domes to form romantic skies that encouraged bashful lovers in the seats beneath. Stuffed birds fluttered on man-made rose bushes and artificial flowers gave forth beguiling scents.

Patrons were properly impressed, even fascinated. The atmosphere was often as entertaining as the show.

Venturesome Experiment

In 1925, Famous Players-Lasky put its 200 theatres into an amalgamation with the 500 then under the control of Balaban & Katz. The new corporation, Publix Theatres, proved to be the "farthest North" in home office guidance.

It was the most venturesome experiment in the history of circuit operation with buying, booking, maintenance, advertising and all other functions directed from the New York headquarters.

The country was split into zones and districts with supervisors of every nature in each division. Managers were directed daily as to routine and procedure. They were required to fill out countless forms for home office digestion.

That some of this information proved unpalatable may be one of the reasons for the ceaseless shuffling of theatremen from one spot to another. It was the restless age of theatre operation and sometimes called "The Great Trek."

With Sam Katz, now an MGM producer, as operating head and the brothers Balaban in key positions, there were many top-flight theatremen helping at the steering wheel.

J. J. Fitzgibbons, now theatre operating head of Famous Players-Canadian, was a sort of division trouble shooter, his operations ranging from Florida to New England and then to Canada.

Martin J. Mullin, co-partner with Sam Pinanski of the M. and P. Publix theatres, served valiantly in various parts of the country. Bob O'Donnell, now a partner in the Texas Interstate houses, Arthur Mayer, lessee of the new Rialto, in New York, and Jules Ruben of Great States were some of the other operating executives.

With the purchase of their holdings by Publix, many of the pioneers retired temporarily to the sidelines, to be called upon again after the financial reorganization. Thus such stalwarts as N. L. Nathanson, Abe Blank, E. V. Richards, S. A. Lynch, and George Trendle have once more taken hold. Their counsel is valued.

The "Costless" Campaign

Brought to full flower in the Publix regime was what was quaintly labelled the "costless" campaign wherein managers and publicists were exhorted to secure tieins of all descriptions without expenditure on part of the theatre. Thousands of promotions were effected at no cost outside perhaps a few years of the managers' lives.

Publix operation was exciting, indeed, a regime without a "breathing spell."

The rise of stage units, bands, organists

TENNESSEAN BOUGHT STANDING ROOM ONLY

Under the banner of Col. E. A. Schiller, we managed the local Loew Theatre in Knoxville, Tenn., once upon a time, and the house being filled on the occasion of a first evening show, standing room only was available. After the "empty" those standing found seats, with the exception of one mountain lad obviously unversed in audience procedure. He still stood up.

We invited him to take a seat but his utterly surprising reply was that he would like to but could not as he had bought only a standing room ticket.

HE EXPLOITED EVERY PICTURE

It was in one of those small Montana lumber towns where your chairman visited during his field days of early exploitation. The exhibitor returning from a hard day of fighting forest fire at first had difficulty in understanding exactly what purpose exploitation served.

After laborious and detailed explanation on our part, light came to his eyes and directly he marched us outside to where a lonely one-sheet advertised the evening's attraction.

"There's your exploitation," he exclaimed, and added proudly, "we do it on every picture."

AND IT ALL REVOLVES ON GOOD FILMS

and masters of ceremony to nationwide popularity was undoubtedly hastened by the demands of Publix stage policies, many of the "A" and quite a few of the "B" houses offering these entertainments in addition to the screen program.

From Oakland, Cal., and points east came the first of the recognized hand-clapping masters of ceremony, Paul Ash, who was later in Chicago at the Oriental Theatre to found an amazingly loyal cult of fans devoted to weekly attendance at Mr. Ash's entertainments.

Ash it was who first encouraged audiences to applaud the efforts of his fellow performers, demonstrating the process by whacking his palms vigorously. It became the accepted thing to do and it was said that no aspirant for any post of MC was considered eligible unless his hands were sufficiently calloused.

Traveling stage units appeared making weekly stands supported by the permanent MC and the house orchestra the latter appearing frequently on the stage to provide special numbers. Bands had become quite the thing with the success of Paul Whiteman, Vincent Lopez and Ben Bernie. Audiences demanded their MC's be talented musically, at least to the extent of leading their orcehstras. The demand of course exceeded the supply and to cash in exhibitors sometimes took on leaders who had gained their musical education solely by ear.

The MC and stage unit vogue continued until well in the thirties with Fanchon and Marco, the California producers, at one time having some 50 of these productions on the road. The idea still survives in some spots, but for the most part the hand-clapping master of ceremonies has found his way to the radio. Here he performs before audiences at station broadcasts.

In this situation he is not required to callouse his palms to whip up response. He simply lifts a wooden sign reading "Applause" or "Laughter" as the case may be and risks nothing more than a splinter.

The Frst All-talking Picture

Though sound on screen had already attained some small success, "The Jazz Singer," first all-talking picture, dated the silent screen. Warner Brothers were the historians.

With the box office success of this attraction in its early dates there arose an overnight demand for equipment. Exhibitors fortunate enough to secure sound apparatus without long delay did enough business in a short while to pay for their equipment almost immediately. No gold rush has ever equalled it.

Hollywood was in confusion. It was revolution for sure and studio title writers were making mass parachute jumps—without parachutes.

EXHIBITOR ESCAPES ON THE MISSISSIPPI

One of our favorite exploitations on "Blood and Sand" starring the late Rudolph Valentino was a fake bullfight which we would advertise in advance of the showing to take place in the local ball park. The snapper was refusal of permission from the local sheriff and followed by advertising that the bullfight would be shown at the theatre, in the picture of course.

It usually worked to the advantage of the box office but in a certain Mississippi River town, the folks became a bit peeved over the hoax and gathered at the theatre demanding a real bullfight. The alarmed exhibitor escaping in a row boat spent an anxious night on the river not realizing the stunt had given the picture a great opening.

Radio was beginning to be viewed with alarm culminating in an industry-wire scare on the night of the first coast-to-coast 60-station broadcast sponsored by an automobile manufacturer. It was advertised heavily in advance by the sponsor, his dealers, radio manufacturers and radio dealers. An immediate check on receipts at many theatres could not be obtained as the managers were at home listening in on the program.

However, alarm changed to interest, then to enthusiasm and finally to cooperation. Today, stars appear regularly on sponsored programs blithely describing plots, repeating dialogue, singing and dancing hit numbers of their coming pictures.

Radio favorites have been further popularized through engagements at motion picture houses. Exhibitors have helped to build their draw on future radio programs.

Many picture patrons are finding these broadcasts a satisfactory substitute for screen entertainment.

The Art Theatre

With the development of culture for the masses through the motion picture symphony orchestra, pictures with sad endings, i. e., slices of life, and the advancement of adult education on the air via sponsored symphony programs, radio round table discussions on "whither is youth going" and so forth, there was being developed if but slowly what has been termed and mistakenly accordingly to Herman Weinberg, the art theatre.

Originally much foreign product unavailable for general American consumption remained on the shelves of their distributors. Then theatres such as the Little Carnegie in New York inaugurated a policy some years back of showing these attractions to selected audiences and it became quite the thing to go, even if the entertainment was oftimes vague.

There were, however, quite a few excellent foreign pictures and the market grew until at one time there was quite a sizeable circuit of houses showing foreign product exclusively.

However, the difficulty of obtaining a reliable supply of these attractions, plus the demand of their growing native audiences for more familiar fare, finds them showing the better class of revival, subsequent-runs of popular features and of course productions of merit when obtainable.

Al Steffes, in Minneapolis, Herman Weinberg, in Baltimore, George Kraska, in Boston, Matty Radin, in New York, and Milt Chamberlain of New York are outstanding in this field of showmanship. Not forgetting Leo Brecher, who caters to the Park Avenue crowd at his new Plaza theatre, where he shows subsequent-runs, weeks after release, at a higher admission than is charged by the surrounding first-runs.

That indeed is art.

Foreign Language Theatres

There are also the foreign language houses, but they are not many. In the Yorkville section of New York there have been theatres showing German pictures exclusively and recently reopened is a pioneer class houses on lower Fifth Avenue to show nothing but French productions. German picture policies have been endeavored in Milwaukee, but not too successfully.

The Soviet releases in New York are confined mostly to Mr. Radin's Cameo, on metropolitan Forty-second Street and also to the Acme theatre, on New York's cosmopolitan Fourteenth Street. At the last named also can be found from time to time Swedish, Italian, Jewish and other not frequently produced foreign productions.

Decentralizing Theatres

In the last days of Coolidge prosperity the battle for theatre domination waxed merrily. Circuit heads frequently swallowed more than they could chew.

Results of the 1929 crash produced the handwriting on the wall lettered by shaky banking fingers and then came decentralization or "every man for himself."

With general theatre reorganization much of the confusion has subsided. Experienced operators whose theatres were taken over in the Great Rush are again holding the reins. Excellent new season product and the resultant increase in grosses has brought to life a long-buried optimism.

Millions are being spent on new equipment and theatre renovations and there even are hardy souls who think well enough of show business to go ahead on new building projects.

Injurious fan magazine and newspaper column chatter, crockery and cash giveaways are not regarded with too much concern by level-headed, long experienced theatremen. For the 50 per cent nationwide increase in patronage over the Labor Day weekend recalls again the truism uttered by Nicholas Schenck:

"There is nothing wrong with this industry that good pictures cannot cure."

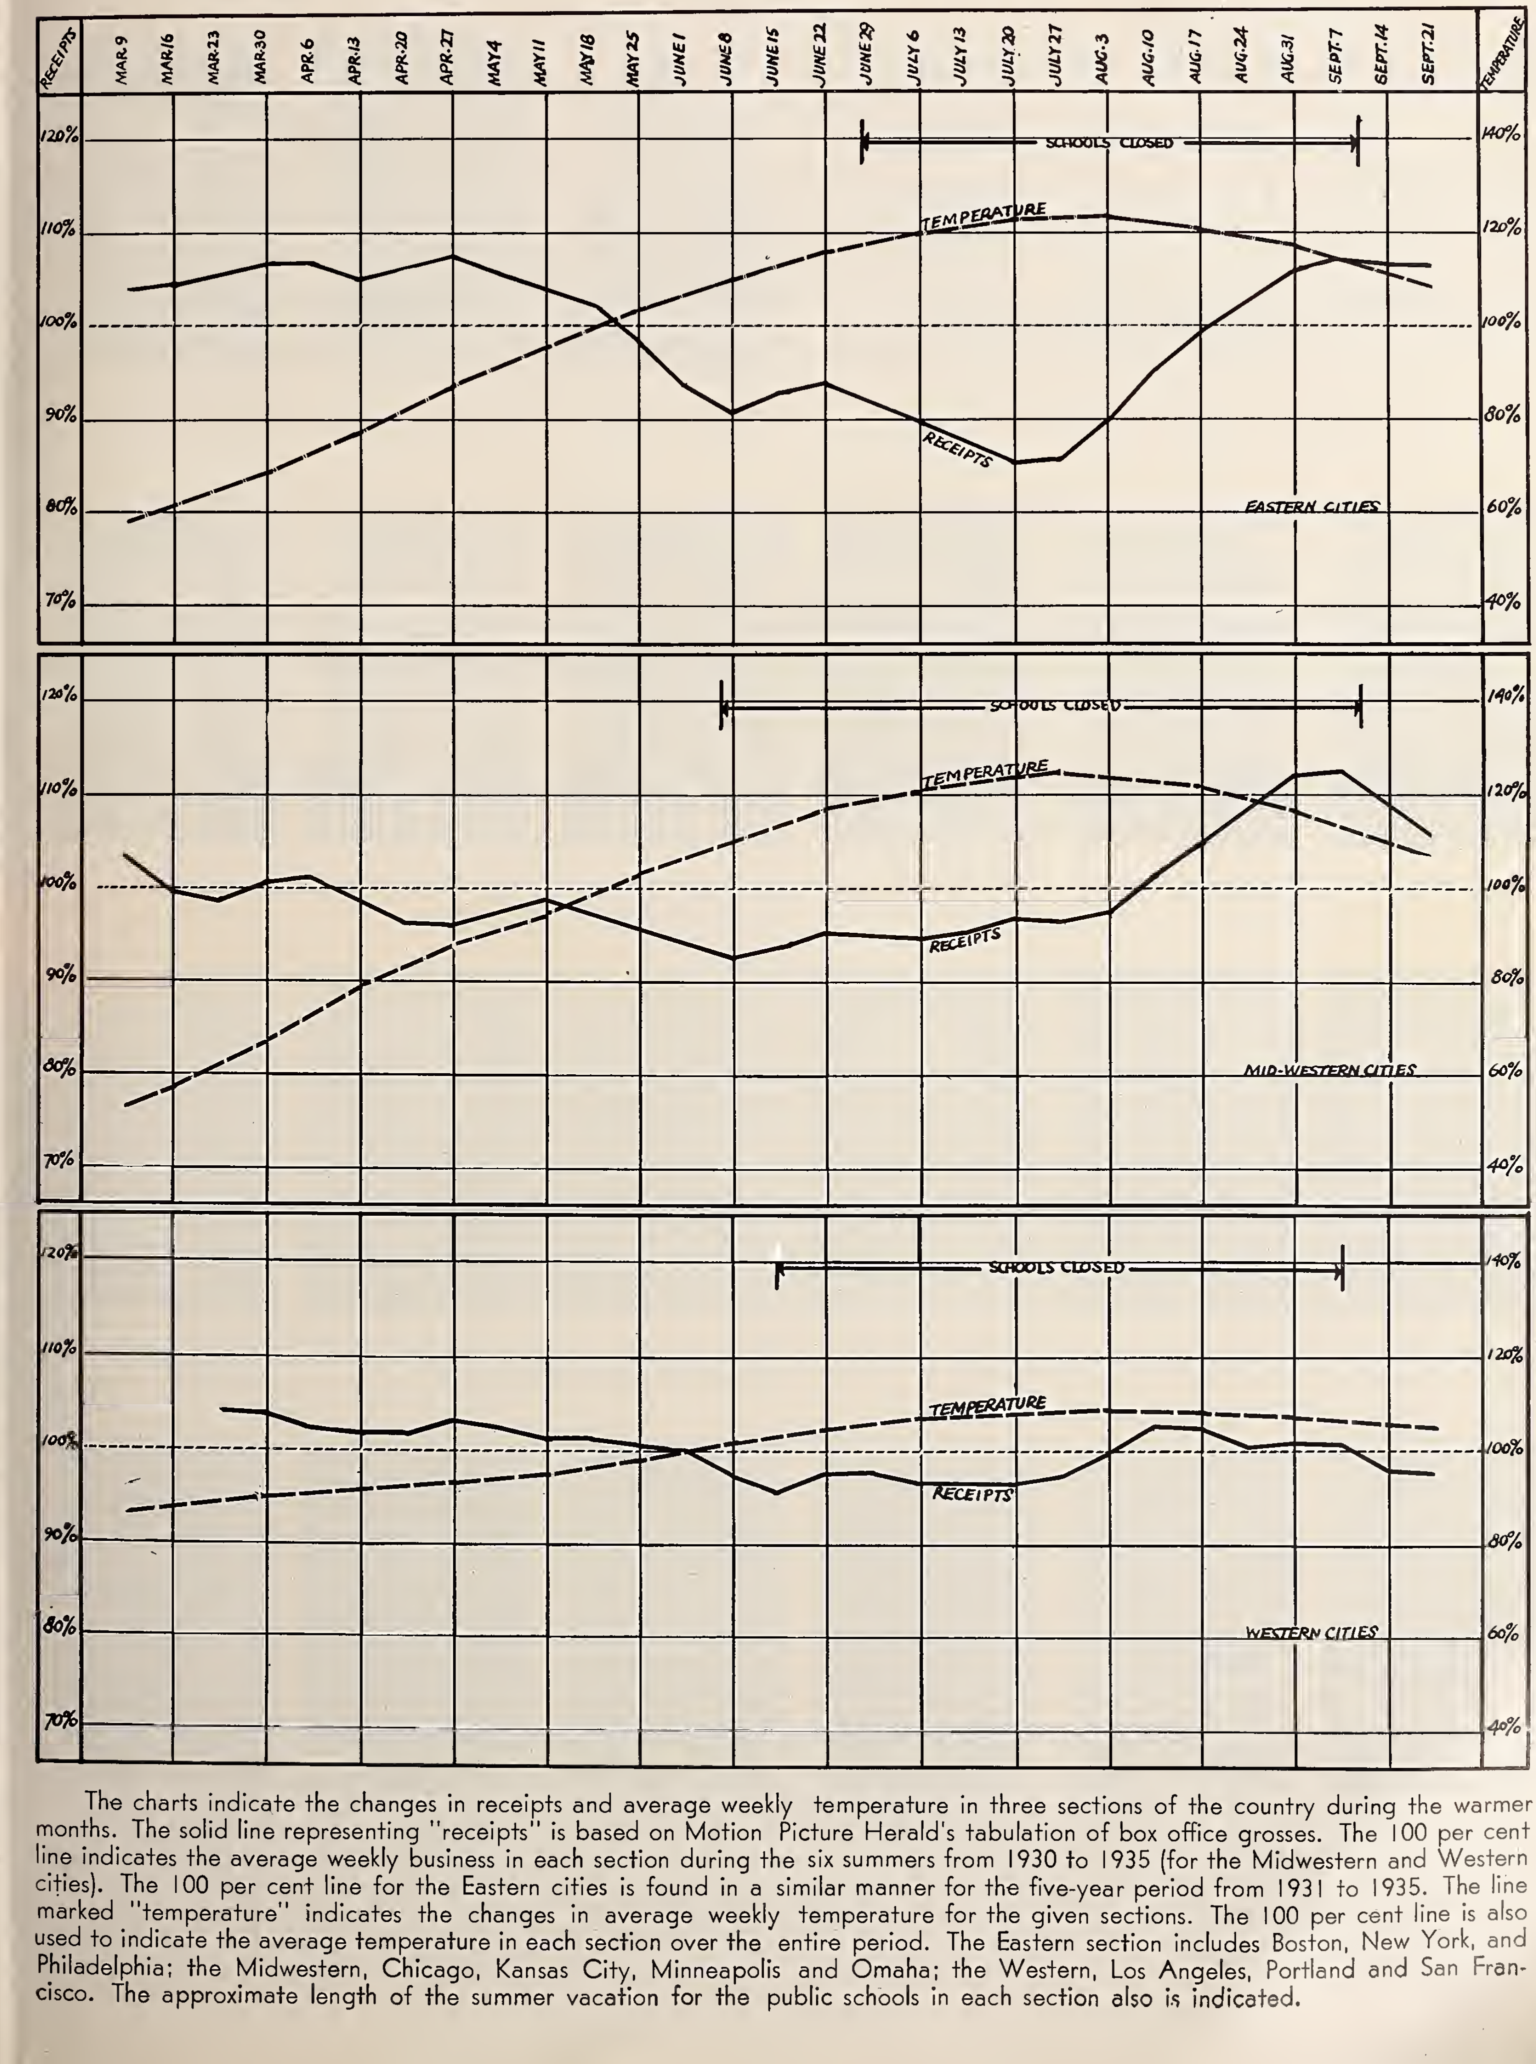
SUMMER CHANGES IN THEATRE GROSS



The charts indicate the changes in receipts and average weekly temperature in three sections of the country during the warmer months. The solid line representing "receipts" is based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses. The 100 per cent line indicates the average weekly business in each section during the six summers from 1930 to 1935 (for the Midwestern and Western cities). The 100 per cent line for the Eastern cities is found in a similar manner for the five-year period from 1931 to 1935. The line marked "temperature" indicates the changes in average weekly temperature for the given sections. The 100 per cent line is also used to indicate the average temperature in each section over the entire period. The Eastern section includes Boston, New York, and Philadelphia; the Midwestern, Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis and Omaha; the Western, Los Angeles, Portland and San Francisco. The approximate length of the summer vacation for the public schools in each section also is indicated.

N.S.W. ADVISORY BOARD ON QUOTA IS SELECTED

Gift Nights Found Illegal; Hoyts Expects $250,000 Net; Amateur Programs Spreading Fast

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

Personnel of the Film Advisory Board which will supervise operation of the Quota Act is made up of F. W. Marks as chairman, Cresswell O'Reilly, and E. B. Harkness. Mr. Marks conducted the Film Inquiry of 1933; Mr. O'Reilly is chief censor; and Mr. Harkness, as under secretary of the chief secretary's department, has been in contact with the amusement business as administrator of the theatres and public halls act.

A test case brought by the police against Robert Virgona, proprietor of the Orpheum theatre, North Sydney, established free gifts as illegal. Mr. Virgona was fined the nominal sum of £5 ($25), but the magistrate warned that others similarly breaking the law would leave themselves open to the maximum fine of £100.

The result of the Virgona case brought forward a variety of schemes, all designed to sidestep the regulations. The majority of theatre men won't be greatly perturbed if they fail because the failure of free gifts to attract increased business will end far sooner than police actions or round-table conferences. Whether he is indulging in the practice or not, there is not one exhibitor in business who wants gift nights to continue. Competition alone is keeping the whole foolish custom going, they say.

On his arrival from New York, Ralph E. Binns, Warner executive, painted a bright picture of film conditions in the United States. "Box office takings all over the country are increasing," he said.

Hoyts Expects $250,000 Net

When the balance sheet of Hoyts Theatres, Ltd., for the past year is put before shareholders it is expected to disclose a net profit in excess of £50,000. This is considered most satisfactory by the board, which has decided to pay dividends of 6 per cent on the "A" preferences, and 5 per cent on the "B" preferences.

Amateur nights give every promise of spreading rapidly among Sydney suburban houses, if the original tryouts live up to expectations. Up till now, amateur nights here have been restricted to one radio station, which has enough applicants to keep the feature going for nine months.

The increasing number of Australian producing companies has been added to by the formation of Southern National Pictures, Ltd., nominally capitalized at £30,000.

To the surprise of local producers, the Federal Government has suspended the scenario and production prizes for this year, the Cabinet being of the opinion that the unlimited output of Australian films failed to justify the grant entailed.

MGM Loses Brisbane Bid

The trade here received a surprise when the Brisbane City Council gave the lease of the old Town Hall to Developments Pty., Ltd. MGM offer carried a bigger rental than that submitted by the successful company.

Developments Pty., Ltd., has obtained the lease for 30 years. The rental figure is £5,000 annually for the first 10 years, with an increase of £500 per annum for the subsequent five years, and £6,500 per year for the final 10 years. MGM undertook to take the Town Hall for 10 years, with an option for two 10-year periods, pay the entire reconstruction bill, and erect a theatre at a cost of £35,000. In addition, £16,000 was to be spent on equipment and furnishings, with a stipulation that the furnishings become the Council's property at the termination of the lease.

MGM, which operates the Cremorne on the outskirts of Brisbane, is anxious to break into the city proper, and looked to the old Town Hall to provide the opportunity.

By establishing a profit of £9,781 in 1935, Carroll-Musgrove Theatres, Ltd., increased its combined profit for 11 years of operation to £149,457. Dividends repaid to shareholders now exceed the amounts they invested in the company, which operates the Sydney Prince Edward Theatre. At a shareholders' meeting, the directors pointed out that the current year's profit was down in comparison with 1934, because of additional competition.

Approximately 65 New Zealand theatres have been linked by an agreement which gives J. C. Williamson Picture Corporation, Ltd., physical management of Kemball Theatres, Ltd. The Williamson and Kemball circuits are represented in almost every Dominion situation. Under the new setup, Williamson will buy product for the Kemball group and transact general business in conjunction with its own circuit. Kemball Theatres, Ltd., continues operations without interruption. The new arrangement becomes effective in November, with Beaumont Smith in charge of the merged circuits.

Boston Independents May Have First Run Theatre

Following the decision of the RKO Boston to go from a double feature policy to one of single features and stage presentations, local unaffiliated distributors are considering the establishment of a first run theatre for independent features. Under the double feature policy at the Boston, the house was an outlet for a number of independent pictures.

F. E. Loeberman attempted such a plan at the Majestic last year, but was stopped and not resumed after the house was bombed. The present Boston first runs are controlled by affiliated circuits.

PART CUT, SINGER ASKS ALL BE DROPPED; IT IS

Because in the editing of Paramount's "Big Broadcast of 1936" her number had to be trimmed with others to make room for many specialties, Jessica Dragonette, radio singer, asked Paramount to remove her portion of the picture entirely, calling it unimportant in its edited form.

Paramount agreed to her request and the film, now current on the New York Paramount screen, is without her sequence.

Campbell Soup Program To Push Warner Films

A sustaining radio tieup to publicize all of Dick Powell's future features for Warner Brothers has been effected between the company and the Hollywood Hotel radio program, sponsored by Campbell Soup and starring Powell. The air sponsors will tell of the latest Powell picture on each of its Friday evening programs over Columbia Broadcasting System network and announcers in the system's various outlets will give the star's latest picture and local theatres where it is playing.

Reichmann Here for Ideas

Max Reichmann, who heads a producing company in Paris, is in New York on a search for production ideas in American life, and plans to visit Hollywood studios to observe technical developments. Mr. Reichmann was a director in Germany three years ago, when he left the country for political reasons. He formerly was production representative in Germany for American companies.

Berkowitz Completes Lineup

By the acquisition of rights to "100,000 People Missing," Sam Berkowitz, president of the Far West Exchanges in Los Angeles, has completed his program for the new season. He will distribute 52 features, including the five Mascots to be released before product of that studio goes to Republic.

Eureka Takes French Film

Eureka Productions, headed by Samuel Cummins and Jacques A. Koerpel, has obtained distribution rights in the United States to the French film, "Itto."

Metzler to Fox Studios

Fred L. Metzler, treasurer of Fox West Coast, is slated to succeed George Bagnall, recently resigned, as comptroller of Twentieth Century-Fox studios, and will be succeeded by George Topper, the circuit's chief accountant.

Bloom to Address SMPE

Congressman Sol Bloom will address the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the banquet of the organization to be held at the Wardman Park hotel, Washington, in connection with the annual fall convention.

FOUR-FEATURE CAROUSAL IN SPAIN BY AGREEMENT WITH DISTRIBUTORS

Close of Year Expected to Show General Policy Limiting Programs to Two Full-Length Pictures

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
Barcelona Correspondent

The deadlock between the film producing and distributing companies (banded in the Cámara Defensa Cinematográfica) and the exhibiting entities in Spain, over the "quadruple-feature program," has been broken. An agreement has just been reached between the two factions whereby the abnormally lengthy programs, which have been the bane of the motion-picture industry here, are to be ended for all time. A compromise contract has been accepted by both factions. Although the details have yet to be worked out, it is felt confident that the close of the present year will see the theatres throughout Spain showing no more than double-feature programs, at most, in one performance, and in many instances single features with shorts, newsreels and educations—the standard program of less than two hours of actual film-running.

Many theatres throughout the republic already have the one-feature program, notable among them those of Seville and Malaga, but Barcelona, Madrid and Bilbao have long afforded conspicuous examples of the fallaciousness of the protracted cinema offering for one admission price.

Few major centers of population in the world have provided a better illustration of the sound logic of the single-feature show than has Barcelona. This is Spain's largest city and chief seaport. It has a population of more than 1,500,000 and a total of 84 theatres and auditoriums devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

Four Features to a Program

Here the abuse—for here, particularly, it has been an abuse both for the cinema management and the public—has been carried to extremes that might be regarded as absurd had they not been attended by actual harm, in a physical sense, to the attending patrons, and, in a material and moral sense, by no means indirectly, to the industry at large.

"Quadruple-featuring" has been Barcelona's cinema evil. The best organized and most intelligent efforts of the several film distributing groups here—Spanish, German, British and American (the last named including the big branch establishments of the foremost producing units of the United States), until the agreement just concluded had failed to correct the evil, which, of course, was rooted in wellnigh ruinous competition.

Except in the few deluxe air-conditioned theatres, where the two-feature program, with newsreel and a comic and short generally prevailed, the city's cinemas, including the great majority of neighborhood houses, continued their wasteful policy of multiple major attractions. This will continue until the new agreement is put into practical operation.

From an industrial and financial viewpoint the fallacy of this operation becomes the more pronounced when it is considered that, owing to the sharp competition existing here, the prices charged in the average run of local, or neighborhood, theatres represent just about the world's minimum.

For a program beginning at 3:45 P. M. and ending at 8:20, including three principal features, several comics, and ofttimes with an educational thrown in for good measure, the scale ranges from 0.75 pesetas to 0.25 pesetas (approximately, by current exchange levels, from 10.40c to 4.09c in U. S. currency).

The saving feature of this situation is the unusually ample space and generous seating-capacity of these theatres. Most of them are big unkempt, barn-like structures that formerly housed "legit" dramas, zarzuelas (the Spanish type of musical comedy) and extravaganzas, but with the advent of the talking-picture were converted into cinemas, with little more than the installation of a screen at the curtain-line, sound apparatus and the usual boothed projection-machines. Where the acoustics are at all satisfactory, they are accidentally so; in many instances they are faulty.

Several Features With One Star

Some of the devices resorted to by individual theatre managers to alter this situation, but without resulting in whatsoever degree in mitigating it, are picturesque, to say the least. Among these have been, for example, programs devoted wholly to comics of the "Mickey Mouse" and "Pop-Eye" genre. Still others have been programs composed exclusively of pictures featuring a given star; Jean Harlow, for one midweek period; Clark Gable for another; Maurice Chevalier for another. Programs are changed here Mondays and Thursdays, as a rule. Three-reel programs featuring dance and ballet-subjects—"Bolero," "Flying Down to Rio," "Footlight Parade" or the "horror squad" or the detective mystery group or the "westerns," with comic and educational additions, have been inflicted upon an innocent and unoffending public.

Naturally this cornucopia of "movie" riches could have but one eventual result: to weary audiences by a surfeit of features and incidentals that depend for their surest success upon the element of thematic and artistic contrast—now entirely absent.

Original Spanish Films, Too

Programs here for the most part are composed of standard American films, about evenly divided between straight English-language productions, with the subtitles in Spanish superimposed upon the screen and those having the synchronization of Spanish dialogue. There, however, are many original native Spanish and Mexican productions, in the Castilian tongue and filmed, most of them in Spain, some in Mexico. German and French pictures and a few Russian also figure, the productions of these being almost invariably in their original language, with Spanish subtitling screened, but a few of the German musicals are projected as "doubles."

Several Features Starring One Player Is One Type of Program Seen in Barcelona; Uniform Contract Signed

The basic cause of this development is that Spain has no contingent law. Therefore it is becoming the dumping ground not only of America, but of all other centers of production except Japan.

The latest estimate of productions to be released in the 1935-36 season is as follows:

Fifty to sixty direct Spanish pictures, some made in America, such as Fox and Paramount releases.

A considerable number of Mexican productions.

20 to 25 native Spanish productions.

200 "doubed" versions (American-English and other productions re-dialogued in the Spanish language).

300 straight language versions with superimposed titles in Spanish.

In other words, it takes in about anything and everything that is produced in countries like the United States, England, France and Germany.

During the last three years Warner Brothers has established its own distributing organization in Spain. Last year RKO opened up all over Spain. The major distributing companies, with the exception of Columbia and Radio, belonged to the film club, the Cámara Defensa Cinematográfica of Spain, which has been striving to remedy the evil of long programs.

Uniform Contract Achieved

Since last April there has been continuous dickering between the exhibitors and the film club looking to the adoption of a uniform contract, and only at the end of August was the deadlock broken and a compromise contract accepted. The compromise was effected in order to facilitate the contracting of pictures for the coming season.

Another factor in the long-program situation has been low prices. About 85 per cent of the cinemas in Spain, excluding the larger cities but embracing communities of the size and characteristics of Yonkers and Providence, are open three days a week—Thursday, Saturday and Sunday—and so the exhibitors naturally can obtain their product at very low prices.

During the last few years football has developed as a competitive factor in Spain and many a peseta that formerly went into the cinema box-office is now being spent as admission to football games. In addition to that, numbers of open-air swimming pools are being inaugurated throughout Spain. Swimming is a new attraction for the populace. Whippet races, hitherto unknown in this country, also are cutting into motion picture receipts.

KUYKENDALL SEEKS UNITED STAND ON TRIBUNALS FOR TRADE PRACTICES

Government Officials Await Word From Roosevelt; Large Majority of Industries Cool Toward Voluntary Agreements

MPTOA President Starts Sunday on Tour to Sound Out Exhibitor Opinion; Distributors Also Study Proposals

Learning that exhibitor sentiment, in a preliminary canvass of representative theatre owners, is favorable toward a code or a system of tribunals under which the rapidly mounting disputes over trade practices could be aired, Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is starting a swing around the country to obtain crystallization of ideas, with a view to an organized exhibitor stand.

Mr. Kuykendall said the MPTOA regards the need of arbitration and regulation of unfair trade practices as the industry's major problem, and that in his investigation of the sentiment in 15 key cities he would hold discussion with exhibitors regardless of organized affiliation.

Likewise the distributors, also recognizing the necessity for some sort of regulatory system, are discussing several proposals but their position has not taken definite form. In responsible distributor home office circles in New York it was represented that the exhibitors stand to benefit more from a voluntary code than the distributors, hence the feeling is that any overtures should come from the exhibitors.

Rising Tide of Disputes

However, while film company attorneys who have the matter in hand have discarded the idea of a code to substitute for the NRA agreement and also have abandoned the proposal to revive the Film Boards of Trade as wanting exhibitor support, a large sentiment of distributor opinion holds that some regulatory machinery is an immediate necessity to cope with the rising tide of disputes and exhibitor-distributor litigations.

Among major factors entering into the code situation generally this week were:

1. Government officials were still awaiting word from the President on the procedure by which voluntary agreements could be made effective under existing laws.

2. While Congressional leaders were going ahead with a program of NRA legislation for enactment in the next session, the large majority of industries appeared cool toward voluntary agreements or a new NRA.

At the same time, Mr. Kuykendall, as spokesman for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, believes the Administration will succeed in putting through NRA legislation next winter and the motion picture industry should, therefore, prepare to formulate a plan.

"Exhibitors do not favor a revival of the Film Boards but will be for a method of arbitration which gives them equal representation with the distributors," said Mr. Kuykendall in New York late last week. "Enforcement could be obtained by agreement. The key to the situation is service."

As to the attitude of the divergent industry factors, Mr. Kuykendall observed: "We will get the distributors 100 per cent if the theatres will go along."

Starts Tour Sunday

Returning to his home in Columbus, Miss., early this week, the MPTOA head planned to leave on Sunday on his investigating tour, visiting St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, and on October 8 and 9 will attend the annual convention of the regional MPTO at Omaha, from where his itinerary takes him to Kansas City, where the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association recently affiliated with the MPTOA, and then to Memphis, New Orleans, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Salt Lake City, Denver, and Texas and Oklahoma.

Mr. Kuykendall said all groups, whether affiliated with his own organization, with Allied States, or unaffiliated, were invited to meet with him to discuss code possibilities. The information he gathers will be presented to the MPTOA board of directors at a meeting in New York the middle of November.

"We intend to present a definite plan and are going to fight for it," he added. "We are not going to be satisfied with just words."

Attorneys Urge Immediate Action

In distribution circles, responsible leaders are championing the establishment of regulatory machinery as imperative to cope with the reputed increase of ruinous competitive methods which, since voidance of the NRA, have resulted in a deluge of complaints and court actions.

While film company attorneys who have been exploring the legal feasibility of voluntary self-government fear the liabilities because of existing court decisions rendered against distributors on the ground of illegal combination, other spokesmen familiar with recent developments urge early action as imperative.

These executives say that probably months will be required to determine definitely whether, and if so, how, a voluntary procedure can be formulated without running into legal snags, and in the meantime the trade abuses will grow.

No one, it is pointed out, can give the distributors any assurance that they will not become involved in litigation if they participate in a regulatory agreement, but at the same time their inaction and opposition to instituting early moves are encouraging the spread of practices which are dissipating the advantages to be gained from new season product of box office potentialities and are cheapening theatre fare.

Legislative Action Asked

Discussions have been held by the distributors on measures of dealing with the unrestrained growth of chance game promotions, giveaways, double billing, admission price cutting, overbuying and protection abuses which have brought a storm of protests and threats of reprisal from aggrieved exhibitors. Complaints are swamping exhibitor organizations, distribution home offices, circuit headquarters and Federal agencies in Washington. In the absence of arbitration tribunals, exhibitors are demanding legislative action; many are taking their grievances to the Federal Trade Commission or the Department of Justice, and suits involving overbuying and clearance and zoning have increased in the courts.

Recent statistics released by the NRA in Washington revealed some 70 instances of abandonment of former code practices in the film industry since the demise of the Blue Eagle.

Board on Rules Discussed

The situation is seen by many industry sources as emphasizing the need of trade tribunals where complaints can be adjusted without the necessity of resorting to outside agencies. But although it was discussed at a meeting of the directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America last week in New York, following the return of Will H. Hays, president, from the Coast, nothing definite was forthcoming.

It was reported, however, that the film companies might agree on a plan to set up an exhibitor-distributor board to draft rules on 10 or 15 trade practices which require immediate attention, two of which, it was said, are overbuying and clearance and zoning. The score charge is another problem. Among the distributors it is felt that since these practices are unrelated, it would be more practical to deal with them individually than under a blanket code. It was pointed out that with the exception of the NRA code, there never has been any move in the industry for a trade practice agreement embracing all problems.

Dillard Answers Objections

Answering the legal objections raised by the distributors, Tyree Dillard, Jr., formerly general counsel of the NRA Code Authority and now a member of the MGM legal department, points to the opinion held by authorities on constitutional law that whereas the United States Supreme Court voided the NRA codes because they were agreements by decree, that tribunal will uphold voluntary pacts since they spring from the will of the majority of an industry. Mr. Dillard cited also the supreme court's decision in denying an injunction sought by the Government against Appalachian Coals, Inc., a combination formed to regulate production and sale of bituminous coal. The court, among others, made the statement that:

"A cooperative enterprise, otherwise free from objection, which carries with it no

CANCELLATION AS BAIT

monopolistic menace, is not to be condemned as an undue restraint merely because it may effect a change in market conditions, where the change would be in mitigation of recognized evils and would not impair but rather foster fair competitive opportunities. Voluntary action to rescue and preserve these opportunities, and thus to aid in relieving a depressed industry and in reviving commerce by placing competition upon a sounder basis, may be more efficacious than an attempt to provide remedies through legal processes."

Film Board Plan Discounted

Mr. Dillard said the idea of bringing back the Film Boards of Trade has been abandoned by the distributors because it is felt that exhibitor opposition, based on past experience, would militate against cooperation action with the distributors through such machinery. He believed the exhibitors would shy away from any tribunal even resembling the old Film Boards, but would subscribe to a forum in which the unaffiliated exhibitors would have equal voice with the distributors.

The balance of power in the hands of the distributors and affiliated circuits was a major basis for lack of cooperation by Allied States and other independent exhibitor groups with the former NRA code, and is one of two points raised by independents in discussing a voluntary agreement. The other question is the matter of enforcement—how to compel those who enjoy the general benefits of a trade practice agreement to abide by its provisions.

Mr. Dillard's solution is to hold out the inducement of 10 per cent cancellations of product buys within a season and the proration of short subjects to the number of features bought. This, said Mr. Dillard, would have the double effect of obtaining signatories to an agreement and effecting enforcement, since exhibitors who do not assent or, having assented, fail to live up to the obligations, would not be entitled to those benefits.

While this may smack of discrimination, Mr. Dillard insists it would be entirely legal and in a showdown would be upheld by the courts. It is understood the proposal is being considered by the distributors, along with the former NRA counsel's skeleton plan for voluntary arbitration which he submitted last July.

Agreement Not Accepted

Meanwhile, exhibitor-distributor grievances are being arbitrated in New York by the Film Board of Trade and a few other centers have attempted to adjudicate disputes. Such machinery, however, carries little if any weight because of its lack of official authority. As an instance, a compromise agreement in an overbuying case recently worked out by the grievance committee set up by the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association at Kansas City was not immediately accepted and was submitted to the distributors' home offices for approval.

In Washington the skeletonized Recovery Administration is busily occupied with an intensive study of the formulation, administration and results of the abandoned NRA film code, as well as trade relations both before and after the life of the pact, for the purposes of a comparative analysis. Similar investigations are being conducted of a score of other major industries.

Drafting Moves Slowly

Drafting of voluntary agreements is proceeding slowly, due to the fact that President Roosevelt has not announced the procedure. He is, however, devoting much time to the problem, and has discussed it at length with Harry King, former code administrator of the NRA.

Voluntary agreements must be approved by the National Recovery Administration, the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice, all of which have been at loss as to how to formulate such agreements without running afoul of the antitrust laws. However, the Department of Justice has intimated that in certain instances the antitrust laws may be relaxed.

The NRA is studying methods designed to circumvent the problem raised by industries which demand price-fixing and similar arrangements, concerning which there is grave doubt as to legality, in return for agreements binding industries to wage and labor agreements.

See Objections Overcome

Sponsors of the substitute legislation say it will overcome two major objections of the original NRA, those involving arbitrary decision of trade practices by code authorities and the failure of the law to conform to Constitutional provisions.

At the same time, reports reaching Washington indicate that industrial leaders in many lines are skeptical of Congress' ability to draft a bill which will effectively regulate competition, in view of the supreme court decision nullifying the NRA. The skeptics also hold that in all probability the new legislation would not provide the exemption from the antitrust laws which was the major bait held out for the development of the recovery codes.

Further evidence that business men are heartily tired of regimentation either by the NRA or on a voluntary basis is indicated by code opponents in the fact that in the four months which have elapsed since the collapse of the Blue Eagle, only 21 industries, most of them minor in character, have applied for voluntary agreements. At the time of the supreme court's decision outlawing the NRA, 540 industries were codified.

Results of Questionnaire

Of 133 industries reporting on their code activities in response to a questionnaire of the Council on Trade Agreements, an advisory group of trade association officials and others, 49 reported they were engaged in drafting voluntary agreements, 40 said they were contemplating such agreements and 44 informed the council they were not taking definite action. Others are marking time pending the announcement of definite code formulating procedure.

Arbitration Cases Show Increase

Twenty-five claims, totaling approximately $4,500, have been filed with the New York Film Board for arbitration since July 2, indicating a willingness on the part of the exchanges since the NRA code expired June 15 to settle disputes within the industry rather than take such matters to the courts. In one instance an independent circuit filed a claim against an exchange, which was settled after the board failed to agree unanimously.

Nine different dockets have been scheduled since July 2, but only three hearings have been held. Another is slated for late this month, when three cases are down for disposal.

Of the cases recorded, Fox filed 15; Paramount, four; United Artists, two; RKO, four. Fox won five by default, agreed to postponements on seven, settled one and was awarded decisions on two after trials. Paramount had three put over from time to time and settled one. RKO's four cases, which were set on the August 30 calendar, have not yet been heard and the two cases of United Artists are also pending.

Broken contracts seem to be the chief complaint. In a survey of the reasons listed, there were 20 different cases alleging breach of agreements. One had to do with an unpaid balance, two for bad checks and two for alleged damaged film. On the calendar for late this month, the specifications show two more broken contract grievances and one balance due complaint.

Theatre Collapses in Razing

One workman was killed and several others injured as the 80-year-old Hollis theatre in Boston collapsed last week while wreckers were demolishing it. Without warning the structure came tumbling down and cries of the injured rose as rescuers fought to extricate them from the debris. One rescue, that of Henry Smith, was effected only through the amputation of one of his legs pinned beneath a heavy timber. Surgeons feared otherwise he would die in the wreckage.

David Landau Dies

David Landau, veteran actor of the stage and screen, who first gained international fame for his characterization of the murdering husband in Elmer Rice's "Street Scene," died early this week of heart disease at his home in Hollywood. His wife, Mrs. Delight Landau, survives. He was 57.

Mr. Landau started his screen career in 1931 and played in a large number of pictures for several companies. His latest efforts were in "Judge Priest" and "Death on the Diamond."

Baker Quits Newman

George Baker, manager of the Newman in Kansas City for three years, has resigned to form a partnership with his father, A. F. Baker, in the operation of the Electric in Kansas City, Kan.

Father and son started operation of the Electric recently, but Baker will remain at the Newman until a successor has been appointed by Balaban and Katz, operators of the house.

¶ You came into this industry when it was a baby , when it was a one-reel business , when it couldn't make a sound

¶ You've grown up with this industry and you have been one of its staunchest friends.

¶ We of Hollywood appreciate this friendship. May it continue for many more decades!

¶ And by the way, Martin, have a look-see at Reliance's latest Edward Small productions. "RED SALUTE," stars BARBARA STANWYCK, a new Barbara Stanwyck, with Robert Young, Hardie Albright, Ruth Donnelly, Cliff Edwards Gordon Jones, Paul Stanton and Purnell Pratt; directed by Sidney Lanfield It crackles with 80 mile-an-hour pep , entertainment and youthful romance .

¶ Get ready for "THE MELODY LINGERS ON," with JOSEPHINE HUTCHINSON, star of "Oil for the Lamps of China," GEORGE HOUSTON, the latest he-man sensation of Hollywood, and John Halliday, Mona Barrie, Helen Westley, William Harrigan and Laura Hope Crews; directed by David Burton .

A golden symphony of thrilling song . . . the story of a love that refused to die of a song that lives forever.

¶ Edward Small is preparing to film the most popular book ever written by an American author . . . A story which has swept the world . . . "LAST OF THE MOHICANS" by James Fenimore Cooper, to be directed by RICHARD BOLESLAWSKI, maker of "Les Miserables"... A great classic brought to vivid life... One of the spectacular pages of history, re-lived in all its pageantry, glory and conflict . . . Two in love in the wilderness . . . while nations and savages clash for a prize which is now America.

What Indecency Costs the French Screen

Why only 8 per cent of the population goes to theatres

HERE in an exposition of the state of the screen in France is a picture of what could have happened to the industry in the United States, had not its Production Code Administration come to the service of the causes of decency.

M. Pierre Autre reveals that the screen, so dominantly the amusement of the English-speaking world, serves but 8 per cent of the population of France. He sees this astonishing limitation as a direct consequence of risque and plain dirty pictures. Those pictures, he finds, while comprising but about 35 per cent of the internal production of France, sully the whole repute of the screen.

Striking parallelism with the experience of the screen in America is presented in that phase of M. Autre's article in which he points out that when the French screen acquired dramatic stage material it was mainly dirt. In America the heritage was not from burlesque, the equivalent of the sort of stage that M. Autre discusses, but from a stage of sophistication. The results upon the screen product after filtration through the camera, were, however, rather similar in effect upon box office values.

It will be discovered here, too, that the issues posed and problems presented by the rise of the Legion of Decency, met so successfully by action within the industry in the United States, obtain today in France as continued problems, outside of the industry and with which it is yet to make adjustment if it is to be more than an eight per cent business. As a part of this situation the failure of the French picture industry to serve its people has resulted in the setting up an extra-mural line of exhibition activity by the religious associations, including a line of publications and review organizations to classify and ordain the career of the product with respect to the large audiences that it controls.

It is immediately apparent that, save for the lowest brackets of buying power, the children and the youths of France are by reason of indecency in the theatre debarred from patronage and sent rather to the religious associations' shows, a building up of what the American industry has come to call the non-theatrical field—which for the organized industry means something painfully akin to a non-profit field.

The patronage of the children and the young, which in French theatres do not have in important ratio, has ever been of foremost importance in America, as pertaining to the box office of today and the box office patrons of tomorrow.

France, it seems, is paying a pretty price for smut. America has before it over there a demonstration and example of the consequences of the policy which is willing to do anything for today's dollar at the cost of tomorrow. Tomorrow does come. France has come to its tomorrow and the price is arrested development.

The hope for the future of the screen in France is in reform. In the present state of affairs it would seem probable that it will be external forces that will affect any change—a process that is ever accompanied by factors restrictive of the liberties properly enjoyed by persons and institutions of demonstrated good intent.

Dealing with a situation in its many conditions and symptoms similar, though happily of vastly less itensity, the American industry was fortunate enough to solve its problems within itself and proceeds today untrammelled in the service of its whole public and the world screen.

TERRY RAMSAYE

by PIERRE AUTRE
Paris Correspondent

The demand for clean pictures, which has been so important a factor in the course of the development of the motion picture in the United States, has not been discovered by the cinema industry of France. This is the principal reason that only eight per cent of the population of France attends the motion picture.

France has a censorship, but that censorship is almost entirely political in its concerns and activity.

The only regulative pressure that the Government has brought to bear on the moral content and social import of screen offerings has come from the War Office in regulations for the suppression of the flood of military farces which tended to make the army and navy ridiculous.

One of the consequences of the neglect of standards of decency is that decent French parents, happily the great majority, do not permit their children to attend shows at the cinema industry's theatres, but send them rather, when they do see pictures, to the private cinemas of the religious associations, or some of the few special cinemas opened for children.

A special reviewing service press has developed for the service of the religious associations with classifications of productions into three divisions: A, "good for the entire family"; B, "unsuitable for children or adolescents," and C, "unsuitable for anybody."

The religious associations' private cinemas are variously served with standard prints, sound and silent, and some have substandard equipments in 9 mm, 16 mm and 17 mm 5 films. Both Protestant and Catholic cinema shows are operated, and there are now in France nearly 2,000 Catholic cinemas. These church cinemas, for reasons that will be reached presently, however, serve mainly only the middle and upper classes.

Press Recognizes Problem

While the cinema industry is unaware of an issue of decency, and while what little the cinema press of France has had to say on the subject is ignored, the general daily and periodical press is aware of the problems involved and is giving them attention, from patriotic, social and commercial viewpoints.

The standards of the French cinema are not the work of real Frenchmen today. The most part of the military farces and the vulgar and dirty comedies produced in French studios have been made by foreigners, many without any definite nationality, coming into France through other nations.

Two influences of heritage have conspired to put the French screen in its present social position, first, a lowly beginning from which it has progressed but slightly, and second, the degrading influence of much dramatic material taken from the dramatic stage.

It must be remembered that the cinema started in France as fair or carnival entertainment, what you in America call a "side show." It was only after the days of the war, 1914-1918, that France got theatres of luxury and attractive dress to induce persons of any quality to attend. Before that the motion picture was considered low and vulgar entertainment, fit only for the working classes. In Paris, theatres with the best first-run pictures and high admission prices have induced the smart people to go to the movies. But out in the provinces the situation has been but little changed. There it is commonly held by the aristocracy, the gentry, the intellectuals and professional persons that the cinema is an entertainment fit only for their servants, laborers and factory workers, a crowd with which they cannot mix in the pursuit of entertainment. It is very hard to change the mind of the provinces.

An Inauspicious Start

In 1929, when the first talking pictures made their appearance in France, the small and rather vulgar legitimate theatres of Paris and its environs became cinemas. Also all the cheap touring—or as you say "roadshow" companies—purveying vulgar stage shows in the provinces were put out of operation. Talking pictures replaced them—all too completely.

CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS—SAME FILMS

These small legitimate theatres of Paris showed mainly dirty, stupid and vulgar plays with such titles as "Virgin and Grandmother," "Girl of the Pavement," "I Want Your Wife" and the like. When the talking pictures came, some producers hastened to convert plays of the sort into screen material, often changing the titles which were sometimes impossible for presentation on even a cinema poster. Such productions have probably never amounted to more than 15 to 20 per cent of the French output, but they have served to keep many people from going to the cinema.

It is significant to note that these "light comedies" from the boulevard theatres of Paris are neither Parisian nor French and that their authors are generally not Frenchmen at all, but persons who have changed their names to appear French.

These stage plays, which in their way made contributions to and influences upon the cinema, were almost uniformly concerned with triangles and quadrangles of infidelity and sex intrigue—husband, wife and wife's lover, or wife, husband and husband's mistress, or sometimes as a special attraction the four of them.

And Supposed to be Funny

That technique was standard, but not sufficiently advanced to be permanently satisfactory. So we come to such a work as "Avril," a comedy by Louis Verneuil—adapted for the screen and produced by Natan Brothers under the name "Arlette Et Ses Papas"—which probably will need no translation. This is the story of a man who marries a girl whom he believes to be his daughter, but who really is not. That makes everything right in the end. Nevertheless, the audience is shown a man going to the boudoir with a girl believing her to be his daughter, and it is supposed to be funny, too. The French mind is not like that.

Another interesting specimen is afforded in "Amok," in which the cinema work is excellent, which is interesting, well played—but it is a story of abortion. It is from the novel by a German author, Stefan Zweig. It was produced by Natan. It was directed by a Russian, Feodor Ozep. And that is what they will call a French picture. We have also with us the French gangster picture, exemplified by "Justin de Marseilles," directed by Maurice Tourneur, and in technique one of the best French pictures of the year. It shows terrible scenes which are unhappily true and real—and entirely immoral.

One must not forget, the while, that material of the sort discussed is only 35 per cent of French cinema production. The French picture makers have a great array of decent pictures to their credit and many of them successes, as for instance "Maria Chapdelaine," "Ademai Aviateur," "Si j'etais Le Patron," "Une Soiseau Rare," "Tartarin de Tarascon," "Sans Famille" and "Le Bossu."

The French national censorship, which must pass all pictures shown to the public, has no interest in morality on the screen. The members of the censorship body are delegates of the main ministries and the police. It is a purely political affair. Pictures are examined to see that there is no allusion to the present forms of the state, and to the representatives of the state, as members of the parliament, ministers, etc. The censorship is also concerned that a picture shall not deal with social questions which might involve the Right or the Left parties. The censorship wants the pictures in an entirely neutral attitude politically. A picture such as "La Banque Nemo," dealing with the activities of financiers engaged in stealing money from the people, was barred because it suggested too realistically some financial activities involving members of the parliament and even some ministers. The same story was permitted as a stage play, with some cuts. Pictures like "Gabriel over the White House," "The House of Rothschild" and "Heroes for Sale" have been forbidden by the French censors.

Also representatives of the Foreign Affairs ministry guard the feelings of foreign countries. The pictures involving Mexicans, Chinese and Turks are considered the most carefully. Pictures pertaining to France are given close consideration, more especially where French history is concerned. Representatives of American companies in France understand and do not even offer subjects likely to get into controversy. So "La DuBarry" and "Voltaire" and others have not been shown. But it is rarely indeed that the censors ask for a film cut on grounds of moral consideration.

Not only is France without any such internal regulative machinery as the Production Code, but there are also no regulations concerning the exhibition of pictures once they have had the censors' visa. Young children, adolescents or anyone may go to see any sort of picture, clean or dirty.

There is a gesture—just a gesture. On Thursdays there are special performances for the young—only because this is a school holiday. The admissions are the equivalent of 10 or 12 cents. The programs are—except in a few instances—unchanged for the children. The bill may present "Convention City," "Easy to Love," "Cleopatra" or "Amok."

One of the results of this is that children are not eager to go to the cinema.

Problems of Workers' Children

Unhappily the children of the working class are in a somewhat different position with respect to cinema entertainment. Many of their parents send them off to the Thursday children's cinema without any heed to what is playing. They will not send them to the religious association cinemas, the clergymen's picture houses, where they would see only clean pictures, mainly as a result of the influence of the state schools where all ideas of religion have been put out of the minds of the people. This most especially is to be noted in the industrial regions, and all heavily populated districts.

There is some prospect of a betterment in the state of affairs in the French cinema by reason of a number of forces and movements. Nearest to something within the industry itself is the attitude of a portion of the trade press which is now venturing to consider the moral content and aspect of pictures. There is, too, the public press—and some public indignation and concern.

Mostly the cinema press has been very quiet. In his editorials M. Harlé, editor-publisher of La Cinematographie Francaise, has sometimes risen to the matter—without anybody else getting excited. In a recent issue of a monthly, Filma, Raymond Berner has pointed out that the recent American decent pictures, such as "Little Women," "Men in White," "Sequoia" and "Imitation of Life," were successes. In the trade papers La Cinematographie Francaise, L'Ecran and Cinaedia, exhibitors are being advised about pictures fit for the family.

Ask for Family Pictures

The newspapers are now inclined to make issue, more especially the national dailies and magazines. In Le Jour, morning Paris daily, Rene Bizet, cinema editor, has demanded "more moral French productions." Mr. Bizet observes: "The Federation of Popular Entertainments of the North of France—which is not at all a religious organization—is asking for pictures suitable for the entire family—parents as well as young people and children."

Jean Fayard in the nationalist weekly writes: "It is possible for some dirty French pictures to spoil the export market for all of them in foreign countries."

Jean Chataigner, cinema editor of the important morning daily Le Journal, asks the producers to stop showing the low side of France on the screen. "Each country has its bad people and its bad side. Don't show them in pictures. It would be better to picture the virtues of our country and our people. Why not show the real face of France?"

Interestingly the royalist morning paper, L'Action Francaise, has joined in the fight. This paper asserts that most of the dirty pictures produced in France are made by foreigners, exiled, many of them as a matter of policy. This paper contends that nothing can be done about it all under the present form of government.

In a recent issue of Comoedia, Pierre-Henry Proust has written of how films may help to strengthen the moral fiber of nations and cites "The Lost Patrol" and "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," remarking: "Thus, little by little, the great qualities of the cinema are manifesting themselves positively in the moral as well as in the technical realm."

The problem posed to decent France by the conditions of the cinema are, however, being more immediately met by a special press that serves those who are confronted with immediate tasks of film selection. For the particular guidance of the large array of managers of the cinemas of the religious associations there are three publications:

LE FASCINATEUR, a monthly published by

PRESS BEGINS TO TAKE AN INTEREST

La Bonne Presse, a Catholic organization, gives its readers general information on substandard pictures from 9 mm. to 17.5 mm. and also rents pictures, cutting its own censorship versions.

Choisir, a weekly, formerly published by the Catholic Committee of the Cinema and now more interested in radio, in each issue reviews pictures from the moral point of view.

Documentation Cinematographique, a monthly, is the leader in this field. It presents reviews of all pictures shown in France, with moral appreciations. The moral control of this review is under Monseigneur Reymann and the managing editor Abbé Charles Collas, who personally views most of the pictures considered. Pictures are considered solely from the moral point of view without regard to religious matters. This publication is proving especially useful to commercial motion picture exhibitors who are seeking to serve their patrons according to the standards of real French life and to show nothing but decent pictures. Its circulation among exhibitors is therefore particularly important in Brittany, in the North and West of France.

The people of France see the cause of decency and fair representation of their country on the screen as "coming work"—essential to the life of their country.

City Court Holds Receiver Liable

In a suit recently tried before Justice Lester Lazarus in the municipal court of New York involving the question pertaining to personal responsibility in making a contract, some facts were brought out which stress very strongly, declares Samuel R. Schneider of the New York bar, the necessity for receivers, before entering upon their duties, to know definitely what are their legal rights and obligations. Many receivers, he points out, in foreclosure actions take up their duties without obtaining proper legal advice and later discover that their lack of knowledge of the law has caused them personally to suffer financially.

The suit recently tried concerned a coal bill and it was shown that the receiver, at the time of his appointment in foreclosure, found a quantity of coal which the plaintiff in the action had delivered and for which the owner-mortgagor had not paid. The owner authorized the coal dealer to take back the coal which the plaintiff in the action had delivered and for which the owner-mortgagor had not paid. The owner authorized the coal dealer to take back the coal, the value of which was estimated at approximately $102, and the dealer threatened not to do so.

The receiver did not dispute the dealer's estimate of the value, but he wrote a letter to the dealer stating that he had about $75 in cash which he would send in payment for the coal provided the dealer would accept it. Although it was shown that the dealer agreed to this proposition, the receiver failed to send the remittance and suit was accordingly brought against the receiver.

Audience Suitability of Films Shown in France Last Season

RED KANN HAS A WORD FOR IT:

You have heard of pictures which gave you goose pimples — pictures which made you gasp — pictures which thrilled you to the very marrow of your bones. But never before in your life have you ever heard any picture described as Red Kann describes Universal's outrageously sensational two-reeler called "CAMERA THRILLS".

HE SAYS IT IS A "SKIN-RAISER"

A "skin-raiser" is a thing you can cash in on. Any time you can show your hard-boiled patrons something to raise their skins, you've got something! If Universal has made a picture which can raise Red Kann's skin one-millionth of an inch, Universal has done the impossible.

Don't Shoot the Piano Player! He Gave Clue to Modern Screen

Never Were Any Silent Pictures But It's a Devious Road to Fullest Use of Music

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

THERE never were any silent pictures. Like other famous myths—such as the one about the ostrich burying its head in the sand to avoid detection—the belief that there was a Silent Screen still persists among our best people.

Now, so far as the public is concerned, the motion picture screen, from the ancient days of Selig, Biograph, Essanay, Lubin, Vitagraph, and such pioneers, has never been silent.

Since the inception of the shadow screen there has always been sound, albeit synthetic, whether it emanated from the pit in the form of socalled music, or from behind the screen in realistic off-stage effects "synchronized" to the screen action.

In the naive nickelodeon days the chief generator of the sound was the genius who tickled the ivories of the piano ad lib and with much gusto. His imagination was as vivid as his fingers were brutal. He made a lot of noise—some of it illuminating—and his endurance was something to marvel at. Everything, literally, was at his fingers' ends. He had a sense of the dramatic and a flair for the comic.

Misterioso for the Villain

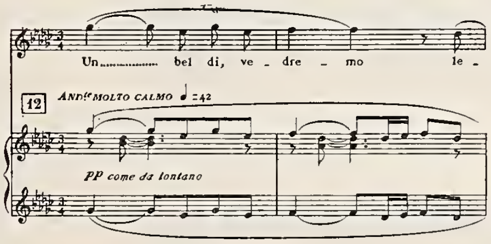
He announced the approach of the villain with a sinister Misterioso. When the victim was dying, he wafted him on his way with a Doloroso of lugubrious minor mode. In scenes of ecstatic love he thrummed an Appasionato con amore. When the action became tense his fingers gripped the Grave of the Pathetique Sonata. He got very rough with the ivories when the going became rough on the screen; and the chase was his clue for displaying his virtuosity in the Allegro Vivace of the Poet and Peasant or William Tell. He was the Voice Incarnate of the primitive movie flicker.

The flickers grew up. The movie became the photoplay. The piano player was metamorphosed into a symphony orchestra. Musical setting and musical scores supplanted the lusty ad lib improvization of the one-man voice of the screen.

Musicians Take Note

Musicians of note took cognizance of the new art. Men like Hugo Riesenfeld, Joseph Carl Breil, Erno Rappee, Carlo Eduoarde, turned from the symphonic and operatic field to interpret in musical terms the drama, the comedy, the emotions, the spectacle of the shadow screen. The piano-voice of the nickelodeon swelled into the multiple and sonorous voice of the orchestra, augmented with pipe organ and vocal chorus. Such picture palaces as the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand in New York had symphonic orchestras comparable to the finest in the country; the Rialto organization, under the baton of Riesenfeld comprised no less than eighty picked musicians.

Music, full-throated and meaningful, had become the mouthpiece for the inarticulate mimes of motion pictures. The musical scores utilized many of the methods of the stage music-dramas. The thematic motif—identified with character and with dramatic situation—was developed and applied. The Voice of the Screen was expressive and impressive and spoke intelligently.



THE "FAITH" MOTIF—From "One Fine Day", of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly."

Thus ended the first episode in the Voice of the Screen. Then came the Great Clamor! The inarticulate Shadow discovered it had a voice of its own and immediately began to let the world know it was not so dumb. The discovery went to the Shadow's head and larynx. It became literally garrulous and insisted on singing! Tin Pan Alley migrated to Hollywood and the tune-tinkerers had their day.

The bedlam of noise drove the Muse that was a Voice into temporary retirement. The interpreter of the mimes was supplanted by the vocal exhibitionist. The screen became for a time a camera copy of the stage. The movie Shadows stopped moving so they could talk or sing. Having proved they could do both—then what?

At this point arose the problem of the erstwhile Voice—Music. How did she fit into the picture? When Shadows can express themselves, why should Music speak for them? So the erstwhile Voice retired into the wings while the exhibitionists sang and danced and talked themselves hoarse, and the music had nothing to do with the integral part of the story.

Different Idea in Europe

Some European producers, however, had a different idea. They thought that the tonal medium had its place in the scheme of the screen, both as a motivating and interpretive force. In "Congress Dances," for instance, they demonstrated that music could give wings to action and color and significance to story.

Hollywood was slow to profit by that model of movie-musical production. It was nearly three years later that "Naughty Marietta," the most advanced screen musical yet released in this country, was produced. True, our producers have made some excellent pictures in which music and the aspirations of vocalists are dominant factors. Grace Moore's two pictures were finely conceived and beautifully done, with original touches in musical episodes, particularly the first sequence in "One Night of Love" which culminates in the Traviata aria. But the story and treatment in both her pictures are similar and already assume the aspects of a set formula.

OPERA SCREEN SOURCE

The success of Miss Moore's pictures started a mad scramble on the part of the movie moguls for operatic personalities. Lawrence Tibbett had already made his screen appearance as a singing rogue. Nelson Eddy hit the peak in "Naughty Marietta." Lily Pons is making "Love Song," Gladys Swarthout "The Rose of the Rancho." Tibbett's next is "Metropolitan" for 20th Century-Fox.

It is to be hoped that these songbirds will not all follow the formula which builds a more or less romantic story around the character of an aspiring vocalist, for the purpose of demonstrating that the songbird can sing. While the formula has proved entertaining and remunerative, it must soon run its course. As a step toward the advancement of the musical photodrama, it has little significance. Of real significance is the Warner Bros. production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," with Mendelssohn's music, which will have its premiere next month, and "The Life of Beethoven," in which the music of the Master Symphonist will form an integer of the drama.

What About Opera for the Screen?

Much has been said about translating opera to the screen and nothing, heretofore, has been done about it. Now that the Metropolitan stars have gone Hollywood, by request, and are warbling favorite arias in productions built around them, it is plausible to assume that the next step will be some form of screen opera.

Three years ago this commentator contributed an article to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD on the subject "Opera—a Neglected Film Source." He cited several operas that offered unusual possibilities for screen treatment, among them "Carmen" and "Tales of Hoffmann." In that article some suggestions were made as to the screen translation of those operas.

Now it seems that the "Tales of Hoffmann" will come to the screen as a vehicle for Miss Marion Talley, and it will be interesting to see just how the producers will adapt this fantastic romance.

Leaving "Hoffmann" to the tender mercies of the producers and using "Carmen" as an example, even the musical philistine can glean some idea of what is meant by motif, thematic development and musical motivation, in which all modern opera abounds and which make so many of the operas fertile subjects for screen treatment.

Everybody recognizes the familiar "Fate Motif" in "Carmen." As early as the first act, just after Carmen sings the famous Habanera, this motif is heard for the first time in the orchestra—a sinister and dramatic premonition of her fate at the hands of Don Jose. It is heard again in the Inn of Lillas Pastia where Carmen tells her brigadier lover to run along home to his mother—and Don Jose responds by singing the great Flower Song. This Fate Motif connotes the tragic climax in the last act before the bull ring when Don Jose kills the siren.

It is such thematic material that affords the screen adaptor authentic musical characterization and commentation as underscoring of dramatic dialogue and action. This is the method brought to such perfection in the music dramas of Richard Wagner and used so effectively by Puccini and other modern opera composers.

Many Motifs in "Butterfly"

In "Madame Butterfly," for instance, there are more than a score of motifs, each connoting a character, a situation, an emotion, an authentic musical narrative in the orchestra that identifies, interprets and enhances the drama through the musical media.

In these operatic works is the clue to movie music-drama, and the screen affords a scope never dreamed of by the stage opera composer.

Reverting back to the One-Man Voice of the Flickers, it is more and more evident that the ivory-tickler of the nickelodeon had stumbled on the clue and in his crude way was blazing a trail for the cognoscenti to follow.

And wasn't it Sherlock Holmes who used to improvise on his fiddle while ruminating on the problems of a murder mystery?

Set New Fee System On Production Code

Every individual picture carrying the Hays office seal must pay a proportionate share of maintaining the organization under a new system inaugurated in Hollywood this month.

Independent producers such as Republic, Chesterfield and Invincible and smaller state rights operators, will pay a flat fee with $25 set as the minimum. Feature pictures will be taxed $50 where the production cost is under $50,000, $100 for pictures costing up to $100,000 and so on up to $525 for those costing over $200,000. Shorts will be taxed $25 per reel.

Talbot Music Director

Irvin Talbot has been appointed head of the Paramount studio music department in Hollywood to succeed Nathaniel Finston, who resigned. Mr. Talbot was formerly Mr. Finston's assistant.

New Cartoon Series

The first of a series of cartoons using a new three-dimension process has been started in Hollywood by Edward Nassour Productions.

AMPA Selects New Committees

Committees of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers under the new administration were announced at the organization's meeting last week by Gordon White, president, at Jack Dempsey's Corner. In addition to the new committees, Mr. White announced that the board of governors had moved up Ed McNamee from secretary to vice-president to fill the president's former place. Milton Weiss was offered the secretaryship, but had not yet accepted.

Walter Eberhardt is now chairman of the program and entertainment committee, which includes Arnold Van Leer, vice-chairman; Hazel Flynn, Herbert Crooker, John C. Flinn, William R. Ferguson, Tom Waller and S. Barrett McCormick. Marvin Kirsch again heads the service committee which comprises Monroe Greenthal, Ray Gallagher, Louis Rydell and J. J. McCarthy. The publicity committee is made up of Mel Heymann, Jack Harrower, James P. Cunningham, Edward Finney and Herbert Spence. Berg. Paul Benjamin is head of the membership group, which includes C. L. Yearsley, Arthur Eddy, Alec Moss and Rutgers Neilsen.

Mr. White also outlined the new program and introduced Mr. Benjamin, who said there was $2,100 in back dues to be collected. Mr. Kirsch then gave a resume of employment activities of last year and stated 34 Ampa members had been given jobs by his committee during the past year. Mr. Eberhardt also spoke on the programs planned for the next four months.

American Pictures to Make Eight Westerns

American Pictures Corporation in Hollywood has announced it will make a series of eight western features starring Ted Wells, former Universal western player. Robert J. Horner is making a tour of all key cities arranging for the distribution of the series.

Massachusetts Censors Approve 51 Pictures

Censorship cuts are notable by their absence in the latest list of approved pictures as put out by the branch of the Massachusetts Department of Public Safety, headed by Commissioner Paul G. Kirk, of Boston. Fifty-one films were passed without a deletion at the last meeting of the state censors, it was announced.

Thomas Lennon Signed

Thomas Lennon has been signed to a long-term writing contract by RKO Radio. For the past year Mr. Lennon has been working in the studio publicity department as a special feature writer. His first assignment will be the script of the next Wheeler and Woolsey feature, "Wild West."

Warner Signs Lew King

Warner Brothers has signed Lew King as a director and he reports immediately to the Burbank production staff. His first assignment will be "Desert Schooners," starring Dick Foran.

INVINCIBLE PICTURES CORPORATION

To the Projectionist

by ADOLPH ZUKOR

¶ There comes in the career of every motion picture that final occasion when all the artistry, all the earnest constructive endeavor of all the man-power and genius of the industry, and all the capital investment, too, must pour through the narrow gate of the projector on its way to the fulfillment of its purpose, the final delivery to the public.

¶ That delivery is a constant miracle of men and mechanism in the projection rooms of the world's fifty thousand theatres. That narrow ribbon, thirty-five millimeters, flowing at twenty-four frames a second through the scintillating blaze of the spot at the picture aperture and coursing at an exactingly precise 90 feet a minute past the light slit of the sound system, demands a quality of skill and faithful, unfailing attention upon which the whole great industry depends.

¶ The projector lens is the neck of the bottle through which all must pass. The projectionist presiding over that mechanism is responsible for the ultimate performance upon which we must all depend.

¶ The projector must not fail and, more importantly still, the man must not fail or permit it to waver in its performance. It is to the tremendous credit of the skill of the modern projectionist that perfect presentation of the motion picture upon the screen is today a commonplace, a perfection that is taken as a matter of course.

¶ For more than a quarter of a century now F. H. Richardson, author of this and the Blue Books that have gone before, has been the philosopher, friend and guide of the projectionists. He began in the nickelodeon days when the two-pin Edison projector was considered a wonderful machine and he has continued, becoming himself an institution along with the developing art, into this day of the amazing complexities and large responsibilities of the modern projection room, with its maze of machinery and all the delicate, intricate devices of sound picture reproduction.

¶ It is appropriate that here on this page one who has shared and experienced these years of the building of the screen into its world dominion as an amusement medium should record the industry's recognition of Mr. Richardson's long and diligent service and his valued contributions to the progress of the art.

(From Mr. Zukor's introduction to Mr. F. H. Richardson's Bluebook of Projection—now on the press.)

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Pierre, South Dakota

DEAR HERALD:

As the capital of a state, this town of Pierre reminds us a whole lot of Olympia, Washington, except that Olympia is located only a little way from Puget Sound, while Pierre is on the east bank of the Missouri river. If one didn't see the state house he might take Pierre to be Neligh, Nebraska, except that it is somewhat large and probably contains a lot of better people and has two policemen instead of a town marshal.

Why they placed the capital of South Dakota away out here on the prairie and among the prairie dogs instead of placing it somewhere near the center of the state is far from clear to us, but, of course, is none of our darn business. Anyhow Pierre is where Charles Lee Hyde lives, and Charles Lee is about the best known exhibitor in the state and it is he that Pierre calls upon to look after the civic and business interests of the city.

We wouldn't say very much about it had Charles Lee not taken us up to his house to meet Mrs. Hyde and their little boy, who, by the way, is the pride of South Dakota, and when Sherm got his eye on that kid we thought we would have to get a span of mules to drag him away.

The Grand theatre is presided over by Charles Lee, and the customers seldom inquire as to what the show is going to be. They know it will be good whatever it is, for they have come to know that he shows nothing but the best. Probably what accounts for the wide reputation that he and his Grand theatre has. When you are in Pierre be sure to watch for the street cars, but you won't see any, for there are none there. Pierre is a pretty good town. Mrs. Hyde wanted us to stay there for supper but Sherm wouldn't do it. Somehow that guy never gets hungry when there is a big feed in sight.

He Eats Dried Prunes

Didja ever ride with a guy that wasn't satisfied to go less than sixty miles an hour? Well, that's been our speed now for about ten days and there wasn't a traffic cop in the state that could catch up with us by long distance phone. Well, that's the way Sherm Fitch drives his Buick. But maybe you don't know who Sherm Fitch is. Sherm is the district manager for RKO at Sioux Falls, and that accounts for why RKO pictures are playing in about every house in South Dakota and western Minnesota. But maybe that Charles Snyder, his booker, has had something to do with this wonderful business, for when Charley books 'em they know they have been booked. But it is also quite likely that Herman, the shipper, has had some important part in the business. Anyhow, Sherm has a darn fine office force, including the girls, and including also the boys who go out to tell the exhibitors about it.

Sherm would be all right if it weren't for two things—eating dried prunes and listening to radio crooners. He says that crooners were born crooners and not soloists, and we replied, "Oh yeah, and hoot owls were born hoot owls and not canaries," and Sherm snorted, "Oh, you go and lay down with your pups."

After leaving Sioux Falls we drove over to Luverne, Minnesota, to call on Herman Jochims, who operates the Palace theatre. Herman has had it in for us because when we took his subscription to the HERALD some time ago we put his town Luverne in Iowa instead of Minnesota, and he didn't get the paper until we learned of our mistake in stating the wrong state and had it corrected. We wish that fellow would forget that. Outside of that he is a mighty swell guy.

It's a Pipe

If you ever want to smoke, and you haven't a Nebraska cop pipe, you should drive up to Pipestone, Minnesota, and get a pipe of the Indiana, for there is where they get the red stone to make their pipes of. Over in Grindstone, South Dakota, is where they get the stone to make grindstones out of, and down in Tombstone, Arizona, is where they make tombstones, and that's where they have the "Boot Hill cemetery" where they buried 165 citizens who died "with their boots on." Sherm slowed down in Pipestone long enough for us to find out that Lou Feldman, the manager of the Orpheum theatre, had gone to Minneapolis to the state fair to see the big pumpkins and the fat lady do the "hoochy coochy." Lou was always strong for these fat women.

F. J. McCarthy of the State theatre and Mike Efthimion who oparates a cafe that is the pride of South Dakota, are in no small measure responsible for Brookings being the important town that it is. Mike used to be connected with the theatre business and both he and F. J. are mighty strong Herald fans. Should business get poor at Mike's cafe (which it seldom does), he would go out in the kitchen and reel off a couple of yards of Greek to the chef, while F. J. would grab his golf clubs and go out to the links and lower the course record. Gosh, but they are a couple of swell guys.

Arlington is right on highway No. 81, which runs from Winnipeg, Canada, to Mexico City, and it is a pretty long one. We know, for we have traveled it from the Canadian line to San Antonio, Texas, and we might suggest that when driving this highway you keep Arlington in mind, for that is the place where S. G. Abbott operates the Arlington theatre and the Arlington theatre is one of the important spots on this trans-continental highway. We called there to visit G. S. and we received a very royal welcome, but when he saw Sherm—well, ask Sherm about it.

He took us up to his house to meet Mrs. Abbott and we found her out in the garden working with her flowers, and she had a Boston Bull pup and a parrot as chaperones. Passing through Arlington without meeting these delightful folks, is a lot of nonsense, and it shouldn't be done.

Our travels throughout the western and northwestern part of South Dakota, where the crops were almost entirely destroyed by the dry weather, makes us wonder whyinhel they didn't build that "shelter-belt" out there so the boys would get some rain. There's no doggone sense in neglecting a country like that.

When you are going west, or east, on the Milwaukee railroad you should stop off at Bridgewater and meet M. L. Marshall, who tells the trains when to stop and when to go. Not only that, but you should go up town and see his Strand theatre. After that you should meet Mrs. Marshall.

She told us that she was originally from Sheldon, Iowa, and that she can't rid herself of a longing to go back there to live. That was a surprise to us when we considered her lovely home. As for her delightful husband, he's either a Democrat or Republican, we don't know which, and we didn't inquire. All we know is that Bridgewater ought to be proud of such citizens, and most likely is.

By the way, if you are ever invited to Sherm Fitch's house for dinner don't fail to accept the invitation, for listen, Ezra, when you sit down to a dinner prepared by Mrs. Fitch you will have something to wire home about, but that doggone Sherm wouldn't let us have anything but orange juice and crackers while he helped himself to the huckleberry pie.

To Organize Legal Group

Attorney Phillips G. Phillips, legal head for the National Labor Relations Board, has arrived in Hollywood from Washington to organize a legal battery for work on complaints from labor organizations. It has been revealed at the board's headquarters in Hollywood that no action will be taken until organization of the legal staff. The newest complaint is against Columbia studios by the N. A. C. C. for alleged dismissal of four members of the electrical department for affiliation with that group.

Form Own Distribution

Chesterfield and Invincible have announced in Hollywood the formation of their own distributing organization with Louis Hyman as west coast representative. Far West Exchanges, headed by Sam Berkowitz, who has been handling the output in this section, will be in charge of the physical aspects of the deal. First Division will represent Chesterfield and Invincible generally in the East and Ben Judell in the Midwest out of Chicago.

Congratulations, Martin Quigley, on your twenty years of accomplishment as chronicler, commentator and counsellor of the motion picture world. We, as producers, distributors and exhibitors, striving to contribute to the highest ideals of our industry, thank you for the guidance of your unswerving faith, vision and service.

ATTENDANCE AND RECEIPTS SHOW BIG INCREASES THROUGHOUT JAPAN

Gain of Patronage in Past Year Double the Average of Last Decade; the First Newsreel Theatre Projected for Tokyo

by CHIKUSHI TANI
Tokyo Correspondent

One-third of 400 theatres of Nikkatsu, a leading producer-exhibitor company of Japan, made a 30 per cent increase in box-office earnings in the last year. These houses all seat 500 or more. The remaining two-thirds, all smaller theatres, showed a decrease of approximately 20 per cent. Returns of the Home Office of the Government, with more comprehensive figures on attendances and receipts, show anything but a decline. In the year 1934, the total number of attendances increased by as many as 19,129,000 throughout the country. Attendance the previous two years was 244,389,636 for 1934 and 225,260,000 for 1933.

Furthermore, comparing the 1934 figure with that of 1926, or 153,735,449, it can be said that the past decade has seen the startling increase of more than 90,650,000 in patronage, an average of 10 million gain a year. Against this average increase there was a double increase last year.

Rating the average admission fee at 20 sen, the amount of increase in the box-office receipts obtained by all theatres in this country for the last year is calculated at Y4,000,000. If the number of free admissions is included, presumably there were 300,000,000 film-goers in Japan last year, which indicates expressly the marked advance of the public's interest in motion pictures.

First Newsreel Theatre

Japan is to have its first newsreel theatre. Mr. Hata, manager of Nippon Gekijo, who returned last month from his inspection tour in Europe and America, is reported to have applied to the Public Peace Section of Metropolitan Police Board for permission to establish a motion picture theatre to exhibit newsreels only, in the basement of Nippon Gekijo, where reconstruction work is being rushed. It is reported the police authorities will give permission provided construction and accommodations of the new hall satisfactorily conform with theatre regulations.

This being quite a new idea which nobody in this country has ever projected before, the screen public is eagerly awaiting completion of its newsreel theatre.

Domestic Production Sought

Leading newspaper offices in Tokyo, such as Asahi, Yomiuri and Hochi, are said to be interested in new film projects. Asahi, it is said, plans to venture into production of color newsfilms, Hochi to produce educational pictures as well as newsreels in cooperation with Kodan-sha, a story-magazine publishing company; Yomiuri, in search of a new sensation, has in contemplation the production of wild beast pictures. According to information, Yomiuri already has sent an advance party to the South Sea Islands.

The newsreel at last has won the recognition it has deserved. Moreover, a great building near Hibiya Park, Tokyo, is being reconstructed into a large hall, which would accommodate a 2,000 newsreel audience.

Following the Government movement of employing the motion picture for the clean election campaign, a popular movement, this time for the protection of our homemade pictures, is about to begin at the instance of high school and university students of this country. The movement, aiming to elevate the quality of photoplays, claims a general support of the whole nation, since it may mean eventually the protection of the domestic product as its ultimate objective.

In Tokyo some 30,000 young students belonging to cinema research societies are taking the initiative in launching this move. These Tokyo students are now reported ready to call upon their colleagues in local cities throughout the country. The total number of students is roughly estimated at 150,000.

The spirit behind the movement is reflected in a reported plan to obtain the support of Count Yoshinori Futara and Soho Tokutomi, the noted veteran writer and adviser of Osaka Mainichi, one of the leading publications of this country. It is also reported that the directors and presidents of various high schools and universities are being appointed honorable advisers of an association to be organized soon for the purpose of domestic product protection.

Jerry Shea Observes 36 Years in Exhibition

Jerry Shea, Toronto exhibitor, celebrated the 36th anniversary of his first theatre in Toronto when he received the personal and wired congratulations of many old friends in the theatre field.

Mr. Shea's first house, then playing vaudeville, got under way on Yonge St. in 1899, and six years later he began to show single reel films in conjunction with the stage show. In August, 1910, Mr. Shea opened his larger Victoria Street and in 1926 went to Shea's Hippodrome, seating 2,800.

Harper Starts Shorts

Production has been started by J. H. Harper of Harper & Co. on the first of a series of shorts in collaboration with Life at the West Coast Studios, New York.

George T. Eggleston, editor of Life, collaborated on the stories. Monte Brice is supervising with William Watson directing. Raymond Knight and Evelyn Lynd have the leads.

Change Syndicate Name

The American Radio Features Syndicate of Hollywood has changed its name to American Radio Features to avoid conflict with a newly established company of a similar name.

MISSOURI BUSINESS FOUND MUCH BETTER

Business conditions in Missouri are much better than they may seem, according to the Missouri Press Association, which, through C. W. Keller, field secretary, has just published the findings of a statewide survey conducted by the association, chiefly among its members but including statistics from other sources.

The findings show an improved financial condition for the farmer, increasing retail sales, using of bank deposits, growing building activity and improved demand for business and resident property and a steady increase of advertising lineage.

Keith Columbus Asks For Reorganization

A voluntary petition for reorganization, signed by Harry Schreiber, treasurer and city manager, has been filed in the federal court by the B. F. Keith Columbus Company, operating the Palace and Majestic at Columbus, Ohio.

The petition, predicated on Section 77B of the amendment to the bankruptcy law, also seeks a 12 year extension on the aggregate $500,000 bonded indebtedness now outstanding and a reduction in the interest rate from 6½ to 5 per cent. Equipment, fixtures and furnishings, valued at $180,000 and which were not pledged in the initial bond flotation, now are offered as security.

Judge Benson W. Hough will hear the petition September 28th, but meanwhile has authorized continuance of operations.

The RKO Grand, recently acquired under lease and now being remodeled, will open September 20 and is not affected by the proceedings.

450 Features Made In Japan in a Year

Japan produced 450 feature length films last year according to figures supplied to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences by Yoshio Osawa of the JO Studios in Kyoto, who is now visiting Hollywood. Most of the pictures were done with sound.

Over 3,500 feet of excerpts from recent Japanese films assembled by Mr. Osawa for the Academy will be run off soon for members and the press as an illustration of progress in the Nippon industry.

Kiesling Touring

Barrett Kiesling of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer publicity department is now making a goodwill tour of key cities contacting newspaper critics.

SALUTATIONS AND THANKS

● Freedom of the press has been, is, and will be, the exemplar and guide for freedom of the screen, one of the most treasured rights of the motion picture world. ● This industry is indebted to Martin Quigley, enterprising editor, for his zealous guard against jealous disregard of these rights.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

From Twenty Years Ago

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

TO Joseph Ignatius Breen, director general of the Production Code Administration in Hollywood, we pass along this record of eliminations ordered from some feature releases of 1917 by the Chicago Board of Censors, with the thought that the cuts decreed by that Board may serve as a guide to him in his position as custodian of motion picture morals:

MUSKETEERS OF THE SLUMS (King Pictures)—Cut: Solo dancer wiggling her back.
LOVE AFLAME (Red Feature Photoplays)—Cut: Closeup of king looking at woman's leg.
THE ROOM OF MYSTERY (Knickerbocker-Star)—Cut: Man kissing fainting girl.
THE GOLDEN FETTER (Lasky)—Cut: Two closeups of idiot.
RED WOMAN (World Film)—Change shooting in Mexican marriage scene from fifth to fourth reel.
PEARL OF THE ARMY (Pathe)—Cut: Hand stealing wafers.
KING OF THE KITCHEN (L-Ko)—Cut: All scenes of girl and man together in underwear, except where girl gives man his engagement ring.
HIS SWEETHEART (Morosco)—Cut: Two scenes of gunmen preparing golf balls for explosion; two scenes of gunmen pasting paper over number on auto and then removing same.
GOLD LUST (Universal) — Cut: Indian shooting man through his window.
DARING AND DYNAMITE (Vitagraph) — Cut: Three views of group of divers in one-piece bathing suits.
TREAT 'EM ROUGH (Fox) — Cut: All hanging scenes—except those following sub-titles.
THE TRAP (Kalem)—Cut: Planting paper in officer's cap.
THE BLACK WOLF (Lasky)—Cut: "Tell the Duke the Black Wolf has borrowed the price of a poor man's donkey".

Columnist "Mac," writing in Exhibitors Herald, December 30, 1916, made the potent observation that "We'll soon be flying across continent by aeroplane and never give it a thought."

"The motion picture industry has gone through its greatest crisis and is now well on the road to recovery."—Al Lichtman, General Manager, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, December 28, 1918.

Charged by industryites with being "obsessed with an idea of their importance to the industry that actually is ludicrous," Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Charles Chaplin and David Wark Griffith, broke away from the large producing corporations for which they had been working, and, on January 15, 1919, banded together in a single company as "United Artists."

That made the producers wrathful and they expressed themselves in no uncertain terms, the comment of Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, being typical: "The lunatics are now running the asylum."

Pathe News, in 1915, blasted the advertising pages of the trade press with word that it had scored two—not one, but two—"scoops" on "live events" of the day: (1) The launching of the United States battleship Pennsylvania; (2) The arrival at Newport News, Va., of the German cruiser Eitel Friedrich.

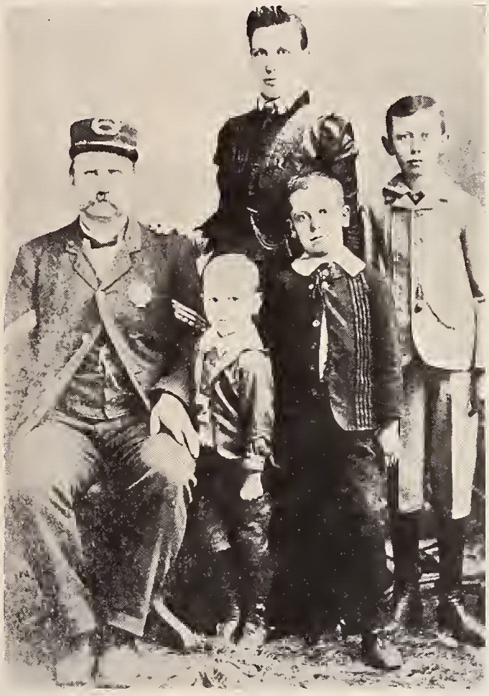
They were a zealously patriotic lot of picturegoers two decades ago, as witness:

David Wark Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" was in its seventh week of a roadshow engagement at the Liberty theatre near Times Square, in New York, when, on April 9, 1915, there came the 50th anniversary of General Lee's Civil War surrender to General Grant at Appomattox. When the reproduction of this scene of "The Birth" was flashed on the screen, the entire audience arose as one and stood impressively quiet as the historic event passed before its vision, to the tune of "Yankee-Doodle Dandy."

Not Twenty, But Forty Years Ago



Introducing the Beery Family! From the old family album, and photographed in 1894. Reading left to right: their father, Sergeant Noah N. Beery, then of the Kansas City police department; Wallace Beery—even then he had the now famous Beery smile; Noah Beery, and William C. Beery. Their mother, Frances M., stands behind them.

The only case on record where prison authorities were downright unappreciative of the industry's contribution of motion pictures for showing in penal institutions dates back to 1919, when the Wardens at Sing Sing in New York abruptly discontinued the weekly showings of "The Murder Mystery," serial.

"Well, you see," they explained, "your serial shows Harry Houdini, 'Handcuff King' and "Lock-breaking Champion,' doing his stuff. And the jailbirds were learning too many new tricks, picking cell locks, unloosening their leg chains and the like."

THERE were home office press agents in 1915, too—the Dietzes of the day, and the McCormicks, Einfelds and McCarthys, the Gulicks and Gillhams, Whites and Waxmans, Gallups, Greenthals and Finneys, writing many a nifty piece, as witness this typical literary document from the pen of a publicity power of two decades ago:

> Charles Chaplin, Essanay comedian, is declared to have the most valuable feet of anyone in the world. He has just insured each foot for $50,000, or $150,000 for the both.
> "My feet are my fortune," said Chaplin. "What kind of a photoplay comedian do you think I would be without my feet?"
> Chaplin critics declare that Chaplin's feet are one of the most valuable assets he has. Without the Chaplin walk, the Chaplin kick and other antics he pulls off with his pedal extremities would not be a Chaplin comedy.
> It is these little tricks with his feet, as well as his comical facial expressions, that keep spectators in roars of laughter. These great clumsy-looking feet, that move with such deftness and quickness, spell nothing but fun.
> Without the make-up the Chaplin feet are much smaller than the average. He has them massaged and cared for after every performance to keep them supple and in excellent condition, so that he can pull off his tricks.
> They are wonderfully strong and have the grace that comes with strength, which shows to advantage when clad in pumps. Mr. Chaplin is one of the finest of fancy dancers and can put on dances that are the envy of many a ballet girl. Toe dancing comes to him with ease.

And here's another, a touching piece that pulls at the heart strings, and pulls:

> It is sad enough life, playing leads in the pathetic scenes in the pictures, but a still sadder problem presented itself to Dora Dean, Saturday, at the Photo Drama's studios in Jersey, where Bill Steiner and Hal Reid are staging "Time Lock Number 776," featuring Joe Welch, the well-known comedian. Miss Dean appeared early for work, with eyes all red and swollen. Upon anxious inquiries from the all-star cast, which includes J. Welch, Dave Wall, Ed Carewe, etc., she replied: "I just received a cablegram that my only brother, just 22 years old, was killed in a battle in Europe." Ed Carewe, who played leading man opposite to Dora Dean, said: "I will miss my guess badly if every audience does not cry at the scenes we took today, as Dora Dean simply worked to perfection, crying most all day."

Film thefts in the old days were frequent. Too, too frequent. There were times when as many as half-a-dozen different "salesmen" called on the same exhibitor to sell him a print of the same picture.

The largest and probably the boldest film robbery was perpetrated on Fox Film Corporation in 1919. Suspicious of some incidents attending the handling of a railroad shipment to New York of some $25,000 worth of Sunshine Comedy negatives, studio officials and police rode wildly in automobiles from Hollywood to San Bernardino, a

PICTURES THAT MADE MOTION PICTURE HISTORY

On this page and continuing through the following seven pages are recalled those productions which can be fairly adjudged as true milestones on that stretch of the motion picture highway celebrated by this issue. A graphic method of presentation has been adopted—each of the pictures selected is represented by an advertisement in which its coming was announced.

TRIANGLE PLANS

Between September 20 and October 1 the four model theatres of the Triangle Film Corporation will be opened in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston respectively. The bill for the opening week will be:

DUSTIN FARNUM IN "THE IRON STRAIN"
(Ince-supervised five-reeler)

RAYMOND HITCHCOCK IN "MY VALET"
(Sennett-Keystone four-reeler)

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN "THE LAMB"
(Griffith-supervised five-reeler)

That characterizes the service which Triangle Film Corporation will offer to the leading exhibitors of the country, one in each district, beginning a short time after the dates of the presentations in the model theatres. Foremost stars of the American stage, several of them, in each entertainment; the artistic supervision of Griffith, Ince and Sennett; the elaborate orchestral music arranged by William Furst, the famous composer and director.

Contracts are now making with exhibitors for the service in all important centers. The demand to rent the Triangle service has been so extraordinary that we are obliged to ask our correspondents to exercise a certain patience.

The rental service itself will start during the latter part of October. Exactly the same plays and music as presented in the four great cities will be assured to the exhibitors. The unusual efforts of Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett and the enthusiastic co-operation of the stars promise a generous and complete output for the entire year.

twenty million people in every part of the world have thrilled to the powerful dramatic story unfolded in the internationally famous novel of the renowned Vicente Blasco Ibañez which is sweeping on to its two hundredth edition.

From this Internationally Famous Novel Metro's Pinnacle of Screen Excellence is Attained.

All the virile force and dramatic intensity of the noted story is preserved and heightened in the colossal screen version while the vast magnitude of the gigantic events recounted are pictured by the camera with a power beyond the description of mere words.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

200-mile run, to head off the express. They wired to the San Bernardino agent to take charge of the shipment from the train.

When the Fox posse arrived they found the two cases safely locked in the express office and hastily and anxiously they pried them open, only to find a generous amount of good ol' California soil, instead of cavortings in celluloid of the funny Sunshine studio folk.

The custard-pie slapstick comedy vogue was reinstated on production schedules immediately after the Armistice, in November of 1919, when the United States Government lifted the restrictions on the use of flour!

Still another anniversary at this time is that of the birth of the name of "Goldwyn" on the occasion of the formation 20 years ago of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, for which a derivative was effected by and from the family names of the founders: Samuel *GOLD*fish, president, and Edgar Sel*WYN*, vice-president.

Mr. Goldfish, giving effect to his literary aspirations, which were noticeable even then, founded the first "literary advisory board" in production, causing the Indianapolis Star to observe: "Goldwyn's is a film company with brains."

Modestly, however, and with dramatic gusto, Mr. Goldfish replied: "In Goldwyn we do not profess to be superhuman."

But, as an extraordinary testimonial to his faith in the increasing greatness of the motion picture, Mr. Goldfish, on January 11, 1919, appropriated the firm's name and became Samuel Goldwyn.

Vitagraph, later absorbed by Warners, engaged professional "still" photographers, some 16 years ago, to shoot some night shots of the crowds pouring into Samuel Lionel Rothapfel's Rialto theatre at Times Square to see "The Girl Phillipa." They shot off a ton of flashlight powder—or at least the effect seemed like it, for the explosion that followed broke all the store windows around Times Square and bowled over dozens of customers in the line and near by.

And then there was the time when John Cunningham Flinn was press agenting the road showing of "Joan, the Woman" (De Mille-Paramount, 1917) at the 44th Street Theatre, off Broadway. They advertised: "FREE ELEVATORS TO THE BALCONY," and added: "If you can't get to the 44th Street Theatre to see it, you can see it later, as it will be shown throughout the city and country after its run on Broadway."

Such advertising today, tending as it does to divert business from Broadway to the neighborhoods, would be a subsequent-run exhibitor's idea of perfect downtown first-run cooperation.

Charlie Chaplin hurt his nose while making "Easy Street," when a lamp post which he was climbing fell on him. He refused to be hospitalized, however, dramatically braving continuance of the performance with the remark, "I can't afford to be off the job a minute, really."

Now Charlie can't afford to be on the job, and it is only with the greatest effort that the Great Spirit and Sales Manager Al Lichtman move him to the lot once every two years, or thereabouts.

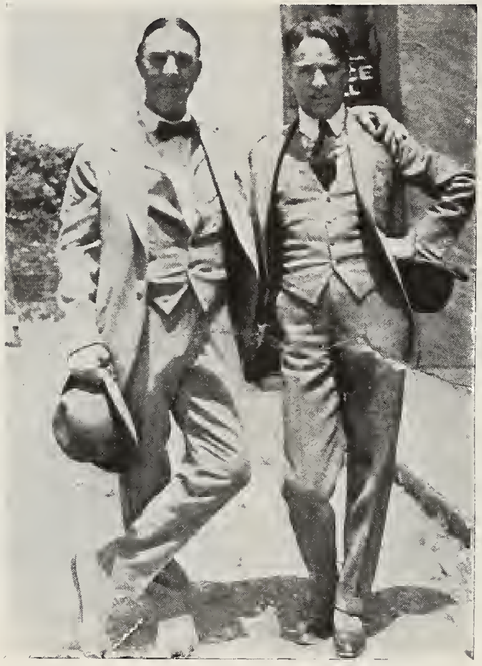
There wasn't a single motion picture man appointed a Kentucky colonel through all of 1915. Think of it!

As Chaplin Stood Back in 1910



Two English music hall comedians, partners for years in a drunkard-and-pie-throwing team, set out from New York a quarter of a century ago to conquer new fields in the American music halls. They did, Billy Reeves going on from there into the Lubin two-reel motion picture family, and Charles Chaplin striking out elsewhere, on his own, in the same motion picture comedy division. Today Billy Reeves is back across the water in England on the stage. Chaplin remained in Hollywood.

GONE ARE THE DAYS when, working against the better element of the industry, some producers and distributors proceeded on the premise that sex and sex alone was the box office lure, as witness some of the titles of 1915-1918:

Protect Your Daughters
The Easiest Way
Damaged Goods
The Foolish Virgin
Motherhood
The Price She Paid
The Weaker Sex
Unprotected
The Girl Who Didn't Know
The Girl Who Didn't Think
The Girl Who Didn't Care
Enlighten Thy Daughters
He Was a Traveling Man
Passion
The Battle of the Sexes
One Touch of Sin

Of course, there was the humorous title, too—all actual releases:

Peck o' Pickles
A Macaroni Sleuth
Polly Put the Kettle On
Jolts and Joolery
Pots-and-Pans Annie
Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines
Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan
The Gooseburg Elopement
The Wanderer of the Whoozit
Jane A-Wooing Goes
Where D'Yu Get That Stuff
Mouth Organ Jack
Alma, Where Do You Live?
Ethel's Deadly Alarm Clock
Dirty Dan's Demise
Gussie's Day of Rest
All on Account of a Sneeze
Rosemary Climbs the Heights
The Lady Detective and His Wedding Day

If you asked an exhibitor in the early days how many seats his theatre had, he would usually reply: "Well, she has a seating capacity of 250, but she will hold 500."

Charles C. Pettijohn, now a staunch defender of the block booking system, speaking as counsel for the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, had this to say one fine January day in 1918:

"The exhibitor is through with the order of things which forced him to put into his theatre pictures he didn't want, pictures his audience didn't want, in order that he might play the pictures that he wanted to play. They are determined as never before to buy their product on the sounder economic principle of buying what they want and what they can retail to advantage."

They told the story many years ago of the time when Joe Brandt, always very thrifty, then a sales executive of Universal Film on Broadway, ordered a press showing, for reviewing purposes, of "Twenty-Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." The day held the record for rain in New York, and, at the appointed hour, Joe emerged from his office and proceeded to the projection room. There, he was extremely disappointed to find that only two journalistic apostles had braved the storms. So, he then made a rapid calculation of the cost per capita for running the picture to the select few and with the most nonchalant air announced that it was too wet for showing submarine pictures.

This is the 20th anniversary, too, of the beginning of the trend of motion picture futurity toward "big things," started by David Wark Griffith with his production in 1915 of "The Birth of a Nation," a record box office holder of the silents, with its $3,500,000 admissions gross, and blue ribbon winner for having the longest box office life, lasting for years. The million-dollar grosses of his subsequent successes are an integral part of the continuity of the motion picture's history. Today he is in England looking for the road back.

Believe it or not, but the Mutual Film Company one day received the following letter from the management of the Princess theatre, at Piqua, Ohio:

Dear Sir:

We presented your picture entitled "The Rink," featuring Charles Chaplin, in our theatre last night. Persistent laughter and shouting on the part of the audience brought down most of the house. The plaster fell off the ceiling and part of the floor sagged.

We have been showing pictures many years without loss of life or damage to property. "The Rink" has proven a menace to real estate, and the result of one day's run cost us considerable outlay in repairs. Therefore, we enclose plasterer's and carpenter's bills and would appreciate a check by return mail.

Theatre "mashers" have been the cause of much annoyance to both exhibitors and female patrons down through the ages. Sometimes their alibis are amusing. The

260 NEW THEATRES IN NINE MONTHS

The first nine months of 1935 brought forth the largest capital investment made in new theatre construction since the period of retrenchment set in late in 1929, resulting in the erection of 260 theatres in 199 cities in 38 states and the District of Columbia.

Not until the turn of the year did general building show any indication of a pickup that reflected general business improvement, and since then there has been a slow, but steady upturn, with which motion picture theatre construction has been keeping pace. New theatre buildings reported in the nine-month period ending Sept. 30th, or announced for construction, with the names, capacities and construction costs, where available, together with the names of the persons or corporations who will operate, follow:

YEAR 1955!

AN OPEN LETTER FROM A FATHER TO HIS SON

Today, my boy, Republic has won the respect and confidence of the entire exhibitor body. Twenty years ago, in 1935, when it was born, Republic chose a policy of service, courage and loyalty as exemplified by the gentlemen of the trade press of whom Martin Quigley was then celebrating his twentieth anniversary.

1935 was the year Republic gave to its exhibitors and supporters such attractions as

Basis for U. S. Making $27,000,000 Theatrical Grant, a Capitol Mystery

Motion Pictures Will See None of Relief Projects for Alleviating Stage Conditions

The newest mystery shrouding the tangible aspects of the Administration's $4,800,000,000 program to relieve unemployment by spending large sums on public works and other projects, is the basis on which more than $27,000,000 was set aside two weeks ago by President Roosevelt for so-called "cultural" projects, especially the rehabilitation of the stage of the drama. Nobody can be found in Washington who will admit knowing the basis, and the word has been sent forth from national relief headquarters not to talk.

This much is definitely known: the motion picture will be completely ignored, getting no part of the relief program, which, in its present vague form appears to be a concentration of effort to relieve indigent talent for the sum of $94 maximum salary per month per person—the Government's relief wage scale.

However, in view of the apparent plan to roadshow stage attractions, particularly to outlying districts, it is considered just as well that the project will not embrace traveling motion picture exhibitions because of the potentialities of competition to the regularly established film theatre. The possible competition of the stage shows is another matter.

Plan Abandoned

Heeding the protests of the theatrical industry as a whole that the original plan for showing the road-plays without charging admission thereto would hurt the stage and eventually swell the army of jobless actors, the Administration has abandoned the plan to give the people "culture" through the medium of the stage without expense and will charge a more or less nominal admission. With sponsors of the movement largely protagonists of the "little theatre" and "high art" form of drama, there looms the possibility that after seeing one show or so the bulk of the outlying audiences will return to the motion picture theatre; were there to be no admission charge, however, it is likely many would put up with, to them, uninteresting entertainment.

The production of motion pictures with part of the $27,000,000 grant was considered, though lightly, and was dropped when it became evident it would cost too much to do the work and that more employment could be given by confining the effort to the showing of live talent.

Announced without conferring with Hallie Flannagan, in charge of the actor projects, the President's action in setting aside the grant, made known by the Works Progress Administration, this week found that official and her associates "up in the air," with little idea as to how many persons were to be taken care of or how.

30,000 Persons Involved

However, it was indicated unofficially that the relief authorities estimated 12,000 performers, writers, directors, stagehands and others connected with the stage would be provided with jobs at a cost of between $7,500,000 and $10,000,000. But there was nobody at Washington who could say definitely that the 12,000 jobs to be created would take care of all the unemployed in those groups.

Analysis of the project showed that more than 30,000 persons will be involved, with jobs that will last for about six months. Of this number, it is estimated 9,000 are actors, 3,000 are connected with the theatre in other capacities, 5,000 are artists and sculptors, 10,000 musicians and 6,500 writers. The artists and sculptors, of course, are in no way involved in the theatrical phases of the project.

Just how the Government expects to give work to 6,500 writers and in what branch of theatricals they will be engaged, are matters that have not been explained.

Announcing the grant, the Works Project Administration said: "The WPA theatre project will employ actors, playwrights, designers, directors, vaudeville artists, stage technicians and others in the theatrical field. Approximately 12,000 professional workers will be included, of which about 9,000 are actors, the balance being stage technicians and others."

"The purpose of the theatre program," the Administration explained, "aside from giving employment to needy workers, will be to establish standards of theatre production which will improve the skill of the artists and to develop methods by which the drama units may become self-supporting in whole or in part by providing entertainments to large audiences at low cost on a regional basis."

Difficulties in Offing

Obviously the WPA's theatre project cannot embrace stage persons of any important theatrical standing, what with a $94-per-month wage minimum. And, if stage technicians follow the course taken in other lines, there will be considerable dissatisfaction expressed by organized theatrical labor over the low wage scale. Many unions in other industries, especially in construction, have denounced the low maximum as being directly responsible for lowering living standards.

Heretofore efforts to relieve distress in vaudeville and legitimate stage fields have been confined locally to municipal or state projects, with the effort in this connection being concentrated largely in and about New York City, and, elsewhere, to Civilian Conservation Camps.

Further complications threaten in the nature of action promised by the Dramatists' Guild, which, having determined that shows sponsored by the federal government kill amateur and stock rights to plays, is urging its members to discontinue the practice of permitting this use of their productions without payment of royalties. Recommendation is also made that the royalty be "commensurate" with the use to be made of the play. The Guild has a committee at work investigating.

Casting Starts

Casting for the new jobs, for dramatic plays, vaudeville entertainment and traveling circuses, has started in New York, where, under the supervision of Colonel Earle Boothe, the division unit staff personnel has been tripled to handle the expansion. Meanwhile, no word was forthcoming from Washington as to how the actors who are to play outside the New York area will be selected. Casting offices are expected to be established also in such large centers as Chicago and Los Angeles.

There has been a report that in addition to the performance of plays on the road, the national project also will sponsor schools for the teaching of dramatic appreciation in colleges and universities throughout the country.

FREE TICKETS GIVEN FOR CHILDREN'S TOGS

Because many children in Cincinnati are unable to attend school because they lack proper shoes and clothing, ten neighborhood houses there are giving a free matinee ticket to anyone donating a useful article of wearing apparel to the children. The arrangement is being promoted in connection with the Cincinnati Post.

First Division Changes

Several new changes have been made in the New England division of First Division Exchanges by manager Harry Segal. Gene Goss, who was office manager of the Boston branch of Franklin Productions, has been given the same position in the First Division office and Z. Goldman, formerly salesman for American Pictures in New England, has been named Massachusetts salesman. Mike Thomas will handle the Maine territory and Jeremiah Swaede New Hampshire and Vermont with Hyman Levine traveling through Southern New England.

Opens Distributing Office

Hungaria Pictures Distributing Company, under the management of Berta and Max Farkas, has opened offices at 23 East 107th street. Joseph Simon is field manager for the new company.

PROGRESS AND ACHIEVEMENT

THROUGHOUT the years of motion-picture progress, the cinema and the name of Eastman have been inseparable. Technical difficulties have been overcome through coöperative effort. Screen triumphs have been mutually shared. And Eastman still strives persistently for new perfection in scientific film manufacture. Eastman Super X . . . latest sensation in 35-millimeter raw film . . . is a good example. In addition to sheer, record-breaking speed, this panchromatic negative stock once more offers generally improved photographic quality. Today it is employed with superior results in the filming of a majority of feature productions. This development is typical of Eastman's constant leadership in cinematic achievement. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

TO MARTIN QUIGLEY

. . . than whom few men have contributed more largely in wise and intelligent stimulation of cinema progress . . . congratulations on the completion of twenty years of achievement.

Captain Varges, in Homer's Odyssey Of Newsreels, Arrives in Ethiopia

"Bullet-Proof" Cameraman, First to Photograph Pope Benedict XV, Is at Front

The photographic interest of American newsreels in the drama that is about to be staged in the Italo-Ethiopian conflict in Africa is increasing hourly with the growing tenseness of the argument internationally. And, so, hopping from the battlefields of China, now comparatively quiet, Captain Ariel Varges, ace cameraman of Hearst Metrotone News, is back in Abyssinia shooting film for the American newsreel, standing beside his colleagues from the other reels.

Captain Varges, whose travels in the past two decades are like those in Homer's Odyssey, arrived the other day at Djibouti, French Somaliland, and immediately entrained for Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia, where he already has laid plans to send the camera story of the Italo-Ethopian conflict to the Hearst Newsreel laboratories in New York.

On Familiar Ground

Mr. Varges is upon familiar ground, for some years ago he covered Abyssinia from border to border, the occasion being a vast lion hunt during which he lived with several of the tribes. Later he spent weeks in the capital making pictures of Emperor Haile Selassie and members of his Ethiopian Govgernment.

Captain Varges' work is both well known and obscure, the paradox tracing to his enforced anonymity. The story of his career, however, is as colorful as that of any of the newsreel aces now awaiting Mussolini's promised invasion of Haile Selassie's domain.

Since the World War he has experienced as many desperate and breath-taking adventures as any other man of his calling, and he has faced death so often that he has long since lost count. He likes to remark that any man born to be hanged will never die in a war, an earthquake or any other holocaust.

And there was the time during the war when any news cameraman would have given his right eye to "shoot" pictures of the Pope—no one had ever done it. The occasion was the blessing by Pope Benedict XV of the Knights of Columbus pilgrims in Rome. Thousands in attendance were on their knees, the Pope included, when Captain Varges appeared, set up his camera ten feet away from the Pontiff and started grinding. Cardinals, armed guards and uniformed officials, profoundly concerned, started to hustle him away, but the Pope, still kneeling, saw out of the corner of his eye what was going on and smiled his approval. Thus Americans were afforded the opportunity to see the Pope upon the screen for the first time.

ARIEL VARGES ON THE MARCH

Europe, Asia and Africa are like home to Captain Varges. He has flown across nearly every corner of their vast reaches, and it is estimated that he has covered nearly 1,000,000 miles in his varied Argosies.

Starting with his work in the front lines early in the world war, there has hardly been any event of world note which he hasn't been in on. He is said to have been the first on the ground in the Russian Revolution, the first into Serbia after General Von Mackensen had swept through the country, the first to bring Trotsky to the screens of America, the first to picture the turbulent Irish riot, the first with pictures of the earthquakes in Yokohama and Avezzano, Italy, and he is almost as well known upon the battlefields of China as are the Chinese leaders.

As for Abyssinia, he, too, calls the Emperor by his first name, and Mussolini has posed for him so often that they are now intimate friends.

It was early in the war that Ariel Varges first came to the notice of those anonymous persons concerned with the "shooting" of newsreel pictures. He had been ordered by the Hearst bureau in Washington to "get to Europe as fast as you can," and it was on the ill-fated Lusitania that he sailed. He was turned off momentarily by the disastrous Avezzano earthquake in Italy, in which more than 100,000 persons were killed, but his presence in Italy placed him in an opportune spot to engage in his first newsreel resourcefulness.

He had heard that Sir Thomas Lipton was leaving on his yacht with a large Red Cross party for Serbia, which had been ravaged by war. Varges hastened to Marseilles, reaching there as the Red Cross party pulled in, but when he spoke to Sir Thomas he was informed that, as much as the affable tea merchant would like to have him along, he really could do nothing about it. Red tape would prevent it. But two days out of Marseilles Captain Varges appeared on the deck before Sir Thomas—a stowaway—and, of course, nothing could be done about that.

Under Fire in Serbia

For five months Mr. Varges was under heavy fire in Serbia, a great part of his time being spent with Crown Prince Alexander, the same Alexander who, as king of Yugoslavia, was recently assassinated at Marseilles. Captain Varges and his ilk had to be where the action was taking place, and later, when he went with the intrepid British forces to the Dardanelles, he spent months on and in the front lines, giving the United States and Great Britain an official pictorial account of what was transpiring. As a result of that aid at the Dardanelles, Varges was made a Captain in the British Army, and that's where his title comes from.

After the war he "just happened" to be on the scene of the five major earthquakes and volcanic eruptions.

In 1921 the biggest famine the world has ever known occurred in Russia, and newspapermen the world over were barred. But Varges was there with his camera, having got past the frontier as part of the American Relief Commission. He was called the first cameraman on Soviet territory. He went along the Volga river from Kazan to Saratoff, where 3,000,000 died of starvation and exposure. He shipped thousands of feet of film to America.

"Shot" Bolshevik Movement

From the famine region he went to Moscow to picturize the Bolshevik movement, which no one had succeeded in doing up to that time. He started off by "shooting" pictures of a parade of 30,000 members of the Tcheka, the secret police, and got away with it. Next, he got to Trotsky and sent the first pictures of the leader to the United States. Trotsky even went to Varges' hotel room to have the pictures taken because the light was insufficient in his own office.

After having sandwiched in a tiger hunt in India with Lord Reading, Captain Varges started a series of newsreel pictures of peoples and places never before picturized. He barely escaped with his life in Lucknow while photographing a procession of the fanatical Moharem tribe, and then, having crossed the Khyber Pass, he made friends with the warlike Afridis, who put on a raid so that he could have a picture. The raid was said to have cost 20 lives.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended September 21, 1935, from 104 theatres in 18 major cities of the country reached $1,085,790, a decrease of $43,671 from the total of the preceding week, ended September 14, 1935, when 105 theatres in 18 major cities of the country aggregated $1,129,461.

. . . . . A few simple words from

By his works ye shall know him . . .

In a great and far-flung industry like Motion Pictures where names, personalities . . . loyalties change overnight . . . where many are called but few are chosen, one great name and personality stands out.

That name and personality is Martin Quigley, Editor and Publisher of Quigley Publications—a great contributing factor to the lasting fame and honor of this business.

For 20 years that name has added to the worth and standing of the Motion Picture as an entertainment and an industry.

Just, fearless, proud of his calling . . . prouder still of the world-wide industry he has helped to build . . . jealous of its good name . . . Martin Quigley has always called a spade a spade, according to his judgments.

So that even the least of his fellows, when they speak of him must say in all sincerity . . . "there goes a man!"

And National Screen Service as a unit and its executives individually take infinite pleasure in saying "Martin Quigley, we wish you well."

The Scientific Ear, the instrument which together with many others including meters, analyzers and oscillators, measures sound in a theatre with a mathematical exactness that human ears are incapable of duplicating.

must provide the test!

> "Because of the great range in both pitch and intensity that the ear possesses, a person may lose part of the auditory area and not notice it. Our ears may not respond to some pitch ranges or to some intensity levels that are easily heard by others, and yet we may not be conscious of the fact."

> (BELL LABORATORIES RECORD)

HERE, in a few words, is the reason so few people have "good" ears capable of measuring quality of sound with any degree of accuracy and uniformity.

Science, however, has provided ERPI with specially developed meters and tools that, together, re-create the "good" ear.

With these tools, a complete scientific test and accurate adjustments can be made by the ERPI Service Inspector, independently of possible subnormalities in hearing.

This "Ear of Science"— together with regular inspections and emergency service when required—assure, under the ERPI SERVICE CONTRACT, both the highest standard of sound quality and the continuous operation essential to normal box office expectancy.

Shipmates Forever

(Warner-Cosmopolitan)

Romantic Drama

Against the martial, patriotic and thrilling backgrounds of the Navy and the Annapolis Naval Academy, "Shipmates Forever" tells a human interest character drama story that sets it completely apart from any of the many previously produced "service" pictures. All that preserves the fine traditions of the Navy and its men and makes them definite showmanship and entertainment quantities has been retained and actually embellished. They have been included in such a manner that they are not formula; rather, as they serve to endow the motivating romance tinged dramatic story, they have an atmosphere of newness and difference as substantiating features that lends a novel significance to their worth as inspiring entertainment assets.

The basic plot is simple and powerful. In the beginning, Dick Melville, a Broadway crooner, is the descendant of a long line of naval officers, but he is possessed of a hatred for the service, which even the retirement of his Admiral father from command of the battle fleet to become superintendent of the Naval Academy cannot change. Following a flirtation with June, daughter of a family whose lives have been claimed by the fleet, he falls in love with her. Admiral Melville's ambition is that his son will follow in his footsteps. Following a fatherly ruse, the pride of the night club takes the exams and passes.

Ensue scenes reflecting cadet life at the Academy; boys from all walks of life—mechanics, cowhands, a sailor from the ranks—learning to become officers in situations revealing every phase of the Academy's activities. Dick, a shark at the books, loses the most valuable lessons, those contacts and comradeships that instill the esprit de corps. Comedy comes as the boy who hates the school and service is hazed with other plebes. Years pass and the leading student becomes a social pariah, cutting himself off from all contact, determined only to finish the course that he may resign his commission. He gets sympathy from June, but his father and classmates ignore him completely. A bit of pathos is inserted as the ambitious ex-gob Coxwain flunks and has to leave the Academy. Comes the final year; officers insist that Dick give up his hermit existence, and he goes to room again with Sparks, Slim and Ted.

The class goes out on a practice cruise. Coxwain again appears, again as a gob who has passed his examinations and can reenter the Academy the following term. During firing practice with Coxwain and Dick in the engine room, an accident happens. A bursting steam pipe causes fire. Heroic Coxwain is scalded trying to shut off the oil lines. Dick, missing him in the panic, rushes back to the seething room. He finishes the job that Coxwain started, but both are horribly burned. The coxwain, dying, is buried with full Naval honors. Dick, recovering, having proved himself a man and an officer fully worthy of carrying on the traditions of the navy and the Melville family, receives the honors of first student on graduation day to be presented with the flags by June in the inspiring ceremonies.

In character, the entertainment appeal of this picture is universal. It is something to hold the interest and attention of every class of patron. Besides its theme and production values, it offers much that is novel to engage showmanship interest. Headed by Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler, the name value of the cast is unusually strong. Powell is heard singing several numbers, two that are romantically sentimental and a hummable marching song, "Don't Give Up the Ship." The kind of picture that can count upon plenty of outside cooperation and makes possible a wide variety of business building contacts in various lines, a sound and well thought out advance publicity campaign should establish it as a highly popular all-audience attraction. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Virginia Judge

(Paramount-Rogers)

Comedy Drama

Intelligent showmanship, material for which is amply present in the picture, should do much for this attraction. The show is a combination of two elements; a completely atmosphered picturization of Walter C. Kelly's "Virginia Judge" specialty vaudeville act, the popularity of which endured for more than a generation, and a volatile, romance-tinged story of spoiled boy regeneration. Both are uniquely interesting and provide a means not only of arousing the attention of those who might like to see Kelly in his characteristic role again, but also offer to those who never heard of Kelly the appealing entertainment worth of a timely, modern, domestic family problem.

Currently timed, set in a small town of the Old South, the natural spirit of which is keenly preserved, the picture opens to a presentation of the Judge's old act. As he tries various Negro prisoners for everyday misdemeanors, the principal feature of which is a dispute between Spasm and Varius for the regal robes of a grand lodge office, the character of Judge Davis is established as he mingles justice with mercy and kindness.

Plunging into the more serious phase of the production, the Judge, even though it is his greatest hope, can do nothing with his headstrong stepson Jim, who actually hates him. Jim, jealous of rich Bob Stuart and the advantages which his wealth gives him in the race for Mary Lee's affections, as is typical with many modern boys, cannot understand why the Judge does not provide him with everything Bob has. Stealing neighbor Higgins' tin lizzie, he takes Mary Lee for a ride and finally wrecks the car. Lacking the necessary funds with which to pay for repairs, he steals and sells Higgins' shotgun to Bob. Later at a carnival, envious Jim gets into an argument with Bob, which builds to a thrill-packed scuffle and is climaxed by Jim shooting his young rival.

In the meantime, the picture occasionally flashes back to the running gag between the battling Negroes for comedy contrast, but following the shooting, Jim, fleeing the law and armed with a pistol, hides out in the Judge's attic. Upon the Judge's discovery of the scared boy's hiding place ensues the picture's grim but finely human drama. Knowing that this is the crisis in the youth's life, the Judge makes one final play to bring him back to normalcy. Pleading with his dangerous stepson, he uses just the right tactics to show the boy the error of his ways. The climax is a return to the little courtroom, with son on trial before his father for assault with intent to kill. The yarn takes a deep human interest tinge when, upon sentence, Bob pleads for mercy and the court remands Jim to its custody. The finale is consummation of an understanding palship between father and son with Davis returning to his Virginia Judge character, trying to find a way to deal with the hilarious and obstreperous Varius and Spasm.

Handled in such a way that the full entertainment value of the story's two elements are made plain and evident to patrons, it is quite likely that this picture will create interest. In both phases it makes good use of that quality of understandable humanness, an exploitation fact which, in view of the production's none too strong name value, should be given the widest possible publicity.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Girl Who Come Back

(Chesterfield)

Melodrama

The story of a girl whose association with a gang of counterfeiters threatens to dog her footsteps even when she has earnestly expressed the desire to break away and begin life anew, this production contains fairly entertaining values. While dragging in spots, the picture has some lively moments and is particularly fast moving in its climax.

Stressing the efforts of the girl to go straight and the stumbling blocks she encounters in her path would seem to be the best line of approach for exhibitors to follow. Another angle is presented in the question, "What would the man's reactions be when he discovers the girl he loves to be a criminal and counterfeiter?" Shirley Grey and Sidney Blackmer head the cast, which otherwise contains no outstanding names. The supporting players are Noel Madison, Mathew Betz, Torben Meyer, May Beatty and Frank LaRue.

Shirley Grey, daughter of a famous engraver, who was unjustly convicted of a crime, in a spirit of revenge has followed a life dedicated to counterfeiting in particular and crime in general. Her knowledge of engraving and etching, acquired from her father, is expert and a great asset to a gang of counterfeiters operating in a large city. Resolving to go straight, Miss Grey makes known her plans to the gang, who, reluctant to lose her, threaten Miss Grey with violence. Unmoved by the threats, Miss Grey is cajoled into one more crime to prove that she hasn't lost her nerve.

The crime is accomplished, but instead of giving the loot to the gang, Miss Grey returns the stolen goods to the rightful owner. Quietly leaving town, Miss Grey goes to California and finds employment in a bank. Her knowledge of counterfeiting bills is a source of wonder to Miss Grey's employer, Sidney Blackmer. Blackmer, however, is greatly pleased with Miss Grey's work and when he notices some sketches of obvious merit on her desk, Blackmer invites her to his home. Together a good deal, Blackmer, who has made Miss Grey his private secretary, falls in love with her, but Miss Grey, although loving Blackmer, will not admit it because of her past, a motivating complication in the plot which at the same time provides a plausible reason for the complications and action sequences which follow.

The counterfeiting gang, having located Miss Grey, arrive in town seeking vengeance. Discovering that she is employed in a bank, the gang asks Miss Grey's help to rob the bank. She refuses, but fears the truth will be made known to Blackmer. The gang, unwilling to wait for the girl's decision, makes plans to rob the bank that night. The job is done and Blackmer, who is working late, is kidnaped. Miss Grey, knowing her own identity will be made known, nevertheless leads the police to the gang's hideout.

Capturing the criminals, the police free Blackmer, who when the truth about Miss Grey is made known, pacifies the police. Free, Miss Grey acknowledges her love for Blackmer.—MOONEY, New York.

Peg of Old Drury

(British & Dominion)

Costume Romance

This Herbert Wilcox production is another British effort well up to a high American standard. It is robust entertainment lifted by well-acted sound drama, rollicking humor and effective atmosphere right out of the "period piece" category.

The plot, founded on the love story of David Garrick and Peg Woffington, is set in 18th century London, with historical landmarks such as Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, Vauxhall Gardens and the Cheshire Cheese, reproduced with both artistry and fidelity to detail. The general technical standard, and especially the photography, is excellent. Direction and continuity are sound.

Peg Woffington follows her sweetheart, Michael, from Dublin to London, where he delays their promised marriage and then jilts her. With a passion for play-acting, Peg blarneys her way into Drury Lane, a small part in Garrick's company—and his affections. Against his judgment, she induces him to let her play a leading Shakespearean role, in which she acquits herself brilliantly, only subsequently to lose Garrick's affection when her former Irish sweetheart forces his way into her dressing room.

Masquerading as a man at the notorious Vauxhall Gardens, she is rescued from a brawl, which has involved her in a duel, by Garrick. Reunited with her lover, she hides from him her doctor's accidental revelation that she has but little time to live, and as the curtain descends on her performance as "Rosalind," she dies in Garrick's arms.

Anna Neagle, in the title role, is at her best in the broad comedy episodes, of which there are many, and least effective when she essays the part of Shakespearean actress. Acting honors must go to Sir Cedric Hardwicke, as Garrick. In cleverly interpolated flashes from "Richard III," "The Merchant of Venice" and "The Alchemist," as the stage idol of the day and as Peg Woffington's lover, he is equally brilliant. Minor roles contribute several clever cameos, notably Maire O'Neill as Peg's simple but sharp-tongued mother, and Hay Petrie as the eccentric theatre manager.

Hartwicke's performance, the roystering atmosphere of 18th century London, the semi-historical value of the Garrick angle and the glamour of the stage background are all selling values.—ALLAN, London.

Old Man Rhythm

(RKO Radio)

Musical Romance

Lilting music and Charles Buddy Rogers—there's the combination value of this song picture of the campus. True, Rogers does not dominate the production, either in story or singing, but the melodies have a rhythmic tang, and there is zest in the movement of the story throughout. No effort is made to emphasize realism; it is a stagey campus, yet that is no obstacle to movement of the picture. Half a dozen songs are introduced and one, "When You Are in My Arms," backgrounds the love scenes.

George Barbier actually seems to take charge of the story action, almost from the start, while the singing is assigned to half a dozen members of the cast, and several have dance specialties. Grace Bradley and Barbara Kent are the girls.

The picture opens on a train bound for the college town, and the featured characters are introduced by each singing a verse of "Nothing Like a College Education," novelly done but rather long. It is established that Rogers is hypnotized by Grace Bradley while Rogers' father, Barbier, wants to marry Barbara Kent. Barbier goes to the school to talk it out with Rogers, but instead is given a lecture on his own need of younger ideas. Barbier thinks it a good idea, because he can keep an eye on his son. Barbier enrolls.

John Arledge, freshman, also entranced by Miss Bradley, gets the idea that Miss Bradley wouldn't be so interested in Rogers if she thought that his father was a poor man. Barbier writes his secretary (Donald Meek) to send him a letter that the company has failed. His partner comes with word that the concern has gone into the red during his absence at college—the catch is that Eric Blore, registrar and whatnot, has forgotten to mail Barbier's letter, but Barbier doesn't know that.

It's an all-family picture.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Romance of the West

(Vitaphone)

Beautiful Color Film

This short subject is done in Technicolor and the photography is strikingly beautiful. Laid in the west, scenes of Yosemite National Park and of the Grand Canyon are interpolated into the story and these beauties of nature are presented in their natural changing hues. A good story, combined with the color, makes this excellent entertainment. The plot has Dorothy Dare, Henry Armetta and others stranded near a ranch owned by Phil Regan when their plane is grounded. Regan brings them to his home and entertains with cowboy tricks by himself and others and by several western ballads. In the end Miss Dare loses her heart to him and stays on as his bride as the others fly away. Running time, 20 minutes.

All-American Drawback

(Vitaphone)

Fairly Entertaining

Edgar Bergen, ventriloquist, is the coach of a football team and his star player is his dummy, "Charlie McCarthy," always in difficulties because of his studies and forced to appear before the dean for an oral examination before he can continue to play. Bergen attempts to prompt the dummy during the quiz but is caught and asked to leave. He listens at the door and after some time breaks in to find the entire faculty, led by the dean, in a football game with "McCarthy." Taken as a whole, this short subject is fairly entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.

1910 • Twenty-five

The greatest span of progress in the world's history are the twenty-five years since 1910 when the name of Brulatour became identified with the young motion picture industry.

In that horse-and-wagon age, Brulatour began his career of service to meet the demands of the industry which was to become one of the most important in modern times.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 284.—(A) In equipments using stage loudspeakers having 100-volt fields, should the field supply unit fail, what emergency measure can be employed to supply loudspeaker voltage? (B) Why is it important that motor-generators supplying "A" and "B" voltage for sound amplifiers be given more frequent attention and inspection than is accorded other generating equipments? (C) What care should be given the commutator and brushes of this type of generator?

Answer to Question No. 278

Bluebook School Question No. 278 was: (A) If you have an equipment that uses a separate rectifier power source for each exciter lamp, would failure of one of the rectifiers mean that the show must be continued using only one projector, or what emergency connection might be made to enable the use of both projectors? (B) What precaution should be observed when handling a mercury tube such as, for example, an 866? (C) What is the correct procedure when switching on an amplifier equipped with this type (866) of tube?"

The engineers who prepared this question reply as follows:

"(A) Where two separate exciter lamp power sources are incorporated in an equipment, the show may be continued, using both projectors alternately, power for both exciter lamps being obtained from one rectifier unit. This may be very easily accomplished, provided a cable is in readiness (as it should be), with a single-pole, double-throw switch, for use in such emergency. Manufacturers will, upon request, be very willing to supply full details of such an emergency connection.

"(B) When Type 866 tubes are handled or transported, it is always possible the mercury may get spattered on the filament and plate. Therefore when first installed in service, such tubes should be heated for fifteen minutes before any plate voltage is applied. This will distribute the mercury. When the amplifier is first put into use for a day's run, the filament current should first be applied to the 866 tube. Then, after a lapse of time sufficient to count fifty without hurrying (in seconds of time approximately 30), the plate voltage may be applied. This allows the mercury in the tubes to become vaporized."

"(C) A photocell may very easily be ruined by misuse. It is important that photocells not be exposed to the light from any very brilliant source of light (especially sunlight) at any time, whether or not the polarizing voltage be applied. It is good practice to keep spare cells in their shipping cartons, thus making certain there is no such exposure."

The following projectionists made answers that "got by," though in a few instances it required some squeezing:

C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; T. Van Vaulkenburg; G. E. Doe; A. F. Sprafke; C. Oldham; J. E. Wyman; H. Edwards; J. Wentworth; P. and L. Felt; H. Pitchkey and M. C. Mellinger; T. Turk and O. Davis; B. Diglah; F. H. S. and P. Dalbey; J. and C. Hawkens; G. H. Biggers and L. D. Mason; O. Thum and I. D. Ackerly; S. F. and W. Love; H. B. Roth, B. L. Sarno and W. Andrews; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; H. L. Granby; T. B. Anderson; D. L. Sinklow; C. Cummings and T. Kelley; B. Davidson; G. and S. L. Thompson; D. Holler and D. R. Peters; R. D. Grady; D. Anderson, W. L. Stanley and H. May; D. M. Stull; U. Grimes; D. N. Morgan and T. N. Mitchel; D. R. Bainbridge; L. F. Evans; J. L. Davis; H. N. McClellan; D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger; H. D. Bagby and F. N. O'Brien; J. L. Murphy; M. and J. Devoy; P. Lathrope; R. Samuels and P. L. Luther.

The following answers are for your consideration, and friendly criticism is invited. Answering Section A, D. Danielson says:

"No, it would not be necessary to continue the show on one projector for the reason that both exciters could, by proper temporary connections, be supplied by the same rectifier, though in the event the rectifier has insufficient capacity to handle both, it might be necessary to use a double throw switch to avoid burning both lamps at once. The change could thus be so quickly made that little or no ill effect would be heard by the audience. It is well, using such equipment, to have a shielded cable made up, including proper D. T. switch, with clips attached for quick connection."

T. VanVaulkenburg says, "I have such an equipment and have had exactly that thing happen. I now have a cable installed with good strong clips, so that with but very little delay I can make a connection that enables me to operate either exciter from the same rectifier."

F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW
PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

QUIGLEY BOOKSHOP $5.25

P. and L. Felt answer, "Certainly not. The projectionist should have a shielded flexible conductor equipped with clips or otherwise, so that a connection made be made that will enable the operation of either exciter lamp from one rectifier. A double throw switch connected into it will permit the making of a very quick change if the rectifier is too small to handle both exciters without too much strain upon it."

The real meaning of Section B seems to have been misunderstood by hundreds. In fact, the only ones who even considered the item of physical handling were D. Danielson, A. F. Sprafke, P. and L. Felt, and D. Goldberg and L. Hutch, all of whom dealt with it very briefly. Many excellent ideas as to treatment while in use were set forth, but they were really answers to Section C. G. Goldberg and L. Hutch answer Section B thus:

"Rough or careless handling of a tube of this kind may get mercury all over its various elements, and if the plate voltage be applied and the tube put into operation immediately, damage may result. After installing such a tube the filament current should be turned on for at least a quarter of an hour before applying voltage to the plate. By that time any mercury that may have got out of place, particularly on the plate, will have been vaporized, and everything will be all right."

Section C was answered by J. E. Wyman thus: "The correct procedure in switching on an amplifier equipped with 866 tubes is to first turn on the filament current, wait a short while, then switch on the plate voltage."

A. F. Sprafke says, "First turn on the rectifier power source, then close the switch marked 'Filament' and adjust to proper meter reading. Next turn on the filament control on the amplifier and let the filament heat up for a short space of time, after which bring it up to proper rating and switch on the plate voltage, and the show is ready to start."

This answer serves to illustrate something that often puzzles me. Brother Sprafke says he turns on the filament current and adjusts it to proper meter reading. Then he adjusts again.

Now I am all wet, or why the second adjustment? Every week there are many answers about which I cannot possibly be certain for the reason that they are so worded that their meaning is not altogether clear.

EIGHT ACADEMY PICTURES

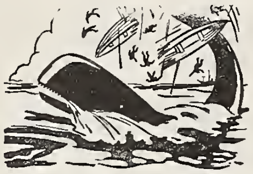
THRILL of the CENTURY

An emotional drama of strong, primitive people—the last of the whalers. Half way around the world went our expedition to film on actual location the greatest whale hunt ever photographed. A money scoop for smart showmen. Story by Richard Carroll, novelist and former editor of Liberty Magazine.



REVOLT of the ZOMBIES

A box-office sequel to the record-smashing United Artists' "White Zombie," made by same director, writers and producer. The story of a white witch-doctor who dooms all who come in contact with him. A ready market . . . the hundreds of thousands who saw its predecessor await this picture about a girl "neither dead nor alive, but who obeys his every wish." Story by Howard Higgin.

INTER-NATIONAL CRIME

Con Mills, playboy detective, gives Warren Drake, dramatist, the clues to an unsolved crime—Drake produces a play solving the mystery—after much screaming action, suspense and comedy, Mills wins Drake's girl—and captures the murderer. They'll storm the gates for this one, written by Mervin Lennox.

SLAVE SHIP

Today the slave market actually exists off the Gold Coast of Africa! A Sheik slaver falls for an American heiress—kidnaps her—makes her a slave. A spectacular and desperate escape from the lust-filled, blood-thirsty barbarians—on stolen Arabian horses—to the protection of a French gunboat—provides amazing thrill entertainment. What a show! Written by Garnett Weston, author of "White Zombie."

MURDER in CHINATOWN

Subtle — brutal — mysterious — the war of the tongs! Not since Lon Chaney has there been such intriguing characterization and scorching action, fraught with terrifying suspense. The spectacular to-the-death battle of the tongs, wherein hundreds of Chinese take part—will make them stand up and cheer. A box-office natural, by Ward Johnston.

MUTINY on the SUBMARINE

Modern pirates on a submarine! Kidnaping at sea! Red-blooded melodrama—fast, fiery, vivid action! With a rich girl as a pawn—a casket of jewels as the stake—hell breaks loose amongst the pirate submarine crew! The kind of a picture audiences pray for—and pay for. Story by Captain George Duffield.

SECRET of SCOTLAND YARD

He wants to die—but Death will never get him! Greatest novelty in pictures. A modern drama of the man with the secret of eternal life—who cannot be killed by any known device—whose passion is for virgins. Unlimited exploitation angles. Eternal youth will interest every cash customer. Garnett Weston is the author!

MILLIONS for DEFENSE

The first mobilization of the United States Army! Presumably a peace time maneuver but only the State Department and the General Staff know the Army must get there before an enemy fleet headed by a mad dictator can cripple and rape the Coast! Exploitation! Backed by the Army, Navy, American Legion, and all those interested in Preparedness—for Defense! Dramatic story by Lieut. William McFarlane.

NEWSREEL CENSORSHIP IN JAPAN LAUNCHES GOVERNMENT CONTROL

Picture Association Starts Its First Complete Survey of the Industry; Election Reform Slogans Inserted in All Films

by CHIKUSHI TANI
Tokyo Correspondent

Proposals to establish an organization to exercise control over the motion picture business in Japan in the interest of the state, laid before Japanese leaders by Home Minister Fumio Goto, have brought forth two concrete developments. They are:

A complete survey of the industry in Japan, the first of its kind, is being undertaken by the Motion Picture Association.

Methods of establishing a new system of censorship regulations over imported and exported motion pictures are being evolved. Censorship of newsreels was noted.

Election reform slogans and the emblem of the Rising Sun, the national flag of Japan, must be shown at the beginning of each reel of photoplays in general and on the newsreels.

Taking cognizance of a noticeably increased output of Japanese pictures in recent years, discussions have been advanced on the need of effecting national control of the motion picture and the industry.

Considered of prime importance is enactment of censorship regulations of all product. The Home Office is very eager to achieve these, but this question involves also the foreign, educational, war, navy, and finance offices. Present at a meeting of the Cinema Control Commission on July 23d were a number of noted governmental officials from these various offices.

Newsreel Censorship Voted

The Commission as a first step passed a resolution in favor of establishment of regulations on newsreel censorship.

Following this assembly, on August 3d the Home Office called in for conference representatives of 14 Japanese and foreign motion picture companies.

Director Karazawa of the Police Bureau, chairman of the meeting, explained the detail of the cinema control plan, and asked for their cooperation with the Government to attain its aim.

An arrangement was made to insert election reform slogans and the mark of the Rising Sun, the national flag of Japan, at the beginning of each reel of photoplays, starting August 15th, and on the newsreels, beginning August 10th. In foreign made pictures as well as in the Japanese product, "A Vote of Pure Heart," one of the popular slogans, is being inserted.

In so deciding to enlist the cooperation of producers in the clean election campaign to be waged until April of next year, the Government took a cue from the American propaganda methods which employed the motion picture to spread the gospel of the National Recovery Administration. It is the first venture for Japan in the field of making use of the screen for such purpose of national importance.

Extensive Survey Undertaken

Keeping pace with the Government plan of national cinema control, the Motion Picture Association also has launched an extensive survey of the industry in this country.

On July 22d, representatives of various film companies in Tokyo met to discuss practical methods of conducting the investigation.

The census will cover nearly the whole field of film activities: quantity of pictures, Japanese and foreign, played at each theatre, analysis of theatres as to sound equipment, number of seats, personnel, admissions, operating expenses and taxes.

The census also covers the amount of electric power consumed at each theatre, and even the hours of greatest attendance.

The objective of the census is to provide statistics as a starting point for determination of the type of federal control, as well as to serve all motion picture men with information.

The move has evoked great interest throughout the trade. Of course it is apparent that many long hours will be required before the census is completed.

Race for Foreign Product

The fight for theatre control between Ichizo Kobayashi and the Shochiku company in Tokyo is taking on a greater significance than as a competitive struggle between two groups. It has importance to the public as well, in a race for high standard product.

The positive policy of Kobayashi along the line of theatre expansion and efficient management apparently is destined to prove worthwhile also in the selection of outstanding pictures to be shown at his theatres.

In this light, it meant something important that he recently sent to America and European countries T. Hata, manager of the Nippon-Gekijo, because on the return of Hata to Tokyo it is reported that Kobayashi initiated his plan of importing films, mainly European product, direct from various producing companies of the West, and of having those imports distributed widely by P.C.L. (Photo Chemical Laboratory), a newly-risen film concern.

Meanwhile, the Schochiku Company was formulating plans to bring to its screens the greatest possible number of European pictures. Importation of the product, it is reported, will be taken in charge by Towa Shoji, a leading distributing company of European product.

Pictures from Europe have been in the ascendency in public interest of late. Released with great success in this country in the last 18 months have been such pictures as "Girl in Uniform," "Congress Dances," "Le Paquebot Tenacity," "Poil De Carotte," "Grand Jeu," "Leise Flehen Meine Lieder."

Fight for Theatre Control Between Kobayashi and Shochiku Circuits Brings Race for U. S. and European Product

Furthermore, Kobayashi apparently aims to import many American films direct from producing companies with the support of a capitalist whose name he is not divulging.

Film leaders in Tokyo are awaiting the next step in the fight for theatres and product.

Permanent Boston Theatre Started on Subscription

A permanent theatre in Boston for presentation of new plays and revivals with New York casts has been started on a subscription plan, with a nucleus of 5,000 subscribers, according to the sponsors of the plan.

The Majestic, closed after two unsuccessful film ventures, will probably be the site. Lawrence Robinson, formerly connected with Elmer Rice, is the managing director of the project.

Sitterly Opens Office
